 And slits the thin-spun life. 'But not the praise,' Phœbus replied, and touched my trembling ears :
 'Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
 Nor in the glittering foil
 Set off to the world, nor in broad rumour lies,
 But lives and spreads aloft by those pure eyes
 And perfect witness of all-judging Jove ;
 As he pronounces lastly on each deed,
 Of so much fame in heaven expect thy meed.'

O fountain Arethuse, and thou honoured flood,
Smooth-sliding Mincius, crowned with vocal reeds,
That strain I heard was of a higher mood.
But now my oat proceeds,
And listens to the Herald of the Sea,
That came in Neptune's plea.

He asked the waves, and asked the felon winds,
What hard mishap hath doomed this gentle swain?
And questioned every gust of rugged wings
That blows from off each beaked promontory.

They knew not of his story;
And sage Hippotades their answer brings,
That not a blast was from his dungeon strayed:
The air was calm, and on the level brine
Sleek Panope with all her sisters played.

It was that fatal and perfidious bark,
Built in the eclipse, and rigged with curses dark,
That sunk so low that sacred head of thine.

Next, Camus, reverend sire, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower inscribed with woe.

'Ah! who hath reft,' quoth he, 'my dearest pledge?'
Last came, and last did go,
The Pilot of the Galilean Lake;
Two massy keys he bore of metals twain
(The golden opes, the iron shuts amain).
He shook his mitred locks, and stern bespake:—
'How well could I have spared for thee, young swain,
Enow of such as, for their bellies' sake,
Creep, and intrude, and climb into the fold!
Of other care they little reckoning make
Than how to scramble at the shearers' feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest.
Blind mouths! that scarce themselves know how to hold
A sheep-hook, or have learnt aught else the least
That to the faithful herdman's art belongs!
What recks it them? What need they? They are sped;
And, when they list, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw;
The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed,
But, swoln with wind and the rank mist they draw,
Rot inwardly, and foul contagion spread;
Besides what the grim wolf with privy paw
Daily devours apace, and nothing said.
But that two-handed engine at the door
Stands ready to smite once, and smite no more.'

Return, Alpheus; the dread voice is past
That shrunk thy streams; return, Sicilian Muse,
And call the vales, and bid them hither cast
Their bells and flowerets of a thousand hues.
Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers use
Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks,
On whose fresh lap the swart star sparely looks,
Throw hither all your quaint enamelled eyes,
That on the green turf suck the honeyed showers,
And purple all the ground with vernal flowers.
Bring the rathe primrose that forsaken dies,
The tufted crow-toe, and pale jessamine,
The white pink, and the pansy freaked with jet,
The glowing violet,
The musk-rose, and the well-attired woodbine,
With cowslips wan that hang the pensive head,
And every flower that sad embroidery wears;
Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffadillies fill their cups with tears,

To strew the laureate hearse where Lycid lies.
For so, to interpose a little ease,
Let our frail thoughts dally with false surmise.
Ay me! whilst thee the shores and sounding seas
Wash far away, where'er thy bones are hurled;
Whether beyond the stormy Hebrides,
Where thou perhaps under the whelming tide
Visit'st the bottom of the monstrous world;
Or whether thou, to our moist vows denied,
Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old,
Where the great Vision of the guarded mount
Looks towards Namancos and Bayona's hold.
Look homeward, Angel, now, and melt with ruth:
And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth.

Weep no more, woeful shepherds, weep no more,
For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead,
Sunk though he be beneath the watery floor.
So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
And tricks his beams, and with new-spangled ore
Flames in the forehead of the morning sky:
So Lycidas sunk low, but mounted high,
Through the dear might of Him that walked the waves,
Where, other groves and other streams along,
With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves,
And hears the unexpressive nuptial song,
In the blest kingdoms meek of joy and love.
There entertain him all the Saints above,
In solemn troops, and sweet societies,
That sing, and singing in their glory move,
And wipe the tears for ever from his eyes.
Now, Lycidas, the shepherds weep no more;
Henceforth thou art the Genius of the shore,
In thy large recompense, and shalt be good
To all that wander in that perilous flood.

Thus sang the uncouth swain to the oaks and rills,
While the still morn went out with sandals grey:
He touched the tender stops of various quills,
With eager thought warbling his Doric lay:
And now the sun had stretched out all the hills,
And now was dropt into the western bay.
At last he rose, and twitched his mantle blue:
To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new.

When the Assault was intended to the City.

Captain or Colonel, or Knight in Arms,
Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize,
If deed of honour did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harms.
He can requite thee; for he knows the charms
That call fame on such gentle acts as these,
And he can spread thy name o'er lands and seas,
Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms.
Lift not thy spear against the Muses' bower:
The great Emathian conqueror bid spare
The house of Pindarus, when temple and tower
Went to the ground; and the repeated air
Of sad Electra's poet had the power
To save the Athenian walls from ruin bare.

Sonnet on his Blindness.

When I consider how my light is spent
Ere half my days in this dark world and wide,
And that one talent which is death to hide
Lodged with me useless, though my soul more bent

To serve therewith my Maker, and present
 My true account, lest He returning chide,
 'Doth God exact day-labour, light denied?'
 I fondly ask. But Patience, to prevent
 That murmur, soon replies, 'God doth not need
 Either man's work or his own gifts. Who best
 Bear his mild yoke, they serve him best. His state
 Is kingly: thousands at his bidding speed,
 And post o'er land and ocean without rest;
 They also serve who only stand and wait.'

On the late Massacre in Piedmont.

Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints, whose bones
 Lie scattered on the Alpine mountains cold;
 Even them who kept thy truth so pure of old,
 When all our fathers worshiped stocks and stones,
 Forget not: in thy book record their groans
 Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold
 Slain by the bloody Piemontese, that rolled
 Mother with infant down the rocks. Their moans
 The vales redoubled to the hills, and they
 To heaven. Their martyred blood and ashes sow
 O'er all the Italian fields, where still doth sway
 The triple Tyrant; that from these may grow
 A hundredfold, who, having learnt thy way,
 Early may fly the Babylonian woe.

Satan's Address to the Sun.

O thou that, with surpassing glory crowned,
 Look'st from thy sole dominion like the god
 Of this new World—at whose sight all the stars
 Hide their diminished heads—to thee I call,
 But with no friendly voice, and add thy name,
 O Sun, to tell thee how I hate thy beams,
 That bring to my remembrance from what state
 I fell, how glorious once above thy sphere,
 Till pride and worse ambition threw me down,
 Warring in Heaven against Heaven's matchless King!
 Ah, wherefore? He deserved no such return
 From me, whom he created what I was
 In that bright eminence, and with his good
 Upbraided none; nor was his service hard.
 What could be less than to afford him praise,
 The easiest recompense, and pay him thanks,
 How due? Yet all his good proved ill in me,
 And wrought but malice. Lifted up so high,
 I scorned subjection, and thought one step higher
 Would set me highest, and in a moment quit
 The debt immense of endless gratitude,
 So burdensome, still paying, still to owe;
 Forgetful what from him I still received;
 And understood not that a grateful mind
 By owing owes not, but still pays, at once
 Indebted and discharged—what burden then?
 Oh, had his powerful destiny ordained
 Me some inferior Angel, I had stood
 Then happy; no unbounded hope had raised
 Ambition. Yet why not? Some other Power
 As great might have aspired, and me, though mean,
 Drawn to his part. But other Powers as great Fell not, but stand unshaken, from within
 Or from without to all temptations armed!
 Hadst thou the same free will and power to stand?
 Thou hadst. Whom hast thou then, or what, to accuse,
 But Heaven's free love dealt equally to all?
 Be then his love accursed, since, love or hate,

To me alike it deals eternal woe.
 Nay, cursed be thou; since against his thy will Chose freely what it now so justly rues.
 Me miserable! which way shall I fly
 Infinite wrath and infinite despair?
 Which way I fly is Hell; myself am Hell;
 And, in the lowest deep, a lower deep
 Still threatening to devour me opens wide,
 To which the Hell I suffer seems a Heaven.
 O, then, at last relent! Is there no place
 Left for repentance, none for pardon left?
 None left but by submission; and that word
 Disdain forbids me, and my dread of shame
 Among the Spirits beneath, whom I seduced
 With other promises and other vaunts
 Than to submit, boasting I could subdue
 The Omnipotent. Ay me! they little know
 How dearly I abide that boast so vain,
 Under what torments inwardly I groan.
 While they adore me on the throne of Hell,
 With diadem and sceptre high advanced,
 The lower still I fall, only supreme
 In misery: such joy ambition finds!
 But say I could repent, and could obtain,
 By act of grace, my former state; how soon
 Would highth recal high thoughts, how soon unsay
 What feigned submission swore! Ease would recant
 Vows made in pain, as violent and void
 (For never can true reconciliation grow
 Where wounds of deadly hate have pierced so deep);
 Which would but lead me to a worse relapse
 And heavier fall: so should I purchase dear
 Short intermission, bought with double smart.
 This knows my Punisher; therefore as far
 From granting he, as I from begging, peace.
 All hope excluded thus, behold, instead
 Of us, outcast, exiled, his new delight,
 Mankind, created, and for him this World!
 So farewell hope, and, with hope, farewell fear,
 Farewell remorse! All good to me is lost;
 Evil, be thou my Good: by thee at least Divided empire with Heaven's King I hold,
 By thee, and more than half perhaps will reign;
 As Man ere long, and this new World, shall know.

(From Paradise Lost, Book iv. l. 32.)

Assembling of the Fallen Angels.

All these and more came flocking, but with looks Downcast and damp; yet such wherein appeared
 Obscure some glimpse of joy to have found their Chief:
 Not in despair, to have found themselves not lost
 In loss itself; which on his countenance cast
 Like doubtful hue. But he, his wonted pride
 Soon recollecting, with high words, that bore
 Semblance of worth, not substance, gently raised
 Their fainting courage, and dispelled their fears:
 Then straight commands that, at the warlike sound
 Of trumpets loud and clarions, be upreared
 His mighty standard. That proud honour claimed
 Azazel as his right, a Cherub tall:
 Who forthwith from the glittering staff unfurled
 The imperial ensign; which, full high advanced,
 Shone like a meteor streaming to the wind,
 With gems and golden lustre rich emblazed,
 Seraphic arms and trophies; all the while
 Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds:

At which the universal host up-sent
 A shout that tore Hell's concave, and beyond
 Frighted the reign of Chaos and old Night.
 All in a moment through the gloom were seen
 Ten thousand banners rise into the air,
 With orient colours waving : with them rose
 A forest huge of spears ; and thronging helms
 Appeared, and serried shields in thick array
 Of depth immeasurable. Anon they move
 In perfect phalanx to the Dorian mood
 Of flutes and soft recorders—such as raised
 To highth of noblest temper heroes old
 Arming to battle, and instead of rage
 Deliberated valour breathed, firm, and unmoved
 With dread of death to flight or foul retreat ;
 Nor wanting power to mitigate and swage
 With solemn touches troubled thoughts, and chase
 Anguish and doubt and fear and sorrow and pain
 From mortal or immortal minds. Thus they,
 Breathing united force with fixed thought,
 Moved on in silence to soft pipes that charmed
 Their painful steps o'er the burnt soil. And now
 Advanced in view they stand—a horrid front
 Of dreadful length and dazzling arms, in guise
 Of warriors old, with ordered spear and shield,
 Awaiting what command their mighty Chief
 Had to impose. . . . He, above the rest
 In shape and gesture proudly eminent,
 Stood like a tower. His form had yet not lost
 All her original brightness, nor appeared
 Less than Archangel ruined, and the excess
 Of glory obscured : as when the sun new-risen
 Looks through the horizontal misty air
 Shorn of his beams, or, from behind the moon,
 In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
 On half the nations, and with fear of change
 Perplexes monarchs. Darkened so, yet shone
 Above them all the Archangel : but his face
 Deep scars of thunder had intrenched, and care
 Sat on his faded cheek, but under brows
 Of dauntless courage, and considerate pride
 Waiting revenge. Cruel his eye, but cast
 Signs of remorse and passion, to behold
 The fellows of his crime, the followers rather (Far other once beheld in bliss), condemned
 For ever now to have their lot in pain—
 Millions of Spirits for his fault amerced
 Of Heaven, and from eternal splendours flung
 For his revolt—yet faithful how they stood,
 Their glory withered ; as, when heaven's fire
 Hath scathed the forest oaks or mountain pines,
 With singed top their stately growth, though bare,
 Stands on the blasted heath. He now prepared
 To speak ; whereat their doubled ranks they bend
 From wing to wing, and half enclose him round
 With all his peers : Attention held them mute.
 Thrice he assayed, and thrice, in spite of scorn,
 Tears, such as Angels weep, burst forth : at last Words interwove with sighs found out their way.

(From Paradise Lost, Book i. l. 522.)

The Garden of Eden.

So on he fares, and to the border comes
 Of Eden, where delicious Paradise,
 Now nearer, crowns with her enclosure green,
 As with a rural mound, the champaign head

Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
 With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild,
 Access denied ; and overhead up-grew
 Insuperable highth of loftiest shade,
 Cedar, and pine, and fir, and branching palm,
 A sylvan scene, and, as the ranks ascend
 Shade above shade, a woody theatre
 Of stateliest view. Yet higher than their tops
 The verdurous wall of Paradise up-sprung,
 Which to our general sire gave prospect large
 Into his nether empire neighbouring round.
 And higher than that wall a circling row
 Of goodliest trees, loaden with fairest fruit,
 Blossoms and fruits at once of golden hue,
 Appeared, with gay enamelled colours mixed ;
 On which the sun more glad impressed his beams
 Than in fair evening cloud, or humid bow,
 When God hath showered the earth : so lovely seemed That landskip. And of pure now purer air
 Meets his approach, and to the heart inspires
 Vernal delight and joy, able to drive
 All sadness but despair. Now gentle gales,
 Fanning their odoriferous wings, dispense
 Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole
 Those balmy spoils. As, when to them who sail
 Beyond the Cape of Hope, and now are past
 Mozambic, off at sea north-east winds blow
 Sabeian odours from the spicy shore
 Of Araby the Blest, with such delay
 Well pleased they slack their course, and many a league
 Cheered with the grateful smell old Ocean smiles.

(From Paradise Lost, Book vi. l. 131.)

Morning Hymn in Paradise.

'These are thy glorious works, Parent of good,
 Almighty ! thine this universal frame,
 Thus wondrous fair : Thyself how wondrous then !
 Unspeakable ! who sitt'st above these heavens
 To us invisible, or dimly seen
 In these thy lowest works ; yet these declare
 Thy goodness beyond thought, and power divine.
 Speak, ye who best can tell, ye Sons of Light,
 Angels—for ye behold him, and with songs
 And choral symphonies, day without night,
 Circle his throne rejoicing—ye in Heaven ;
 On Earth join, all ye creatures, to extol
 Him first, him last, him midst, and without end.
 Fairest of Stars, last in the train of Night,
 If better thou belong not to the Dawn,
 Sure pledge of day, that crown'st the smiling morn
 With thy bright circlet, praise him in thy sphere
 While day arises, that sweet hour of prime.
 Thou Sun, of this great World both eye and soul,
 Acknowledge him thy greater ; sound his praise
 In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
 And when high noon hast gained, and when thou fall'st.
 Moon, that now meet'st the orient Sun, now fliest,
 With the fixed Stars, fixed in their orb that flies ;
 And ye five other wandering Fires, that move
 In mystic dance, not without song, resound
 His praise who out of Darkness called up Light.
 Air, and ye Elements, the eldest birth
 Of Nature's womb, that in quaternion run
 Perpetual circle, multiform, and mix
 And nourish all things, let your ceaseless change
 Vary to our great Maker still new praise.

Ye Mists and Exhalations, that now rise
 From hill or steaming lake, dusky or gray,
 Till the sun paint your fleecy skirts with gold,
 In honour to the World's great Author rise ;
 Whether to deck with clouds the uncoloured sky,
 Or wet the thirsty earth with falling showers,
 Rising or falling, still advance his praise.
 His praise, ye Winds, that from four quarters blow,
 Breathe soft or loud ; and wave your tops, ye Pines,
 With every Plant, in sign of worship wave.
 Fountains, and ye, that warble, as ye flow,
 Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise.
 Join voices, all ye living Souls. Ye Birds,
 That, singing, up to Heaven-gate ascend,
 Bear on your wings and in your notes his praise.
 Ye that in waters glide, and ye that walk
 The earth, and stately tread, or lowly creep,
 Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
 To hill or valley, fountain, or fresh shade,
 Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise.
 Hail, universal Lord ! Be bounteous still
 To give us only good ; and, if the night
 Have gathered aught of evil, or concealed,
 Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark.'

So prayed they innocent, and to their thoughts
 Firm peace recovered soon, and wonted calm.
 On to their morning's rural work they haste,
 Among sweet dews and flowers, where any row
 Of fruit-trees, over-woody, reached too far
 Their pampered boughs, and needed hands to check
 Fruitless embraces : or they led the vine
 To wed her elm ; she, spoused, about him twines
 Her marriageable arms, and with her brings
 Her dower, the adopted clusters, to adorn
 His barren leaves.

(From Paradise Lost, Book v. l. 153.)

Evening in Paradise.

Now came still Evening on, and Twilight gray
 Had in her sober livery all things clad ;
 Silence accompanied ; for beast and bird,
 They to their grassy couch, these to their nests
 Were slunk, all but the wakeful nightingale.
 She all night long her amorous descant sung ;
 Silence was pleased. Now glowed the firmament
 With living sapphires ; Hesperus, that led
 The starry host, rode brightest, till the Moon,
 Rising in clouded majesty, at length
 Apparent queen, unveiled her peerless light,
 And o'er the dark her silver mantle threw ;
 When Adam thus to Eve :—' Fair consort, the hour
 Of night, and all things now retired to rest,
 Mind us of like repose ; since God hath set
 Labour and rest, as day and night, to men
 Successive, and the timely dew of sleep,
 Now falling with soft slumberous weight, inclines
 Our eye-lids. Other creatures all day long
 Rove idle, unemployed, and less need rest ;
 Man hath his daily work of body or mind
 Appointed, which declares his dignity,
 And the regard of Heaven on all his ways ;
 While other animals unactive range,
 And of their doings God takes no account.
 To-morrow, ere fresh morning streak the east
 With first approach of light, we must be risen,
 And at our pleasant labour, to reform

Yon flowery arbours, yonder alleys green,
 Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown,
 That mock our scant manuring, and require
 More hands than ours to lop their wanton growth.
 Those blossoms also, and those dropping gums,
 That lie bestrewn, unsightly and unsmooth,
 Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease.
 Meanwhile, as Nature wills, Night bids us rest.'

To whom thus Eve, with perfect beauty adorned :—
 'My author and disposer, what thou bidd'st
 Unargued I obey. So God ordains :
 God is thy law, thou mine : to know no more
 Is woman's happiest knowledge, and her praise.
 With thee conversing, I forget all time,
 All seasons, and their change ; all please alike.
 Sweet is the breath of Morn, her rising sweet,
 With charm of earliest birds ; pleasant the Sun,
 When first on this delightful land he spreads
 His orient beams, on herb, tree, fruit, and flower,
 Glistering with dew ; fragrant the fertile Earth
 After soft showers ; and sweet the coming-on
 Of grateful Evening mild ; then silent Night,
 With this her solemn bird, and this fair Moon,
 And these the gems of Heaven, her starry train :
 But neither breath of Morn, when she ascends
 With charm of earliest birds ; nor rising Sun
 On this delightful land ; nor herb, fruit, flower,
 Glistering with dew ; nor fragrance after showers ;
 Nor grateful Evening mild ; nor silent Night,
 With this her solemn bird ; nor walk by moon,
 Or glittering star-light, without thee is sweet.
 But wherefore all night long shine these ? for whom
 This glorious sight, when sleep hath shut all eyes ?'

To whom our general ancestor replied :—
 'Daughter of God and Man, accomplished Eve,
 Those have their course to finish round the Earth
 By morrow evening, and from land to land
 In order, though to nations yet unborn,
 Ministering light prepared, they set and rise ;
 Lest total Darkness should by night regain
 Her old possession, and extinguish life
 In nature and all things ; which these soft fires
 Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat
 Of various influence foment and warm,
 Temper or nourish, or in part shed down
 Their stellar virtue on all kinds that grow
 On Earth, made hereby apter to receive Perfection from the Sun's more potent ray.
 These, then, though unbeheld in deep of night,
 Shine not in vain. Nor think, though men were none,
 That Heaven would want spectators, God want praise.
 Millions of spiritual creatures walk the Earth
 Unseen, both when we wake and when we sleep :
 All these with ceaseless praise his works behold
 Both day and night. How often, from the steep
 Of echoing hill or thicket, have we heard
 Celestial voices to the midnight air,
 Sole, or responsive each to other's note,
 Singing their great Creator ! Oft in bands
 While they keep watch, or nightly rounding walk,
 With heavenly touch of instrumental sounds
 In full harmonic number joined, their songs
 Divide the night, and lift our thoughts to Heaven.'

Thus talking, hand in hand alone they passed
 On to their blissful bower. It was a place
 Chosen by the sovran Planter, when he framed

All things to Man's delightful use. The roof
Of thickest covert was inwoven shade,
Laurel and myrtle, and what higher grew
Of firm and fragrant leaf; on either side
Acanthus, and each odorous bushy shrub,
Fenced up the verdant wall; each beauteous flower,
Iris all hues, roses, and jessamine,
Reared high their flourished heads between, and wrought
Mosaic; under foot the violet,
Crocus, and hyacinth, with rich inlay
Broidered the ground, more coloured than with stone
Of costliest emblem. Other creature here,
Beast, bird, insect, or worm, durst enter none;
Such was their awe of Man. . . .

Thus at their shady lodge arrived, both stood,
Both turned, and under open sky adored
The God that made both Sky, Air, Earth, and Heaven,
Which they beheld, the Moon's resplendent globe,
And starry Pole:—'Thou also madest the Night,
Maker Omnipotent; and thou the Day,
Which we, in our appointed work employed,
Have finished, happy in our mutual help
And mutual love, the crown of all our bliss
Ordained by thee; and this delicious place,
For us too large, where thy abundance wants
Partakers, and uncropt falls to the ground.
But thou hast promised from us two a race
To fill the Earth, who shall with us extol
Thy goodness infinite, both when we wake,
And when we seek, as now, thy gift of sleep.'

(From Paradise Lost, Book iv. l. 598.)

Expulsion from Paradise.

He added not; for Adam, at the news
Heart-stroock, with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his senses bound; Eve, who unseen
Yet all had heard, with audible lament
Discovered soon the place of her retire:—

'O unexpected stroke, worse than of Death!
Must I thus leave thee, Paradise? thus leave
Thee, native soil? these happy walks and shades,
Fit haunt of Gods, where I had hope to spend,
Quiet, though sad, the respite of that day
That must be mortal to us both? O flowers,
That never will in other climate grow,
My early visitation, and my last
At even, which I bred up with tender hand
From the first opening bud, and gave ye names,
Who now shall rear ye to the Sun, or rank
Your tribes, and water from the ambrosial fount?
Thee, lastly, nuptial bower, by me adorned
With what to sight or smell was sweet, from thee
How shall I part, and whither wander down
Into a lower world, to this obscure
And wild? How shall we breathe in other air
Less pure, accustomed to immortal fruits?'

Whom thus the Angel interrupted mild:—
'Lament not, Eve, but patiently resign
What justly thou hast lost; nor set thy heart,
Thus over-fond, on that which is not thine.
Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes
Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound;
Where he abides, think there thy native soil.'

Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp
Recovering, and his scattered spirits returned,
To Michael thus his humble words addressed:—

'Celestial, whether among the Thrones, or named
Of them the highest—for such of shape may seem Prince above princes—gently hast thou told
Thy message, which might else in telling wound,
And in performing end us. What besides
Of sorrow, and dejection, and despair,
Our frailty can sustain, thy tidings bring—
Departure from this happy place, our sweet
Recess, and only consolation left
Familiar to our eyes; all places else
Inhospitable appear, and desolate,
Nor knowing us, nor known. And, if by prayer
Incessant I could hope to change the will
Of him who all things can, I would not cease
To weary him with my assiduous cries;
But prayer against his absolute decree
No more avails than breath against the wind,
Blown stifling back on him that breathes it forth:
Therefore to his great bidding I submit.
This most afflicts me—that, departing hence,
As from his face I shall be hid, deprived
His blessed countenance. Here I could frequent,
With worship, place by place where he voutsafed
Presence Divine, and to my sons relate,
"On this mount He appeared; under this tree
Stood visible; among these pines his voice
I heard; here with him at this fountain talked."
So many grateful altars I would rear
Of grassy turf, and pile up every stone
Of lustre from the brook, in memory
Or monument to ages, and thereon
Offer sweet-smelling gums, and fruits, and flowers.
In yonder nether world where shall I seek
His bright appearances, or footstep trace?
For, though I fled him angry, yet, recalled
To life prolonged and promised race, I now
Gladly behold though but his utmost skirts
Of glory, and far off his steps adore.' . . .

Now too nigh
The Archangel stood, and from the other hill
To their fixed station, all in bright array,
The Cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous, as evening mist
Risen from a river o'er the marish glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heel
Homeward returning. High in front advanced,
The brandished sword of God before them blazed,
Fierce as a comet; which with torrid heat,
And vapour as the Libyan air adust,
Began to parch that temperate clime; whereat
In either hand the hastening Angel caught
Our lingering parents, and to the eastern gate
Led them direct, and down the cliff as fast
To the subjected plain—then disappeared.
They, looking back, all the eastern side beheld
Of Paradise, so late their happy seat,
Waved over by that flaming brand; the gate
With dreadful faces thronged and fiery arms.
Some natural tears they dropped, but wiped them soon;
The world was all before them, where to choose
Their place of rest, and Providence their guide.
They, hand in hand, with wandering steps and slow,
Through Eden took their solitary way.

(From Paradise Lost, Book xi. l. 263; Book xii. l. 625.)

Satan's Survey of Greece.

Westward, much nearer by south-west ; behold
 Where on the Ægean shore a city stands,
 Built nobly, pure the air and light the soil—
 Athens, the eye of Greece, mother of arts
 And eloquence, native to famous wits
 Or hospitable, in her sweet recess,
 City or suburban, studious walks and shades.
 See there the olive-grove of Academe,
 Plato's retirement, where the Attic bird
 Trills her thick-warbled notes the summer long ;
 There, flowery hill, Hymettus, with the sound
 Of bees' industrious murmur, oft invites
 To studious musing ; there Ilissus rolls
 His whispering stream. Within the walls then view
 The schools of ancient sages—his who bred
 Great Alexander to subdue the world,
 Lyceum there ; and painted Stoa next.
 There thou shalt hear and learn the secret power
 Of harmony, in tones and numbers hit
 By voice or hand, and various-measured verse,
 Æolian charms and Dorian lyric odes,
 And his who gave them breath, but higher sung,
 Blind Melesigenes, thence Homer called,
 Whose poem Phœbus challenged for his own.
 Thence what the lofty grave Tragedians taught
 In chorus or iambic, teachers best
 Of moral prudence, with delight received
 In brief sententious precepts, while they treat
 Of fate, and chance, and change in human life,
 High actions and high passions best describing.
 Thence to the famous Orators repair,
 Those ancient whose resistless eloquence
 Wielded at will that fierce democracy,
 Shook the Arsenal, and fulminated over Greece
 To Macedon and Artaxerxes' throne.
 To sage Philosophy next lend thine ear,
 From heaven descended to the low-roofed house
 Of Socrates—see there his tenement—
 Whom, well inspired, the oracle pronounced
 Wisest of men ; from whose mouth issued forth
 Mellifluous streams, that watered all the schools
 Of Academics old and new, with those Surnamed Peripatetics, and the sect
 Epicurean, and the Stoic severe.
 These here revolve, or, as thou likest, at home,
 Till time mature thee to a kingdom's weight ;
 These rules will render thee a king complete
 Within thyself, much more with empire joined.

(From Paradise Regained, Book iv. l. 237.)

Milton was one of the first Latinists of his time, and the first English writer of Latin verse who could be named alongside of Buchanan. It is curious that two of the greatest British writers known to the Continent by their Latin works should both, the Scot and the Englishman alike, have been exponents of a doctrine as to kings, government, and peoples peculiarly abhorrent to all loyalists, royalists, and jure divino men wherever found. Milton's Latinity is illustrated not merely in his secretarial work, his Epistolæ Familiares, and his early Prolusiones, but in his Latin poems, the first and second Defensiones, and his Doctrina Christiana.

Milton's English prose style is lofty, vigorous, expressive, clear, and adorned with profuse and pregnant imagery, and his vocabulary is rich, varied, and effective, in the Saxon as well as in the Latin elements of it. His model was sonorous oratory ; 'the long winding sentence, propped on epithets and festooned with digressions, was the habitual vehicle of his meaning.' Hence, like other monuments of the age, even his best work shows undue fondness for the Latin idiom in the construction of sentences ; occasional paragraphs, like the commencement of the Areopagitica, read like a translation from the Latin. But the force and directness with which he sped his Saxon monosyllables made them at least as deadly as his sesquipedalian artillery. 'It is to be regretted,' said Lord Macaulay, 'that the prose writings of Milton should in our time be so little read. As compositions, they deserve the attention of every man who wishes to become acquainted with the full power of the English language. They abound with passages compared with which the finest declamations of Burke sink into insignificance. They are a perfect field of cloth of gold. The style is stiff with gorgeous embroidery. Not even in the earlier books of the Paradise Lost has he ever risen higher than in those parts of his controversial works in which his feelings, excited by conflict, find a vent in bursts of devotional and lyric rapture. It is, to borrow his own majestic language, "a sevenfold chorus of hallelujahs and harping symphonies."'

A translated extract from the Defensio Secunda has been given above at pages 544, 545. The following specimens of Milton's own English are taken from The Reason of Church Government (containing the reminiscences of his early projects), from the treatise Of Education, and from the Areopagitica:

I must say, therefore, that after I had, from my first years, by the ceaseless diligence and care of my father (whom God recompense !), been exercised to the tongues, and some sciences, as my age would suffer, by sundry masters and teachers, both at home and at the schools, it was found that whether aught was imposed me by them that had the overlooking, or betaken to of mine own choice in English, or other tongue, prosing or versing, but chiefly the latter, the style, by certain vital signs it had, was likely to live. But much latelier, in the private academies of Italy, whither I was favoured to resort, perceiving that some trifles which I had in memory, composed at under twenty or thereabout (for the manner is, that every one must give some proof of his wit and reading there), met with acceptance above what was looked for ; and other things which I had shifted, in scarcity of books and conveniences, to patch up among them, were received with written encomiums, which the Italian is not forward to bestow on men of this side the Alps ; I began thus far to assent both to them and divers of my friends here at home, and not less to an inward prompting, which now grew daily upon me, that by labour and intent study (which I take to be my portion in this life), joined with the strong propensity of nature, I might perhaps leave something so written to aftertimes as they should not willingly let it die. These thoughts at once possessed me, and these other, that if I were certain to write as men buy leases, for three lives and downward, there ought no regard be sooner had than to God's glory, by the honour and instruction of my country. For which cause, and not only for that I knew it would be hard to arrive at the second rank among the Latins, I applied myself to that resolution which Ariosto followed against the persuasions of Bembo, to fix all the industry and art I could unite to the adorning of my native tongue; not to make verbal curiosities the end—that were a toilsome vanity; but to be an interpreter and relater of the best and sagest things among mine own citizens throughout this island in the mother dialect. That what the greatest and choicest wits of Athens, Rome, or modern Italy, and those Hebrews of old did for their country, I, in my proportion, with this over and above, of being a Christian, might do for mine; not caring to be once named abroad, though perhaps I could attain to that, but content with these British islands as my world; whose fortune hath hitherto been, that if the Athenians, as some say, made their small deeds great and renowned by their eloquent writers, England hath had her noble achievements made small by the unskilful handling of monks and mechanics.

Time serves not now, and perhaps I might seem too profuse, to give any certain account of what the mind at home, in the spacious circuits of her musing, hath liberty to propose to herself, though of highest hope and hardest attempting. Whether that epic form, whereof the two poems of Homer, and those other two of Virgil and Tasso, are a diffuse, and the book of Job a brief model; or whether the rules of Aristotle herein are strictly to be kept, or nature to be followed, which in them that know art and use judgment is no transgression, but an enriching of art: and, lastly, what king or knight before the Conquest might be chosen, in whom to lay the pattern of a Christian hero. And as Tasso gave to a prince of Italy his choice, whether he would command him to write of Godfrey's expedition against the Infidels, or Belisarius against the Goths, or Charlemain against the Lombards; if to the instinct of nature and the emboldening of art aught may be trusted, and that there be nothing adverse in our climate, or the fate of this age, it haply would be no rashness, from an equal diligence and inclination, to present the like offer in our own ancient stories; or whether those dramatic constitutions wherein Sophocles and Euripides reign shall be found more doctrinal and exemplary to a nation. The Scripture also affords us a divine pastoral drama in the Song of Solomon, consisting of two persons and a double chorus, as Origen rightly judges; and the Apocalypse of St John is the majestic image of a high and stately tragedy, shutting up and intermingling her solemn scenes and acts with a seven-fold chorus of hallelujahs and harping symphonies: and this my opinion, the grave authority of Pareus, commenting that book, is sufficient to confirm. Or if occasion shall lead, to imitate those magnificent odes and hymns, wherein Pindarus and Callimachus are in most things worthy, some others in their frame judicious, in their matter most, and end faulty. But those frequent songs throughout the law and prophets beyond all these, not in their divine argument alone, but in the very critical art of composition, may be easily made appear over all the kinds of lyric poesy to be incomparable. These abilities, wheresoever they be found, are the inspired gift of God, rarely bestowed, but yet to some (though most abuse) in every nation: and are of power, besides the office of a pulpit, to inbreed and cherish in a great people the seeds of virtue and public civility, to allay the perturbations of the mind, and set the affections in right tune; to celebrate in glorious and lofty hymns the throne and equipage of God's almightiness, and what he works, and what he suffers to be wrought with high providence in his church; to sing victorious agonies of martyrs and saints, the deeds and triumphs of just and pious nations, doing valiantly through faith against the enemies of Christ; to deplore the general relapses of kingdoms and states from justice and God's true worship. Lastly, whatsoever in religion is holy and sublime, in virtue amiable or grave, whatsoever hath passion or admiration in all the changes of that which is called fortune from without, or the wily subtleties and reflexes of man's thoughts from within; all these things, with a solid and treatable smoothness, to paint out and describe. Teaching over the whole book of sanctity and virtue, through all the instances of example, with such delight to those, especially of soft and delicious temper, who will not so much as look upon Truth herself, unless they see her elegantly dressed; that whereas the paths of honesty and good life appear now rugged and difficult, though they be indeed easy and pleasant, they would then appear to all men both easy and pleasant, though they were rugged and difficult indeed. And what a benefit would this be to our youth and gentry may be soon guessed by what we know of the corruption and bane which they suck in daily from the writings and interludes of libidinous and ignorant poetasters, who having scarce ever heard of that which is the main consistence of a true poem, the choice of such persons as they ought to introduce, and what is moral and decent to each one, do for the most part lay up vicious principles in sweet pills, to be swallowed down, and make the taste of virtuous documents harsh and sour. But because the spirit of man cannot demean itself lively in this body without some repeating intermission of labour and serious things, it were happy for the commonwealth if our magistrates, as in those famous governments of old, would take into their care not only the deciding of our contentious law cases and brawls, but the managing of our public sports and festival pastimes, that they might be, not such as were authorised awhile since, the provocations of drunkenness and lust, but such as may inure and harden our bodies, by martial exercises, to all warlike skill and performances; and may civilise, adorn, and make discreet our minds, by the learned and affable meeting of frequent academies, and the procurement of wise and artful recitations, sweetened with eloquent and graceful enticements to the love and practice of justice, temperance, and fortitude; instructing and bettering the nation at all opportunities, that the call of wisdom and virtue may be heard everywhere, as Solomon saith: 'She crieth without, she uttereth her voice in the streets, in the top of high places, in the chief concourse, and in the openings of the gates.' Whether this may be not only in pulpits, but after another persuasive method, at set and solemn paneguries, in theatres, porches, or what other place or way may win most upon the people, to receive at once both recreation and instruction, let them in authority consult. The thing which I had to say, and those intentions which have lived within me ever since I could conceive myself anything worth to my country, I return to crave excuse, that urgent reason hath plucked from me, by an abortive and fore-dated discovery. And the accomplishment of them lies not but in a power above man's to promise; but that none hath by more studious ways endeavoured, and with more unwearied spirit that none shall, that I dare almost aver of myself, as far as life and free leisure will extend; and that the land had once enfranchised herself from this impertinent yoke of prelacy, under whose inquisitorial and tyrannical duncery no free and splendid wit can flourish. Neither do I think it shame to covenant with any knowing reader, that for some few years yet I may go on trust with him toward the payment of what I am now indebted, as being a work not to be raised from the heat of youth or the vapours of wine; like that which flows at waste from the pen of some vulgar amourist, or the trencher-fury of a rhyming parasite; nor to be obtained by the invocation of Dame Memory and her siren daughters; but by devout prayer to that eternal Spirit, who can enrich with all utterance and knowledge, and sends out his seraphim with the hallowed fire of his altar, to touch and purify the lips of whom he pleases. To this must be added industrious and select reading, steady observation, insight into all seemly and generous arts and affairs; till which in some measure be compassed, at mine own peril and cost, I refuse not to sustain this expectation from as many as are not loth to hazard so much credulity upon the best pledges that I can give them. Although it nothing content me to have disclosed thus much beforehand, but that I trust hereby to make it manifest with what small willingness I endure to interrupt the pursuit of no less hopes than these, and leave a calm and pleasing solitariness, fed with cheerful and confident thoughts, to embark in a troubled sea of noises and hoarse disputes; put from beholding the bright countenance of truth in the quiet and still air of delightful studies, to come into the dim reflection of hollow antiquities sold by the seeming bulk, and there be fain to club quotations with men whose learning and belief lies in marginal stuffings, who when they have, like good sumpters, laid you down their horse-loads of citations and fathers at your door, with a rhapsody of who and who were bishops here or there, you may take off their packsaddles, their day's work is done, and episcopacy, as they think, stoutly vindicated. Let any gentle apprehension that can distinguish learned pains from unlearned drudgery imagine what pleasure or profoundness can be in this, or what honour to deal against such adversaries. But were it the meanest under-service, if God by his secretary conscience enjoin it, it were sad for me if I should draw back; for me especially, now when all men offer their aid to help, ease, and lighten the difficult labours of the church, to whose service, by the intentions of my parents and friends, I was destined of a child, and in mine own resolutions: till coming to some maturity of years, and perceiving what tyranny had invaded the church, that he who would take orders must subscribe slave, and take an oath withal, which, unless he took with a conscience that would retch, he must either straight perjure, or split his faith; I thought it better to prefer a blameless silence before the sacred office of speaking, bought and begun with servitude and forswearing.

From the Tractate 'Of Education.'

And seeing every nation affords not experience and tradition enough for all kind of learning, therefore we are chiefly taught the languages of those people who have at any time been most industrious after wisdom; so that language is but the instrument conveying to us things useful to be known. And though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet, if he have not studied the solid things in them, as well as the words and lexicons, he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man as any yeoman or tradesman competently wise in his mother dialect only.

Hence appear the many mistakes which have made learning generally so unpleasing and so unsuccessful: first, we do amiss to spend seven or eight years merely in scraping together so much miserable Latin and Greek as might be learned otherwise easily and delightfully in one year. And that which casts our proficiency therein so much behind is our time lost partly in too oft idle vacancies given both to schools and universities; partly in a preposterous exaction, forcing the empty wits of children to compose themes, verses, and orations which are the acts of ripest judgment, and the final work of a head filled by long reading and observing, with elegant maxims and copious invention. These are not matters to be wrung from poor striplings, like blood out of the nose, or the plucking of untimely fruit; besides the ill habit which they get of wretched barbarising against the Latin and Greek idiom, with their untutored Anglicisms, odious to be read, yet not to be avoided without a well-continued and judicious conversing among pure authors digested, which they scarce taste: whereas, if after some preparatory grounds of speech by their certain forms got into memory, they were led to the praxis thereof in some chosen short book lessoned thoroughly to them, they might then forthwith proceed to learn the substance of good things and arts in due order, which would bring the whole language quickly into their power. This I take to be the most rational and most profitable way of learning languages, and whereby we may best hope to give account to God of our youth spent herein.

And for the usual method of teaching arts, I deem it to be an old error of universities, not yet well recovered from the scholastic grossness of barbarous ages, that instead of beginning with arts most easy (and those be such as are most obvious to the sense), they present their young unmatriculated novices at first coming with the most intellectual abstractions of logic and metaphysics, so that they having but newly left those grammatic flats and shallows where they stuck unreasonably to learn a few words with lamentable construction, and now on the sudden transported under another climate, to be tossed and turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy, do for the most part grow into hatred and contempt of learning, mocked and deluded all this while with ragged notions and babblements, while they expected worthy and delightful knowledge; till poverty or youthful years call them importunately their several ways, and hasten them, with the sway of friends, either to an ambitious and mercenary or ignorantly zealous divinity; some allured to the trade of law, grounding their purposes not on the prudent and heavenly contemplation of justice and equity, which was never taught them, but on the promising and pleasing thoughts of litigious terms, fat contentions, and flowing fees; others betake them to state affairs, with souls so unprincipled in virtue and true generous breeding, that flattery and courtships and tyrannous aphorisms appear to them the highest points of wisdom, instilling their barren hearts with a conscientious slavery, if, as I rather think, it be not feigned. Others, lastly, of a more delicious and airy spirit, retire themselves, knowing no better, to the enjoyments of ease and luxury, living out their days in feast and jollity; which indeed is the wisest and the safest course of all these, unless they were with more integrity undertaken. And these are the errors, and these are the fruits of misspending our prime youth at schools and universities as we do, either in learning mere words, or such things chiefly as were better unlearned.

I shall detain you now no longer in the demonstration of what we should not do, but straight conduct you to a hillside, where I will point you out the right path of a virtuous and noble education; laborious indeed at the first ascent, but else so smooth, so green, so full of goodly prospect and melodious sounds on every side, that the harp of Orpheus was not more charming. I doubt not but ye shall have more ado to drive our dullest and laziest youth, our stocks and stubs, from the infinite desire of such a happy nurture, than we have now to hale and drag our choicest and hopefulest wits to that asinine feast of sowthistles and brambles which is commonly set before them, as all the food and entertainment of their tenderest and most docible age.

I call therefore a complete and generous education, that which fits a man to perform justly, skilfully, and magnanimously all the offices, both private and public, of peace and war. And how all this may be done between twelve and one-and-twenty, less time than is now bestowed in pure trifling at grammar and sophistry, is to be thus ordered.

From the 'Areopagitica.'

I deny not but that it is of greatest concernment in the church and commonwealth to have a vigilant eye how books demean themselves as well as men; and thereafter to confine, imprison, and do sharpest justice on them as malefactors; for books are not absolutely dead things, but do contain a potency of life in them, to be as active as that soul was whose progeny they are; nay, they do preserve as in a vial the purest efficacy and extraction of that living intellect that bred them. I know they are as lively and as vigorously productive as those fabulous dragon's teeth; and being sown up and down, may chance to spring up armed men. And yet on the other hand unless wariness be used, as good almost kill a man as kill a good book: who kills a man kills a reasonable creature, God's image; but he who destroys a good book kills reason itself, kills the image of God, as it were, in the eye. Many a man lives a burden to the earth; but a good book is the precious life-blood of a master-spirit, embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life. It is true no age can restore a life, whereof perhaps there is no great loss; and revolutions of ages do not oft recover the loss of a rejected truth, for the want of which whole nations fare the worse. We should be wary, therefore, what persecution we raise against the living labours of public men, how we spill that seasoned life of man, preserved and stored up in books; since we see a kind of homicide may be thus committed, sometimes a martyrdom, and if it extend to the whole impression, a kind of massacre, whereof the execution ends not in the slaying of an elemental life, but strikes at that ethereal and fifth essence, the breath of reason itself, slays an immortality rather than a life. . . .

Good and evil, we know, in the field of this world grow up together almost inseparably; and the knowledge of good is so involved and interwoven with the knowledge of evil, and in so many cunning resemblances hardly to be discerned, that those confused seeds which were imposed on Psyche as an incessant labour to cull out and sort asunder were not more intermixed. It was from out the rind of one apple tasted, that the knowledge of good and evil, as two twins cleaving together, leaped forth into the world. And perhaps this is that doom which Adam fell into of knowing good and evil, that is to say of knowing good by evil. As therefore the state of man now is, what wisdom can there be to choose, what continence to forbear, without the knowledge of evil? He that can apprehend and consider vice, with all her baits and seeming pleasures, and yet abstain, and yet distinguish, and yet prefer that which is truly better, he is the true warfaring Christian. I cannot praise a fugitive and cloistered virtue, unexercised and unbreathed, that never sallies out and sees her adversary, but slinks out of the race where that immortal garland is to be run for, not without dust and heat. Assuredly we bring not innocence into the world, we bring impurity much rather: that which purifies us is trial, and trial is by what is contrary. That virtue, therefore, which is but a youngling in the contemplation of evil, and knows not the utmost that vice promises to her followers, and rejects it, is but a blank virtue, not a pure; her whiteness is but an excremental whiteness: which was the reason why our sage and serious poet, Spenser (whom I dare be known to think a better teacher than Scotus or Aquinas), describing true temperance under the person of Guion, brings him in with his Palmer through the cave of Mammon and the bower of earthly bliss, that he might see and know, and yet abstain. Since, therefore, the knowledge and survey of vice is in this world so necessary to the constituting of human virtue, and the scanning of error to the confirmation of truth, how can we more safely and with less danger scout into the regions of sin and falsity than by reading all manner of tractates and hearing all manner of reason? And this is the benefit which may be had of books promiscuously read. . . .

I lastly proceed from the no good it can do, to the manifest hurt it causes, in being first the greatest discouragement and affront that can be offered to learning and to learned men. It was the complaint and lamentation of prelates, upon every least breath of a motion to remove pluralities and distribute more equally church-revenues, that then all learning would be for ever dashed and discouraged. But as for that opinion, I never found cause to think that the tenth part of learning stood or fell with the clergy; nor could I ever but hold it for a sordid and unworthy speech of any churchman who had a competency left him. If therefore ye be loath to dishearten utterly and discontent, not the mercenary crew and false pretenders to learning, but the free and ingenuous sort of such as evidently were born to study and love learning for itself, not for lucre or any other end, but the service of God and of truth, and perhaps that lasting fame and perpetuity of praise which God and good men have consented shall be the reward in those whose published labours advance the good of mankind; then know that so far to distrust the judgment and the honesty of one who hath but a common repute in learning and never yet offended, as not to count him fit to print his mind without a tutor and examiner, lest he should drop a schism or something of corruption, is the greatest displeasure and indignity to a free and knowing spirit that can be put upon him. What advantage is it to be a man, over it is to be a boy at school, if we have only scaped the ferula to come under the fescue of an Imprimatur?—if serious and elaborate writings, as if they were no more than the theme of a grammar lad under his pedagogue, must not be uttered without the cursory eyes of a temporising and extemporising licenser? He who is not trusted with his own actions, his drift not being known to be evil, and standing to the hazard of law and penalty, has no great argument to think himself reputed in the commonwealth wherein he was born for other than a fool or a foreigner. When a man writes to the world, he summons up all his reason and deliberation to assist him; he searches, meditates, is industrious, and likely consults and confers with his judicious friends; after all which done, he takes himself to be informed in what he writes, as well as any that writ before him; if in this, the most consummate act of his fidelity and ripeness, no years, no industry, no former proof of his abilities can bring him to that state of maturity, as not to be still mistrusted and suspected unless he carry all his considerate diligence, all his midnight watchings and expense of Palladian oil, to the hasty view of an un-leisured licenser, perhaps much his younger, perhaps far his inferior in judgment, perhaps one who never knew the labour of book-writing; and if he be not repulsed or slighted, must appear in print like a puny with his guardian, and his censor's hand on the back of his title, to be his bail and surety that he is no idiot or seducer; it cannot be but a dishonour and derogation to the author, to the book, to the privilege and dignity of learning. . . .

And lest some should persuade ye, Lords and Commons, that these arguments of learned men's discouragement at this your order are mere flourishes and not real, I could recount what I have seen and heard in other countries, where this kind of inquisition tyrannises; when I have sat among their learned men (for that honour I had) and been counted happy to be born in such a place of philosophic freedom as they supposed England was, while themselves did nothing but bemoan the servile condition into which learning amongst them was brought; that this was it which had damped the glory of Italian wits; that nothing had been there written now these many years but flattery and fustian. There it was that I found and visited the famous Galileo, grown old, a prisoner to the Inquisition for thinking in astronomy otherwise than the Franciscan and Dominican licensers thought. And though I knew that England then was groaning loudest under the prelatical yoke, nevertheless I took it as a pledge of future happiness that other nations were so persuaded of her liberty. Yet was it beyond my hope that those worthies were then breathing in her air, who should be her leaders to such a deliverance as shall never be forgotten by any revolution of time that this world hath to finish. . . .

Methinks I see in my mind a noble and puissant nation rousing herself like a strong man after sleep, and shaking her invincible locks; methinks I see her as an eagle mewing her mighty youth, and kindling her undazzled eyes at the full mid-day beam; purging and unscaling her long-abused sight at the fountain itself of heavenly radiance; while the whole noise of timorous and flocking birds, with those also that love the twilight, flutter about amazed at what she means, and in their envious gabble would prognosticate a year of sects and schisms. . . .

Though all the winds of doctrine were let loose to play upon the earth, so Truth be in the field, we do injuriously by licensing and prohibiting to misdoubt her strength. Let her and Falsehood grapple; who ever knew Truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter? Her confuting is the best and surest suppressing. He who hears what praying there is for light and clear knowledge to be sent down among us, would think of other matters to be constituted beyond the discipline of Geneva, framed and fabricked already to our hands. Yet when the new light which we beg for shines in upon us, there be who envy and oppose, if it come not first in at their casements. What a collusion is this, whenas we are exhorted by the wise man to use diligence, 'to seek for wisdom as for hidden treasures,' early and late, that another order shall enjoin us to know nothing but by statute! When a man hath been labouring the hardest labour in the deep mines of knowledge, hath furnished out his findings in all their equipage, drawn forth his reasons as it were a battle ranged, scattered and defeated all objections in his way, calls out his adversary into the plain, offers him the advantage of wind and sun, if he please, only that he may try the matter by dint of argument; for his opponents then to skulk, to lay ambushments, to keep a narrow bridge of licensing where the challenger should pass, though it be valour enough in soldiership, is but weakness and cowardice in the wars of Truth. For who knows not that Truth is strong, next to the Almighty? She needs no policies, nor stratagems, nor licensings, to make her victorious; those are the shifts and the defences that error uses against her power; give her but room, and do not bind her when she sleeps.

The Reformation.

When I recall to mind at last, after so many dark ages wherein the huge overshadowing train of error had almost swept all the stars out of the firmament of the church, how the bright and blissful Reformation by Divine power strook through the black and settled night of ignorance and antichristian tyranny, methinks a sovereign and reviving joy must needs rush into the bosom of him that reads or hears, and the sweet odour of the returning Gospel imbathe his soul with the fragrancy of heaven. Then was the sacred Bible sought out of the dusty corners where profane falsehood and neglect had thrown it; the schools opened; divine and human learning raked out of the embers of forgotten tongues, the princes and cities trooping apace to the new-erected banner of salvation; the martyrs with the unresistible might of weakness shaking the powers of darkness, and scorning the fiery rage of the old red dragon.

Then amidst the hymns and hallelujahs of saints, some one may perhaps be heard offering at high strains in new and lofty measure to sing and celebrate thy divine mercies and marvellous judgments in this land throughout all ages; whereby this great and warlike nation, instructed and inured to the fervent and continual practice of truth and righteousness, and casting far from her the rags of her whole vices, may press on hard to that high and happy emulation to be found the soberest, wisest, and most Christian people at that day when thou, the eternal and shortly expected King, shalt open the clouds to judge the several kingdoms of the world, and distributing national honours and rewards to religious and just commonwealths, shalt put an end to all earthly tyrannies, proclaiming thy universal and mild monarchy through heaven and earth; where they undoubtedly that by their labours, counsels, and prayers have been earnest for the common good of religion and their country, shall receive above the inferior orders of the blessed, the regal addition of principalities, legions, and thrones into their glorious titles, and in supereminence of beatific vision, progressing the dateless and irrevoluble circle of eternity, shall clasp inseparable hands with joy and bliss, in overmeasure for ever.

But they contrary that by the impairing and diminution of the true faith, the distresses and servitude of their country, aspire to high dignity, rule, and promotion here, after a shameful end in this life (which God grant them), shall be thrown down eternally into the darkest and deepest gulf of hell, where under the despiteful control, the trample and spurn of all the other damned that in the anguish of their torture shall have no other ease than to exercise a raving and bestial tyranny over them as their slaves and negroes, they shall remain in that plight for ever, the basest, the lowermost, the most dejected, most underfoot, and down-trodden vassals of perdition.

(From Of Reformation in England.)

Truth.

Truth, indeed, came once into the world with her Divine Master, and was a perfect shape, most glorious to look on; but when he ascended and his apostles after him were laid asleep, then straight arose a wicked race of deceivers, who, as that story goes of the Egyptian Typhon with his conspirators, how they dealt with the god Osiris, took the virgin Truth, hewed her lovely form into a thousand pieces, and scattered them to the four winds. From that time ever since the sad friends of Truth, such as durst appear, imitating the careful search that Isis made for the mangled body of Osiris, went up and down gathering up limb by limb still as they could find them. We have not yet found them all, Lords and Commons! nor ever shall do till her Master's second coming; he shall bring together every joint and member, and mould them into an immortal feature of loveliness and perfection.

(From Areopagitica.)

Of the Roman Power in Britain.

Thus expired this great empire of the Romans; first in Britain, soon after in Italy itself; having borne chief sway in this island (though never thoroughly subdued, or all at once in subjection) if we reckon from the coming in of Julius to the taking of Rome by Alaric, in which year Honorius wrote those letters of discharge into Britain, the space of four hundred and sixty-two years. And with the empire fell also what before in this western world was chiefly Roman—learning, valour, eloquence, history, civility, and even language itself—all these together, as it were with equal pace, diminishing and decaying. Henceforth we are to steer by another sort of authors, near enough to the times they write, as in their own country, if that would serve, in time not much belated, some of equal age, in expression barbarous; and to say how judicious I suspend awhile. This we must expect; in civil matters to find them dubious relaters, and still to the best advantage of what they term Mother Church, meaning indeed themselves; in most other matters of religion blind, astonished, and strook with superstition as with a planet; in one word, monks. Yet these guides, where can be had no better, must be followed; in gross it may be true enough; in circumstance each man as his judgment gives him may reserve his faith or bestow it.

(From History of England.)

From the beginning the reception of Milton in France was hesitating, doubtful, and fluctuating. Voltaire in some measure felt the grandeur of Paradise Lost, and translated some of it, rather freely. But he was naturally unable to appreciate Milton: Pococurante in Candide probably only exaggerates Voltaire's own opinion when he refers to Paradise Lost as an 'obscure, eccentric, and disgusting poem,' and speaks of Milton as 'a barbarian who constructed a long commentary on the book of Genesis in harsh verse.' Certainly this view was not confined to Voltaire's Pococurante, though the second French translator of the Paradise Lost was the son of the great Racine. But after the Revolution Milton was made a hero. The Romanticists enrolled him amongst the greatest of poets. The translation by the venerable Jacques Delille was well received though utterly feeble; Chateaubriand, an enthusiastic admirer, produced an impossible attempt at a literal translation; a less unsatisfactory rendering appeared in 1838. Taine's elaborate appreciation again attracted interest in France to Milton; and Sainte-Beuve gave a wider acceptance to Taine's estimate of 'England's most splendid and most complex poetic genius.' 'Vast knowledge, close logic, and grand passion; these are his marks.' 'Milton's landscapes are a school of virtue.' In the twentieth century M. Denis Saurat directed his fellow-countrymen's attention to Milton as a thinker and philosopher.

In Germany, as might have been expected, Milton's reception was friendlier from the first, though there too he found unsympathetic critics; Paradise Lost gave a great impulse to German poetry, and like and dislike of Milton were for long the notes of the two great German critical schools. Paradise Lost was twice translated into German in the seventeenth century, three times in the eighteenth century, and no less than six times in the nineteenth. Gottsched and the Leipzig school advocated in the early eighteenth century a humble adherence to French standards of taste, an almost slavish imitation of French models; Bodmer and the Zurich or Swiss school stood up for Nature, for poetic power and depth rather than formal correctness and elegance, for religious subjects as the greatest, for rhymelessness and blank verse, and for Milton. Bodmer was himself one of the translators of Paradise Lost (1732); and on the whole Bodmer and the Swiss school triumphed in a controversy somewhat analogous to that of Classicism and Romanticism in the following century, a controversy that in a way foreshadowed the great literary struggle at the close of the eighteenth and the early nineteenth centuries. And the triumph of the Swiss school prepared the way for the 'seraphic school' and for Klopstock, and secured the enthusiastic welcome given in Germany to the 'German Milton.' But except in the first flush of that enthusiasm, even German critics agreed that Klopstock at his best never rises to Milton's height, and that the Messias stands on an altogether lower plane, both of thought and expression. Herder and Lessing, it should be added, were fully conscious of Milton's poetic greatness.

Gottsched, in defence of his thesis, eagerly welcomed the unfavourable comments made in England—some of them by Milton's embittered political enemies, who saw in the poet mainly the hateful defender of the king's assassins. Gottsched imported into Germany Lauder's charge against Milton of having shamelessly plagiarised from various modern writers of Latin verse.

William Lauder, a wooden-legged Edinburgh graduate, a competent Latinist but an unsuccessful candidate for scholastic posts, settled in London as a literary hack. In 1747, in the Gentleman's Magazine, he made his famous charge against Milton, alleging Paradise Lost to be largely composed of translations from the Adamus Exsul of Grotius; the Poemata Sacra (1633) of Ramsay, an Edinburgh minister; from Masenius, Staphorstius, Taubmann, and other even less-known authors; finally (1753), he extended the list of authors whom Milton had plundered to ninety-seven! But long ere his frenzy rose so high, Lauder's friends, including Samuel Johnson, had been convinced that the passages he cited from these authors were, very many of them at least, not in the actual works named, which had been fraudulently garbled for his own purposes by the malevolent critic. Lauder had himself—as he ultimately confessed to Johnson—foisted into the quotations given as from the authors named passages which he had copied verbatim from William Hog's Latin version of Paradise Lost (published 1690). Lauder died in 1771.

On the other hand, it is perfectly known and recognised that Milton, an omnivorous reader, was influenced to some extent both in idea and expression by poetic predecessors, as well as by commentators on Scripture and systematic theologians; yet the comparisons of parallel passages only serve, on the whole, to show Milton's vast superiority. Bishop Ponet's translation (1549) of a Latin tragedy (no longer extant) by the Italian refugee Ochino seems to have left its mark on Milton's memory; there are obvious parallels noted by Dunster (1800) and others between Milton and Sylvester's translation of Du Bartas (see above at Sylvester, page 346); Gosse (1879) and Edmundson insisted on Milton's debt to the Dutch Vondel's Latin play Lucifer (1654), and so too the German critic Aug. Müller (1891). But none of the passages cited in the least diminish Milton's credit as a great poet, great both in creation and in expression. Nor would it prove Milton less original if the ingenious suggestion were true that the debates in Heaven reflect Milton's knowledge of actual debates in the Long Parliament or the Westminster Assembly; or that Belial may possibly be an uncomplimentary sketch of Sir Harry Vane, or some other of the contemporary personages whom the poet distrusted.

Probably no English author but Shakespeare has had accorded to him in as full measure as Milton the homage of constant quotation—often by the vulgar little read in poetry and all-unconscious whence their pet phrases come. How constantly does one hear cited not merely short passages or parts of passages like :

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise (That last infirmity of noble minds)
To scorn delights and live laborious days ;

but single lines or fragments such as 'Peace hath her victories not less renowned than war ;' 'Better to reign in hell than serve in heaven ;' 'The mind can make a heaven of hell, a hell of heaven ;' 'More is meant than meets the ear ;' 'Not to know me argues yourself unknown ;' 'Hence, loathed melancholy ;' 'Trip on the light fantastic toe ;' 'Death the gate of life ;' 'Laughter holding both his sides ;' 'Fallen on evil days ;' 'Smoothing the rugged brow of night ;' 'The world was all before them ;' 'Fit audience find though few ;' 'To temper justice with mercy ;' 'To make darkness visible ;' 'Heaven in her eye ;' 'Confusion worse confounded ;' 'To-morrow to fresh woods and pastures new.' Many of these phrases have passed from Milton into current speech; some appear in curious combinations and permutations, and, like the last, are persistently misquoted; and some have through too frequent citation in unsuitable connections been degraded into a kind of irritating slang.

Milton's nephew, Edward Phillips, wrote a Life, as did Toland, Symonds, Mitford, and Todd; see The Early Lives of Milton, by Helen Darbishire (1932); but all were superseded by Masson's Life (6 vols. 1859–80; index vol. 1894), a stupendous monument of learned industry and scholarly research. In spite of its prejudices, Dr Samuel Johnson's sketch retains its literary interest. There are short Lives by Mark Pattison (1880; 1925) and Garnett (1889), and studies by W. P. Trent (1899), Raleigh (1900), Williamson (1905), Bailey (1915), Tillyard (1930, 1938), and by Saintsbury in the Cambridge History of Literature. See also A. Stern's Milton und Seine Zeit (2 vols. 1878); Von Treitschke's essay (1886); Dowden's Puritan and Anglican (1901); Robert Bridges's treatise on Milton's prosody (1893; 1921); Sampson's Studies in Milton (1914); Liljegren's (1919); Havens's Influence of Milton on English Poetry (1922); and D. Saurat's Milton, Man and Thinker (1924). Modern editions of Milton's poems are those of Masson (3 vols. 1874; new ed. 1890); Wright (1903); Beeching (1900; 1904); Nonesuch Press (with illustrations by Blake; 2 vols. 1926); Grierson (1925 et seq.); Smart (Sonnets, 1921); Patterson (Works, 1931 et seq.). Earlier editions were the famous one by Bentley (1732), and those by Boydell (1794), Todd (1801), Sir E. Brydges (1835), and James Montgomery (1843). Bradshaw's Aldine edition appeared in 1697. There have been editions of the prose works in 1697, by Toland (1698; 1738; 1753), Symmons (1806), Fletcher (1833), Mitford (1851), and St John (Bohn, 4 vols. 1848-53). Macaulay's criticism in the Essays is characteristically brilliant. In 1690-94 Hog (Hogæus) rendered most of Milton's poems into Latin; and there are Latin versions of Paradise Lost by Joseph Trapp (1741) and William Dobson (1750). The English translation of the first Defensio usually cited is that by Joseph Washington (about 1690); of the second, that by Dr Fellows (1806); and there is another by Archdeacon Wraugham (1816). G. Jenny wrote (1890) on the influence of Milton on German literature in the eighteenth century. The Latin prose romance of Nova Solyma, first published in 1648, was reprinted, with an elaborate argument for Milton's authorship, by Walter Begley in 1902; but the attribution was by no means generally admitted. See the Topical Bibliography (1916) by E. N. S. Thompson.

Andrew Marvell was born in the village of Winestead, in the south-east angle of Yorkshire, on 31st March 1621. His father, also Andrew Marvell (c. 1586-1641), was rector of Winestead (1614-24), and then till his death Town's Preacher (or Lecturer of Holy Trinity Church) and Master of God's House (an almshouse commonly called the Charterhouse) at Hull—not master of the Grammar School there as stated by the early editors. Andrew Marvell senior was drowned in crossing the Humber. Having a presentiment of danger, according to a romantic story, he threw his cane ashore from the boat, saying to the spectators that in case he should perish the cane was to be given to his son, with the injunction that he should remember his father. His fears were verified; the boat went down in the storm. The mother of a young lady whom he was escorting, and who shared his fate, provided for the drowned minister's son—so the legend runs—and left him a fortune. (See H. M. Margoliouth and Pierre Legouis in the Modern Language Review, 1922-23, on this and other details of Marvell's life.) Young Marvell studied in 1633-41 at Trinity College, Cambridge, and then travelled for four years in Holland, France, Italy, and Spain. A letter from Milton to Secretary Bradshaw was in 1823 discovered in the State-Paper Office, in which the poet recommends Marvell as a person well fitted to assist himself in his office of Latin secretary, he being a good scholar and lately engaged by Lord Fairfax to give some instruction in the languages to his daughter. The letter is dated 21st February 1653. Marvell, however, was not engaged as Milton's assistant till 1657; meanwhile he was tutor at Eton to a ward of Cromwell's, and there got to know John Hales. In January 1659 he took his seat in Richard Cromwell's Parliament as member for Hull. He was not, like Waller, an eloquent speaker, but his consistency and integrity made him highly esteemed and respected. He maintained a close correspondence with his constituents, and his letters fill four hundred printed pages. His constituents, in return, occasionally sent him a stout cask of ale; and he was one of the last paid members, receiving in session 6s. 8d. per diem. In 1663-65 he went as a secretary of embassy to Russia, Sweden, and Denmark. Charles II. delighted in his society, and believing, like Sir Robert Walpole, that every man had his price, he sent Lord Danby, his treasurer, to wait upon Marvell, with an offer of a place at court and an immediate present of a thousand pounds. The inflexible member resisted his offers, and it is said humorously illustrated his independence by calling his servant to witness that he had dined for three days successively on a shoulder of mutton. The story adds—but the whole seems highly improbable—that when the treasurer was gone Marvell was forced to send to a friend to borrow a guinea. The patriot preserved his integrity to the last, and satirised the profligacy and arbitrary measures of the court with much wit and pungency. He died about 10th August 1678, at the time of the Popish Plot, not without suspicion of poison, but really the victim of a tertian ague, unskilfully treated by an ignorant, obstinate doctor. The town of Hull voted

ANDREW MARVELL.

From the Picture in the National Portrait Gallery.

£50 to erect a monument to Marvell's memory, but the court interfered and forbade the votive tribute.

Marvell's prose writings were exceedingly popular in their day, but, written for temporary purposes, they have mostly gone out of date with the events that produced them. In 1672-73 he attacked Dr (afterwards Bishop) Parker in a piece entitled The Rehearsal Transposed, in which he vindicates the fair fame of Milton, who, he says, 'was and is a man of as great learning and sharpness of wit as any man.' This controversy has won him a part as interlocutor in one of the most vigorous of Landor's Imaginary Conversations, where he is made to slay the Bishop over again, and to say far finer things about Milton than he had said in his own works. One of Marvell's treatises, An Account of the Growth of Popery and Arbitrary Government in England (1677), was considered so formidable that a reward was offered for the discovery of the author and printer. As in the case of Milton and other Puritans, the energy and independence of Marvell in theological controversy verged upon freethinking and rationalism. A Short Historical Essay concerning General Councils, appended to one of his controversial tracts, is so free in its criticism of the mode of securing agreement at the Council of Nice that it looks very like a polemic against the dogmas there formulated and so forced on the Christian Church. And one is not surprised to find that this essay was republished in the interests of the eighteenth-century Deists. Ample evidence of that vein of sportive humour and raillery on national manners and absurdities, afterwards so effectively employed by Addison, Steele, Arbuthnot, and Swift, may be found in Marvell. He wrote with great liveliness, point, and vigour, though he was often coarse and personal. His poetry was, in his own time, an embellishment to his character of patriot and controversialist rather than a substantive ground of honour and distinction; yet even Sainte-Beuve (whose attention was called to him by Matthew Arnold) greeted in him a worthy though not co-equal rival of Milton, a more martial and less purely Christian champion of the same Christian and patriotic English renaissance. Only a lovable man could have written his verses on The Emigrants in the Bermudas. His poem on The Nymph Complaining for the Death of her Fawn is a triumph of grace and pathos. 'Music the mosaic of the air,' from his Music's Empire, illustrates a tendency to occasional conceits; 'Only human eyes can weep,' from Eyes and Tears, shows suggestive (if not strictly accurate) observation and phrasing. A different aspect of his genius, recalling the frank and half-pagan sensuousness of another party and an earlier age than his own, is seen in the lines To his Coy Mistress, and in those entitled The Garden. The former, perhaps his very finest verses, are too much like some of Donne's warmer amorettes for quotation in full; yet this specimen of them must at least be quoted:

But at my back I always hear
Time's wingèd chariot hurrying near,
And yonder all before us lie
Deserts of vast eternity.

The luscious stanzas on The Garden—a superior English rendering of a Latin exercise of Marvell's own—are not extravagantly praised by Palgrave as 'a test of any reader's insight into the most poetical aspects of poetry,' although the affinity which they display is not so much with Shelley's airy raptures as with the luxuriant fancies of Keats.

The Emigrants in the Bermudas.
Where the remote Bermudas ride
In the ocean's bosom unespied,
From a small boat that rowed along,
The listening winds received this song:
'What should we do but sing his praise
That led us through the watery maze

Unto an isle so long unknown,
And yet far kinder than our own?
Where he the huge sea-monsters wracks,
That lift the deep upon their backs;
He lands us on a grassy stage,
Safe from the storms and prelates' rage.
He gave us this eternal spring
Which here enamels everything,
And sends the fowls to us in care,
On daily visits thro' the air.
He hangs in shades the orange bright,
Like golden lamps in a green night,
And does in the pomegranates close
Jewels more rich than Ormus shews.
He makes the figs our mouths to meet,
And throws the melons at our feet.
But apples, plants of such a price,
No tree could ever bear them twice!
With cedars chosen by his hand
From Lebanon he stores the land;
And makes the hollow seas that roar,
Proclaim the ambergrease on shore.
He cast (of which we rather boast)
The Gospel's pearl upon our coast;
And in these rocks for us did frame
A temple where to sound his name.
O let our voice his praise exalt,
Till it arrive at heaven's vault,
Which then perhaps rebounding may
Echo beyond the Mexique bay.'
Thus sang they in the English boat
An holy and a chearful note,
And all the way, to guide their chime,
With falling oars they kept the time.

The Nymph Complaining for the Death of her Fawn.

The wanton troopers riding by
Have shot my fawn, and it will die.
Ungentle men! They cannot thrive
Who killed thee. Thou ne'er didst, alive,
Them any harm; alas! nor could
Thy death yet do them any good.
I'm sure I never wished them ill,
Nor do I for all this, nor will:
But, if my simple prayers may yet
Prevail with Heaven to forget
Thy murder, I will join my tears
Rather than fail. But O my fears!
It cannot die so. Heaven's King
Keeps register of every thing,
And nothing may we use in vain;
Even beasts must be with justice slain;
Else men are made their deodands.
Though they should wash their guilty hands
In this warm life-blood, which doth part
From thine, and wound me to the heart,
Yet could they not be clean; their stain
Is dyed in such a purple grain.
There is not such another in
The world to offer for their sin.

Inconstant Sylvio, when yet
I had not found him counterfeit,
One morning, I remember well,
Tied in this silver chain and bell,

Gave it to me : nay, and I know
 What he said then, I'm sure I do.
 Said he : 'Look how your huntsman here
 Hath taught a fawn to hunt his deer.'
 But Sylvio soon had me beguiled :
 This waxed tame, while he grew wild,
 And quite regardless of my smart,
 Left me his fawn, but took his heart.

Thenceforth I set myself to play
 My solitary time away
 With this ; and very well content
 Could so mine idle life have spent ;
 For it was full of sport, and light
 Of foot and heart, and did invite
 Me to its game : it seemed to bless
 Itself in me ; how could I less Than love it ? Oh, I cannot be Unkind to a beast that loveth me !

Had it lived long, I do not know
 Whether it too might have done so
 As Sylvio did ; his gifts might be Perhaps as false, or more, than he.
 But I am sure, for aught that I
 Could in so short a time espy,
 Thy love was far more better than
 The love of false and cruel man.

With sweetest milk and sugar first
 I it at mine own fingers nursed ;
 And as it grew so every day,
 It waxed more white and sweet than they.
 It had so sweet a breath ! and oft
 I blushed to see its foot more soft,
 And white, shall I say than my hand ?
 Nay, any lady's of the land !

It was a wondrous thing how fleet
 'Twas on those little silver feet.
 With what a pretty skipping grace
 It oft would challenge me the race ;
 And when 't had left me far away,
 'Twould stay, and run again, and stay ;
 For it was nimbler much than hinds,
 And trod as if on the four winds.

I have a garden of my own,
 But so with roses overgrown,
 And lilies, that you would it guess
 To be a little wilderness ;
 And all the spring-time of the year
 It only loved to be there.
 Among the beds of lilies I
 Have sought it oft, where it should lie ;
 Yet could not, till itself would rise,
 Find it, although before mine eyes ;
 For in the flaxen lilies' shade,
 It like a bank of lilies laid.
 Upon the roses it would feed,
 Until its lips even seemed to bleed ;
 And then to me 'twould boldly trip,
 And print those roses on my lip.
 But all its chief delight was still
 On roses thus itself to fill ;
 And its pure virgin limbs to fold
 In whitest sheets of lilies cold.
 Had it lived long, it would have been Lilies without, roses within.

O help ! O help ! I see it faint
 And die as calmly as a saint !
 See how it weeps ! The tears do come
 Sad, slowly, dropping like a gum.
 So weeps the wounded balsam ; so
 The holy frankincense doth flow ;
 The brotherless Heliades
 Melt in such amber tears as these. . . .

From 'A Poem upon the Death of His Late Highness, the Lord Protector.'

He without noise still travelled to his end,
 As silent suns to meet the night descend ;
 The stars that for him fought had only power
 Left to determine now his fatal hour,
 Which, since they might not hinder, yet they cast
 To choose it worthy of his glories past.
 No part of time but bare his mark away
 Of honour—all the year was Cromwell's day !
 But this of all the most auspicious found,
 Twice had in open field him victor crowned,
 When up the armed mountains of Dunbar
 He marched, and through deep Severn, ending war :
 What day should him eternize but the same
 That had before immortalized his name ?
 That so whome'er would at his death have joyed
 In their own griefs might find themselves employed,
 But those that sadly his departure grieved,
 Yet joyed, remembering what he once achieved.
 And the last minute his victorious ghost
 Gave chase to Ligny on the Belgic coast :
 Here ended all his mortal toils ; he laid
 And slept in peace under the laurel shade.

I saw him dead : a leaden slumber lies,
 And mortal sleep, over those wakeful eyes ;
 Those gentle rays under the lids were fled,
 Which through his looks that piercing sweetness shed ;
 That port, which so majestic was and strong,
 Loose, and deprived of vigour, stretched along ;
 All withered, all discoloured, pale and wan,
 How much another thing, no more that man !
 O human glory vain ! O death ! O wings !
 O worthless world ! O transitory things !
 Yet dwelt that greatness in his shape decayed,
 That still, though dead, greater than death, he laid,
 And in his altered face you something feign
 That threatens Death he yet will live again !

The Character of Holland.

[A satire on Holland as supporting the cause of the pretender
 Charles II., then an exile there.]

Holland, that scarce deserves the name of land,
 As but the off-scouring of the British sand,
 And so much earth as was contributed
 By English pilots when they heaved the lead ;
 Or what by the ocean's slow alluvion fell,
 Of shipwrecked cockle and the muscle-shell ;
 This indigested vomit of the sea
 Fell to the Dutch by just propriety.
 Glad then, as miners who have found the ore,
 They, with mad labour, fished the land to shore :
 And dived as desperately for each piece
 Of earth as if 't had been of ambergrease ;
 Collecting anxiously small loads of clay,
 Less than what building swallows bear away ;

Or than those pills which sordid beetles roll,
 Transfusing into them their dunghill soul.
 How did they rivet, with gigantic piles,
 Thorough the centre their new-catched miles;
 And to the stake a struggling country bound,
 Where barking waves still bait the forced ground;
 Building their watery Babel far more high
 To reach the sea, than those to scale the sky.
 Yet still his claim the injured ocean laid,
 And oft at leap-frog o'er their steeples played;
 As if on purpose it on land had come
 To shew them what's their mare liberum.
 A daily deluge over them does boil;
 The earth and water play at level-coil.¹
 The fish oft-times the burgher dispossessed,
 And sat, not as a meat, but as a guest;
 And oft the Tritons and the sea-nymphs saw
 Whole shoals of Dutch served up for cabillau;²
 Or, as they over the new level ranged,
 For pickled herring, pickled heeren³ changed.
 Nature, it seemed, ashamed of her mistake,
 Would throw their land away at duck and drake,
 Therefore necessity, that first made kings,
 Something like government among them brings;
 For, as with Pigmies, who best kills the crane,
 Among the hungry he that treasures grain,
 Among the blind the one-eyed blinkard reigns,
 So rules among the drowned he that drains.
 Not who first see the rising sun commands,
 But who could first discern the rising lands.
 Who best could know to pump an earth so leak,
 Him they their Lord and Country's Father speak.
 To make a bank was a great plot of state;
 Invent a shovel, and be a magistrate.
 Hence some small dike-grave⁴ unperceived invades
 The power, and grows, as 'twere, a king of spades;
 But, for less envy, some joined states endures,
 Who look like a commission of the sewers:
 For these Half-anders,⁵ half-wet, and half-dry
 Nor bear strict service, nor pure liberty.
 'Tis probable religion, after this,
 Came next in order; which they could not miss.
 How could the Dutch but be converted, when
 The Apostles were so many fishermen?
 Besides, the waters of themselves did rise,
 And, as their land, so them did re-baptise.

¹ A game otherwise called 'hitch-buttock.' ² Kabeljauw is Dutch for 'cod-fish.' ³ Heeren is Dutch for 'men,' 'gentlemen.'
⁴ Earl of a dike. ⁵ A pun on Hollanders, as Whole-anders.

A Horatian Ode upon Cromwell's Return from Ireland.

The forward youth that would appear,
 Must now forsake his muses dear,
 Nor in the shadows sing
 His numbers languishing:
 'Tis time to leave the books in dust,
 And oil the unused armour's rust,
 Removing from the wall
 The corselet of the hall.
 So restless Cromwell could not cease
 In the inglorious arts of peace,
 But through adventurous war
 Urged his active star;
 And, like the three-forked lightning, first
 Breaking the clouds where it was nurst,

Did thorough his own side
 His fiery way divide;
 (For 'tis all one to courage high,
 The emulous, or enemy,
 And with such to inclose
 Is more than to oppose;)
 Then burning through the air he went,
 And palaces and temples rent;
 And Cæsar's head at last
 Did through his laurels blast.
 'Tis madness to resist or blame
 The force of angry heaven's flame;
 And if we would speak true,
 Much to the man is due
 Who from his private gardens, where
 He lived reserved and austere,
 As if his highest plot
 To plant the bergamot,
 Could by industrious valour climb
 To ruin the great work of Time,
 And cast the kingdoms old,
 Into another mould.
 Though Justice against Fate complain,
 And plead the ancient rights in vain,
 (But those do hold or break,
 As men are strong or weak),
 Nature, that hateth emptiness,
 Allows of penetration less,
 And therefore must make room
 Where greater spirits come.
 What field of all the civil war,
 Where his were not the deepest scar?
 And Hampton shows what part
 He had of wiser art;
 Where, twining subtile fears with hope,
 He wove a net of such a scope
 That Charles himself might chase
 To Carisbrook's narrow case,
 That thence the royal actor borne,
 The tragic scaffold might adorn,
 While round the armed bands,
 Did clap their bloody hands:
 He nothing common did or mean
 Upon that memorable scene,
 But with his keener eye
 The axe's edge did try;
 Nor called the gods with vulgar spite
 To vindicate his helpless right,
 But bowed his comely head
 Down, as upon a bed.
 This was that memorable hour,
 Which first assured the forced power;
 So when they did design
 The capitol's first line,
 A bleeding head, where they begun,
 Did fright the architects to run;
 And yet in that the state
 Foresaw its happy fate.
 And now the Irish are ashamed
 To see themselves in one year tamed:
 So much one man can do,
 That does both act and know.
 They can affirm his praises best,
 And have, though overcome, confessed
 How good he is, how just,
 And fit for highest trust.

Nor yet grown stiffer with command,
 But still in the republic's hand,
 (How fit he is to sway,
 That can so well obey !)
 He to the Commons' feet presents
 A kingdom for his first year's rents ;
 And, what he may, forbears
 His fame, to make it theirs ;
 And has his sword and spoils ungirt,
 To lay them at the public's skirt :
 So when the falcon high
 Falls heavy from the sky,
 She, having killed, no more doth search,
 But on the next green bough to perch ;
 Where, when he first does lure,
 The falconer has her sure.
 What may not then our isle presume,
 While victory his crest does plume ?
 What may not others fear,
 If thus he crowns each year ?
 As Cæsar he ere long to Gaul,
 To Italy a Hannibal,
 And to all states not free,
 Shall climacteric be.
 The Pict no shelter now shall find Within his party-coloured mind,
 But from this valour sad,
 Shrink underneath the plaid ;
 Happy if in the tufted brake,
 The English hunter him mistake,
 Nor lay his hounds in near
 The Caledonian deer.
 But thou, the war's and fortune's son
 March indefatigably on,
 And for the last effect,
 Still keep the sword erect ;
 Beside the force it has to fright
 The spirits of the shady night,
 The same arts that did gain
 A power, must it maintain.

Marvell's Poems were printed in 1681 with a preface by his widow, and by Cooke in 1726. His works were edited by Thompson (1776), Grosart (1872-74), and Margoliouth (1927 et seq.). Aitken edited the Poems and Satires (1892). See Birrell's Marvell (1905), Tercentenary Tributes (1922), and P. Legouis' study (1928).

Algernon Sidney (1622-82), son of the Earl of Leicester, was carefully educated, accompanied his father to Denmark and France, and when his father was Lord Deputy of Ireland, commanded a troop of horse against the Irish rebels. In 1643, during the Civil War, Sidney was permitted to return to England, where he immediately joined the parliamentary forces, and, as colonel of a regiment of horse, was present at several engagements. He was likewise successively governor of Chichester, Dublin, and Dover. In 1648 he was named a member of the court for trying the king, which, however, he did not attend, though not from any disapproval of the intentions of those who composed it. The usurpation of Cromwell gave offence to Sidney, who declined to accept office either under the Protector or his son Richard ; but when the Long Parliament recovered power, he readily consented to act as one of the Council of State. At the time of the Restoration he was engaged on an embassy to Denmark and Sweden ; and, apprehensive of the vengeance of the royalists, he remained abroad for seventeen years, flitting from place to place—Venice, Rome, Brussels, Augsburg. After his return to England by the king's permission in 1677, he opposed the measures of the court, a course which Hume and others held to be ungrateful to the king. A more serious charge was first presented in Dalrymple's Memoirs of Great Britain, published in 1773. The English patriots, with Lord William Russell at their head, intrigued with Barillon, the French ambassador, to prevent war between France and England, their purpose being to preclude Charles II. from having the command of the large funds which on such an occasion must have been entrusted to him, and which he might have used against the liberties of the nation ; while Louis was not less anxious to prevent the English from joining the list of his enemies. The association was a strange one ; but it never would have been held as a moral stain upon the patriots if Sir John Dalrymple had not discovered amongst Barillon's papers one containing a list of persons receiving bribes from the French monarch, amongst whom appears the name of Sidney, together with those of several other leading Whig members of Parliament. Lord Russell was not of the number, but that Sidney stooped to receive the money is admitted by Hallam, Macaulay, and Firth (though disputed by Ewald)—doubtless for public and not personal uses. But it is evident, as Lord Macaulay argued, that national feeling in England was at a low ebb when Charles II. was willing to become the deputy of France, and a man like Algernon Sidney would have been content to see England reduced to the condition of a French province in the wild hope that a foreign despot would assist him to establish his darling republic. It should be remembered that Sidney was as openly hostile to William of Orange as to Charles. He took a conspicuous part in the proceedings by which the Whigs endeavoured to exclude the Duke of York from the throne ; and when that attempt failed, he seems to have joined in the conspiracy for an insurrection to accomplish the same object. This was exposed in consequence of the detection of an inferior plot for the assassination of the king, in which the patriots Russell, Sidney, and others were dexterously inculpated by the court. Sidney was tried for high treason before the infamous Chief-Justice Jeffreys. Although the only witness against him was an abandoned character, Lord Howard, and nothing could be produced that even ostensibly strengthened the evidence, except some manuscripts in which the lawfulness of resisting tyrants was asserted, the right of deposing kings maintained, and a preference given to a free over an arbitrary government, the jury were servile enough to obey the directions of the judge and pronounce him guilty. Sidney was beheaded on the 7th of December 1682, 'very resolutely, and like a true rebel and Republican,' the Duke of York said.

Except some of his letters and an essay 'On Love,' the only published work of Algernon Sidney is Discourses on Government, which first appeared in 1698. The Discourses were written in reply to the Patriarcha of Sir Robert Filmer (page 559); and though tedious and diffuse, are weighty and learned, and contain admirably vigorous passages.

Liberty and Government.

Such as enter into society must, in some degree, diminish their liberty. Reason leads them to this: No one man or family is able to provide that which is requisite for their convenience or security, whilst every one has an equal right to everything, and none acknowledges a superior to determine the controversies that upon such occasions must continually arise, and will probably be so many and great that mankind cannot bear them. Therefore tho' I do not believe that Bellarmine said a commonwealth could not exercise its power; for he could not be ignorant that Rome and Athens did exercise theirs, and that all the regular kingdoms in the world are commonwealths; yet there is nothing of absurdity in saying that man cannot continue in the perpetual and entire fruition of the liberty that God hath given him. The liberty of one is thwarted by that of another; and whilst they are all equal, none will yield to any, otherwise than by a general consent. This is the ground of all just governments; for violence or fraud can create no right; and the same consent gives the form to them all, how much soever they differ from each other. Some small numbers of men, living within the precincts of one city, have as it were cast into a common stock the right which they had of governing themselves and children, and by common consent joining in one body, exercised such power over every single person as seemed beneficial to the whole; and this men call perfect democracy. Others chose rather to be governed by a select number of such as most excelled in wisdom and virtue; and this, according to the signification of the word, was called aristocracy; or when one man excelled all others, the government was put into his hands, under the name of monarchy. But the wisest, best, and far the greatest part of mankind, rejecting these simple species, did form governments mixed or composed of the three, as shall be proved hereafter, which commonly received their respective denomination from the part that prevailed, and did deserve praise or blame as they were well or ill proportioned.

It were a folly hereupon to say that the liberty for which we contend is of no use to us, since we cannot endure the solitude, barbarity, weakness, want, misery, and dangers that accompany it whilst we live alone, nor can enter into a society without resigning it; for the choice of that society, and the liberty of framing it according to our own wills, for our own good, is all we seek. This remains to us whilst we form governments, that we ourselves are judges how far 'tis good for us to recede from our natural liberty; which is of so great importance, that from thence only we can know whether we are freemen or slaves; and the difference between the best government and the worst doth wholly depend on a right or wrong exercise of that power. If men are naturally free, such as have wisdom and understanding will always frame good governments; but if they are born under the necessity of a perpetual slavery, no wisdom can be of use to them; but all must for ever depend on the will of their lords, how cruel, mad, proud, or wicked soever they be. . . .

The Grecians, amongst others who followed the light of reason, knew no other original title to the government of a nation than that wisdom, valour, and justice which was beneficial to the people. These qualities gave beginning to those governments which we call Heroum Regna [the Governments of the Heroes]; and the veneration paid to such as enjoyed them proceeded from a grateful sense of the good received from them; they were thought to be descended from the gods, who in virtue and beneficence surpassed other men: the same attended their descendants, till they came to abuse their power, and by their vices shewed themselves like to or worse than others. Those nations did not seek the most ancient but the most worthy, and thought such only worthy to be preferred before others who could best perform their duty.

Upon the same grounds we may conclude that no privilege is peculiarly annexed to any form of government, but that all magistrates are equally the ministers of God, who perform the work for which they are instituted; and that the people which institutes them may proportion, regulate, and terminate their power as to time, measure, and number of persons, as seems most convenient to themselves, which can be no other than their own good. For it cannot be imagined that a multitude of people should send for Numa, or any other person to whom they owed nothing, to reign over them, that he might live in glory and pleasure; or for any other reason than that it might be good for them and their posterity. This shews the work of all magistrates to be always and everywhere the same, even the doing of justice and procuring the welfare of those that create them. This we learn from common sense: Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, and the best human authors lay it as an immovable foundation, upon which they build their arguments relating to matters of that nature.

(From Chap. i., sects. 10, 16, and 20.)

See the Lives of Sidney by Meadley (1813), R. Chase Sidney (1835), Santvoord (New York, 1881), Ewald (1873), and G. M. Blackburne (1885); and Firth in the Dictionary of National Biography (1897).

George Fox, founder of the Society of Friends, or Quakers, was one of the foremost religious revolutionaries of the age. He was the son of a weaver at Fenny Drayton, in Leicestershire, and was born in 1624. Having been apprenticed to a shoemaker who traded in wool and cattle, he spent much of his youth in tending sheep, an employment which afforded ample room for solitary meditation. When about nineteen years of age, he was one day vexed by a disposition to intemperance which he observed in two professedly religious friends whom he met at a fair. 'I went away,' says he in his Journal, 'and, when I had done my business, returned home; but I did not go to bed that night, nor could I sleep; but sometimes walked up and down, and sometimes prayed, and cried to the Lord, who said unto me : " Thou seest how young people go together into vanity, and old people into the earth ; thou must forsake all, young and old, keep out of all, and be a stranger to all." This divine communication was scrupulously obeyed ; the advices of his friends to marry, to take tobacco, and the like had naturally no weight with him. From 1646 he ceased attendance at church ; and leaving his relations and master, he wandered about the country Bible in hand, a small competency he had supplying his slender wants. Now and for the rest of his life, Fox had many dreams and visions, and received supernatural messages from heaven. Thus, as he records in his Journal, ' One morning, as I was sitting by the fire, a great cloud came over me, and a temptation beset me, and I sate still. And it was said, All things come by nature ; and the Elements and Stars came over me, so that I was in a moment quite clouded with it ; but, inasmuch as I sate still and said nothing, the people of the house perceived nothing. And as I sate still under it and let it alone, a living hope rose in me, and a true voice arose in me which cried : There is a living God who made all things. And immediately the cloud and temptation vanished away, and the life rose over it all, and my heart was glad, and I praised the living God.' Afterwards, he tells us, ' the Lord's power broke forth, and I had great openings and prophecies, and spoke unto the people of the things of God, which they heard with attention and silence, and went away and spread the fame thereof.' He began about the year 1647 to teach publicly in the vicinity of Dukinfield and Manchester, whence he travelled through several neighbouring counties. He had now come to hold that a learned education is unnecessary to a minister ; that the existence of a separate clerical profession is unwarranted by the Bible ; that the Creator of the world is not a dweller in temples made with hands ; and that the Scriptures are not the rule either of conduct or judgment, but that man should follow ' the light of Christ within.' From about 1647 he became an itinerant preacher. He often went into churches while service was going on, and interrupted the clergymen by loudly contradicting their statements of doctrine ; and by these breaches of order, and the employment of such unceremonious fashions of address as, ' Come down, thou deceiver !' he naturally gave great offence, which led sometimes to his imprisonment, and sometimes to severe treatment from the hands of the populace. He was especially hostile to services held in ' steeple-houses' and conducted by formalist ' professors' (not so much the Laudians as the Puritans, with their long abstruse sermons and extravagant doctrines of verbal inspiration). The ' inner light' was the central idea of his teaching. He inveighed against sacerdotalism and formalism, and was equally vehement against most social conventions. Priests, lawyers, and soldiers were all obnoxious to him. The Lord forbade him to put off his hat to any, high or low, and he was required to thee and thou rich and poor equally. He denounced all public amusements, and came into collision with all sorts of people ; his life is indeed little else than a record of insults, persecutions, and imprisonments. At Derby he was imprisoned in the house of correction and then in the common jail for a year, and afterwards in a still more unpleasant cell at Carlisle for half that period.

His first convert seems to have been made in 1647, and soon there were thousands of the ' Friends of Truth,' the full designation of the new communion : in 1650 the popular name of ' Quakers' was given to the ' Friends' by Judge Bennet. Fox continued to preach, dispute, to wander about, and hold conferences. In 1654 he was sent by Colonel Hacker to Cromwell ; and of this memorable interview he gives an account in his Journal, quoted below. Carlyle's story of Fox's being equipped in a leathern suit sewed by his own hands seems to be doubtful, though Sewel (1722) distinctly alleges a complete dress of leather. Fox himself speaks only of ' leathern breeches,' a nowise outrageous garment, though no doubt his eccentricities in costume and bearing were sufficiently exasperating to his unfriends.

Amidst much opposition, Fox still continued to travel through every corner of the kingdom, expounding his views and answering objections, both verbally and in controversial pamphlets. In the course of his peregrinations he suffered frequent imprisonment, sometimes as a disturber of the peace, and sometimes because he refused to uncover his head in the presence of magistrates. He was at least eight times imprisoned, the longest spell of jail being two years and seven and a half months. In 1656, the year after he and his followers refused to take the oath of abjuration, they had increased to such an extent that there were nearly one thousand of them in jail. He visited Wales and Scotland, and (after marrying a worthy widow) went to Barbadoes, Jamaica, America (where he spent nearly two years), Holland, and Germany. In these later wanderings he was accompanied by Penn, Barclay, Keith, and other Quaker leaders. He died in London, 13th January 1691. Fox's own extravagances, especially in his earlier career, and the often grotesque proceedings of some of the recruits from the Ranters, Shakers, and other eccentric sects of the time (see on Nayler at page 623), partly explain the abhorrence with which the Quakers were regarded alike by Churchmen and Nonconformists. This gradually yielded to the essentially shrewd and sober pietism of Fox ; but his view of the ' inner light' as more than co-ordinate in authority with the Bible, the Quaker rejection of the sacraments, and suspicion as to their unsoundness on the Trinity (see at Penn, Vol. II. p. 39) maintained the dislike of the orthodox. Baxter and Bunyan were as uncompromisingly hostile as the professional controversialists. Fox had not merely a heart full of love for his fellows, but a mind capable of instituting systems of registration, poor relief, education, and self-help, which have made the community he founded a social power. His preaching and writings were often mystical, and not seldom turgid and incoherent; in the Journal his style is usually plain and simple, but eloquent and moving.

Fox's work on the use of 'thou' and 'you' has perhaps a peculiar interest for a Cyclopædia of English Literature, inasmuch as by it he sought seriously to modify established usage, and did prevail with his followers for more than two centuries. The arguments from the usage of Amalekites, Hivites, Moabites, Shuhites, &c. are taken straight from the Scripture texts in which personages of these tribes or races are quoted; and the forms of the second personal pronouns, singular and plural, in Hebrew, Arabic, Greek, Latin, French, Manx, &c., are given with tedious superfluity. Fox and his colleagues in this work, John Stubbs and Benjamin Ferrley, fully recognise the rights of the accusative, and do not propose to supersede 'thou' by an ungrammatical use of 'thee.' The following is the first quarter or so of the title of the quaint book, A Battle-Door for Teachers and Professors to learn Singular and Plural, You to many and Thou to one: Singular one, Thou; Plural many, You. Wherein is shewed forth by Grammar or Scripture examples how several Nations and Peoples have made a distinction between Singular and Plural, and so on. The book bears date 1660. In the title it is affirmed, and in the book argued, and in a postscript signed by Fox specially emphasised, that the use of 'you' in speaking to one person, which he so strongly reprobates, was 'set up by the Pope in his pride.'

In Church at Ulverstone.

After this [1652] on a lecture-day, I was moved to go to the steeple-house at Ulverstone, where were abundance of professors, priests, and people . . . and after the Lord had opened my mouth to speak John Sawrey the justice came to me and said if I would speak according to the scriptures I should speak. . . . Then he said I should not speak, contradicting himself who had said just before I should speak if I would speak according to the scriptures, which I did. Now the people were quiet and heard me gladly, until the Justice Sawrey (who was the first stirrer up of cruel persecution in the north) incensed them against me and set them to hale, beat, and bruise me. Then on a sudden the people were in a rage, and fell upon me in the steeple-house before his face, knocked me down, and kicked me, and trampled upon me, he looking on; and so great was the uproar, that some tumbled over their seats for fear. At last he came and took me from the people, led me out of the steeple-house, and put me into the hands of the constables and other officers, bidding them whip me, and put me out of the town. Then they led me about a quarter of a mile, some taking hold of my collar, and some of my arms and shoulders, and shook and dragged me along. And there being many friendly people come to the market, and some of them come to the steeplehouse to hear me, divers of these they knocked down also, and broke their heads, so that the blood ran down from several of them; and Judge Fell's son running after to see what they would do with me, they threw him into a ditch of water, some of them crying: 'Knock the teeth out of his head.' When they had haled me to the common-moss side, a multitude following, the constables and other officers gave me some blows over my back with willow-rods, and so thrust me among the rude multitude, who (having furnished themselves with staves, some with hedge-stakes, and others with holm or holly bushes) fell upon me, and beat me upon my head, arms, and shoulders, till they had amazed me; so that I fell down upon the wet common. And when I recovered myself again, and saw myself lying in a watery common, and the people standing about me, I lay still a little while; and the power of the Lord sprang through me, and the Eternal Refreshings refreshed me, so that I stood up again in the strengthening power of the Eternal God. And stretching out my arms amongst them, I said with a loud voice: 'Strike again! here are my arms, my head, and my cheeks!' . . . Then they began to fall out among themselves.

Interview with Oliver Cromwell.

After Captain Drury had lodged me at the Mermaid [over against the Mews at Charing Cross], he went to give the Protector an account of me. And when he came to me again, he told me the Protector did require that I should promise not to take up a carnal sword or weapon against him or the government, as it then was; and that I should write it in what words I saw good, and set my hand to it. I said little in reply to Captain Drury; but the next morning I was moved of the Lord to write a paper to the Protector, by the name of Oliver Cromwell, wherein I did in the presence of the Lord God declare that I did deny the wearing or drawing of a carnal sword, or any other outward weapon, against him or any man; and that I was sent of God to stand a witness against all violence, and against the works of darkness; and to turn people from darkness to the light, and to bring them from the occasion of war and fighting to the peaceable Gospel, and from being evil-doers, which the magistrates' sword should be a terror to. When I had written what the Lord had given me to write, I set my name to it, and gave it to Captain Drury to give to Oliver Cromwell, which he did. After some time, Captain Drury brought me before the Protector himself at Whitehall; it was in a morning, before he was dressed; and one Harvey, who had come a little among Friends [i.e. the Friends], but was disobedient, waited upon him. When I came in, I was moved to say: 'Peace be in this house;' and I bid him keep in the fear of God, that he might receive wisdom from him, that by it he might be ordered, and with it might order all things under his hand unto God's glory. I spoke much to him of truth, and a great deal of discourse I had with him about religion; wherein he carried himself very moderately. But he said we quarrelled with priests, whom he called ministers. I told him, I did not quarrel with them, but they quarrelled with me and my friends. But, said I, if we own the prophets, Christ, and the apostles, we cannot hold up such teachers, prophets, and shepherds as the prophets, Christ, and the apostles declared against; but we must declare against them by the same power and spirit. Then I shewed him that the prophets, Christ, and the apostles declared freely, and declared against them that did not declare freely; such as preached for filthy lucre, and divined for money, and preached for hire, and were covetous and greedy, like the dumb dogs that could never have enough; and that they that have the same spirit that Christ, and the prophets, and the apostles had, could not but declare against all such now, as they did then. As I spoke, he would several times say it was very good, and it was truth. I told him, that all Christendom (so called) had the scriptures, but they wanted the power and spirit that those had who gave forth the scriptures, and that was the reason they were not in fellowship with the Son, nor with the Father, nor with the scriptures, nor one with another. Many more words I had with him, but people coming in, I drew a little back; and as I was turning, he caught me by the hand, and with tears in his eyes said: 'Come again to my house, for if thou and I were but an hour of a day together, we should be nearer one to the other;' adding, that he wished me no more ill than he did to his own soul. I told him if he did he wronged his own soul, and I bid him hearken to God's voice, that he might stand in his counsel, and obey it; and if he did so, that would keep him from hardness of heart; but if he did not hear God's voice, his heart would be hardened. And he said it was true. Then I went out; and when Captain Drury came out after me, he told me his lord Protector said I was at liberty, and might go whither I would. Then I was brought into a great hall, where the Protector's gentlemen were to dine. And I asked them what they brought me hither for. They said it was by the Protector's order, that I might dine with them. I bid them let the Protector know I would not eat a bit of his bread, nor drink a sup of his drink. When he heard this he said: 'Now I see there is a people risen and come up that I cannot win, either with gifts, honours, offices, or places; but all other sects and people I can.' It was told him again, that we had forsook our own, and were not like to look for such things from him.

In 1656, in Hyde Park, Fox 'espied the Protector coming in his coach. Whereupon I rode up to his coach-side; and some of his life-guard would have put me away, but he forbade them. So I rode down by his coach-side with him, declaring what the Lord gave me to say unto him of the condition and of the suffering of friends in the nation; shewing him how contrary this was to Christ's word and his apostles, and to Christianity. When we were come to James's Park gate, I left him, and at parting he desired me to come to his house.' He had a brief meeting with Cromwell very shortly before the Protector's death, described in a passage on which Carlyle founded a famous apostrophe:

The same day, taking boat, I went down [really up] to Kingston, and from thence to Hampton Court, to speak with the Protector about the sufferings of friends. I met him riding into Hampton Court Park, and before I came at him, as he rode at the head of his life-guard, I saw and felt a waft (whiff, omen) of death go forth against him. . . . And when I came to him he looked like a dead man. After I had laid the sufferings of friends before him, and had warned him according as I was moved to speak to him, he bid me come to his house. So I returned to Kingston, and the next day went up to Hampton Court to have spoken further with him. But when I came, he was sick, and Harvey, who was one that waited on him, told me the doctors were not willing that I should come in to speak with him. So I passed away, and never saw him any more.

The chief writings of George Fox, less cited as authorities on doctrine than Penn's and Barclay's (see Vol. II, pp. 38, 41) fill three folio volumes (1694, 1698, 1706) containing (1) his Journal, (2) Epistles, and (3) Gospel Truth, a collection of Doctrinal Books. A fourth folio (1659) contains The Great Mystery. Penney edited the Journal direct from the MSS. (1911, 1924); and Short Journals and Itinerary Journals, first published in 1925 by the Friends' Historical Association. The list of Fox's works, largely pamphlets, occupies fifty-three pages of Joseph Smith's Catalogue of Friends' Books (1868). See the Life by Hodgkin (1896); R. Knight's Founder of Quakerism (1922); and New Appreciations (1925).

John Bunyan.

author of the Pilgrim's Progress, was born at Elstow, near Bedford, in 1628. By universal assent the 'inspired tinker' is ranked with our English classics and great masters of allegory; his masterpiece was one of the few books Dr Johnson wished had been longer; and yet, so late as 1782, Cowper dared not name him in his poetry lest the name should provoke a sneer. According to the transcript registers from the parish of Elstow, Bunyan's father, who described himself as a 'braseyer,' married Margaret Bentley on the 23rd of May 1627, and on the 30th of November 1628 their illustrious son was baptised at Elstow church. In his seventeenth year John Bunyan, who was bred to his father's trade, was—doubtless under a levy made by Parliament upon the villages of Bedfordshire—drafted into the army, and took part in the civil war between Roundhead and Royalist, probably serving in the garrison at Newport-Pagnell under the commander assumed to be the original of Butler's Hudibras, Sir Samuel Luke (see page 735). Froude was of opinion that he enlisted in the Royalist ranks. On the disbanding of the army Bunyan returned to Elstow, and about 1649 married a wife who brought him no dower of worldly wealth, for, as he put it, 'this woman and I came together as poor as poor might be, not having so much household stuff as a dish or spoon betwixt us both.' She brought with her, however, two books which had belonged to her father, the Plain Man's Pathway to Heaven and the Practice of Piety, in which they read together, and by which Bunyan was observably influenced. His Life and Death of Mr Badman, published in 1680, shows not a little resemblance to the first of these books. Now it was—in the years when he took a lively delight in ringing the bells of Elstow church—that he passed through the deep religious experiences so vividly described in Grace Abounding. There is no reason to believe that at any time Bunyan led a vicious or depraved life, or was what Southey said he was—a blackguard. Rather he seems always to have been well disposed and tender in conscience, though careless and addicted, like his neighbours, to the customary English habit of swearing rather freely. A sincere religious enthusiast applies a severe standard to his own past life.

Dr Brown of Bedford strongly disapproves Sir Walter Scott's suggestion that, as tinkers were often Gypsies, 'the poet-apostle of the English middle classes,' as Froude has called him, may have been of Gypsy race; there were Bonyons or Buingtons in Bedfordshire in the twelfth century, and the name is found in thirty different spellings. On the other hand, it has been shown that there was at least one 'Egyptian rogue' of the name of Bownian in Cornwall in 1586; but the theory of Gypsy origin is at most a speculation.

The young Bedford brazier was introduced by some Puritan friends to their minister, John Gifford, a converted royalist major who had organised a little community sometimes incorrectly described as a Baptist church, it being a church in which baptism and some other questions much debated in those days were left to the individual conscience, and not made an essential part of church life. Bunyan joined this Christian fellowship in 1653, and about 1655 he was asked by the brethren to address them in their church gatherings. This led to his beginning to preach in the villages round Bedford, and in 1656 he was brought into discussions with the followers of George Fox; this again moved him to authorship, his first book, Some Gospel Truths Opened, being published against the Quakers in 1656. That earliest effort of his pen, though rapidly but vigorously written, is altogether remarkable as the composition of a working-man whose schooldays had become a far-off memory. To it Edward Burrough, an eminent Quaker, replied, and Bunyan made rejoinder in A Vindication of Gospel Truths Opened. Two other works were published by him ere, in November 1660, he was arrested while preaching in a farmhouse at Samsell, a small hamlet a little to the south of Ampthill, in Bedfordshire. The imprisonment which followed upon this arrest lasted for twelve long years, during which Bunyan wrote Profitable Meditations, Praying in the Spirit, Christian Behaviour, The Holy City, The Resurrection of the Dead, Grace Abounding, and some smaller works. The place of incarceration was the county jail, which stood at the corner of the High Street and Silver Street, in the centre of the town of Bedford. The prisoner for conscience' sake was released after the Declaration of Indulgence of 1672, under which he became a licensed preacher, having been chosen by the church to which he belonged as their pastor. He had held this office for three years when in February 1675 the Declaration of Indulgence was cancelled and the licenses of the Nonconformist preachers recalled by proclamation. The following month a warrant was issued for his arrest, signed by no fewer than thirteen magistrates, and sealed by ten of them—a document which came to light in 1887 when the Chauncy MSS. came to the hammer at Sotheby's.

Brought to trial at the midsummer sessions under the Conventicle Act, Bunyan was sent to prison for six months in the town jail on Bedford Bridge. It was during this later and briefer imprisonment that he wrote the first part of his memorable Pilgrim's Progress—entered in the register of the Stationers' Company on 22nd December 1677, and licensed 18th February 1678. When first issued it was shorter than in its final form—it then contained no Mr Worldly Wiseman and no second meeting with Evangelist. The discourse with Charity at the Palace Beautiful, the further accounts of Mr By-ends' rich relations, the story of Diffidence, the wife of Giant Despair, with other not unimportant passages, were added in the second and third editions (1678 and 1679). This was followed by the Life and Death of Mr Badman in 1680, containing, as Froude has said, a vivid picture of rough English life in the days of Charles II.; by the Holy War, his most notable work after the Pilgrim's Progress, in 1682; and by the second part of the Pilgrim, containing the story of Christiana and her children, in 1684. Bunyan had been pastor of the Bedford church for sixteen years, when, after a ride through the rain on horseback from Reading to London, he was seized with a fatal illness at the house of his friend, John Strudwick, a grocer at the sign of the Star on Snow Hill, Holborn, and here he died on the 31st of August 1688, and was buried in Bunhill Fields, the Nonconformist Campo Santo.

During the sixty years of his life Bunyan wrote something like sixty books, but he will be best remembered by three of these—the Grace Abounding, the Holy War, and the Pilgrim's Progress, and best of all by the last of the three. Grace Abounding Macaulay describes as one of the most remarkable pieces of autobiography in the world; the Holy War is an allegory of the struggle between God and the devil for man's soul—an allegory vastly less fully realised and visualised than the opus magnum. The Pilgrim's Progress sprang at once into fame, 100,000 copies being sold during the subsequent ten years of its author's life. It was also printed at Boston, in New England, in 1681; a Dutch translation was issued at Amsterdam in 1682, and both this and a handsomer edition of 1685 were illustrated by Dutch engravers, then the leaders of the art of engraving in Europe. The book was also translated into Welsh, Walloon, French, German, Polish, and Swedish between 1688 and 1743. Since then it has been translated into about a hundred languages and dialects, the versions in Japanese and the Canton vernacular being admirably illustrated by native artists, who have adapted scenery and costumes to Chinese conditions.

When in 1830 Southey's edition of the Pilgrim's Progress appeared, with a Life of Bunyan, Macaulay—not a very likely person to appreciate the religious power of the book, its value as a manual of devotional thought, its vivid realisation of the sense of sin and of absolute need for supernatural redemption—by his famous and enthusiastic essay in the Edinburgh Review revived the interest of the educated in the Pilgrim as an unparalleled monument of creative literature, remarkable amongst all the allegories of the world in that it had a strong human interest. 'In the wildest parts of Scotland the Pilgrim's Progress is the delight of the peasantry. In every nursery the Pilgrim's Progress is a greater favourite than Jack the Giant-killer. Every reader knows the straight and narrow path of death; and we are told that every human being must pass through the river. But Faithful does not pass through it. He is martyred, not in shadow, but in reality, at Vanity Fair. Hopeful talks to Christian about Esau's birthright and about his own convictions of sin as Bunyan might have talked with one of his own congregation.' By more recent and less sympathetic critics it has even been complained that the allegory of the Pilgrim's Progress does not hang together, and that the details are often incongruous or even absurd. The author constantly forgets that Pilgrim carried such an incredible burden on his back, which indeed his friends were supposed not to see; and he seems to approve of a good man deserting wife and children on occasion. It is contended that though Bunyan had fervour, vigour, spiritual insight, narrative power, a gift of homely humour and satire, and extraordinary facility in handling familiar and commonplace conceptions, he yet lacked a profound imagination and the supremest gift of poetic vision. His idea of the Heavenly City, it is said, is less lofty than even the conventional one, and many of his thoughts border have observed several pages which do not contain a single word of more than two syllables. Yet no writer has said more exactly what he meant to say. For magnificence, for pathos, for vehement exhortation, for subtle disquisition, for every purpose of the poet, the orator, and the divine, this homely dialect, the dialect of plain working-men, was perfectly sufficient. There is no book in our literature on which we would so readily stake the fame of the old unpolluted English language, no book which shows so well how rich that language is in its own proper wealth, and how little it has been improved by all that it has borrowed.'

JOHN BUNYAN.

From a Drawing by Robert White (1645-1703).

Macaulay freely admitted that 'the Pilgrim's Progress undoubtedly is not a perfect allegory. The types are often inconsistent with each other; and sometimes the allegorical disguise is altogether thrown off. The river, for example, is emblematic on vulgarity. Against such unfair depreciation Macaulay's answer still holds good: nobody, whatever his genius, could sustain a long allegory without inconsistencies; no writer, ancient or modern, has achieved this feat. The best thing an allegorist can do is to present 'a succession of analogies, each of which may separately be striking and happy, without looking very nicely to see whether they harmonise with each other.' No simile even need be expected to run on all fours. And if we go beyond Macaulay, make allowance for the dream-plot, and remember that no dream is a harmonious whole from beginning to end, we shall see that occasional lapses or incongruities hardly injure the effect of a continued reverie with dream-like episodes, and might even be said to make it liker its model. Another answer to hypercriticism is to be found in the immediate success and the permanent vitality of the book, and its power of appealing to all kinds of Christians and unchristians in so many nations and languages. The very homeliness of conception, the familiarity of the imagery, the accepted symbolisms, the shrewd, practical common-sense, and the combination of homely vernacular and Bible English all contribute to heighten the realism of the whole.

It is the irony of history that the next very eminent English writer to attach a very high value to Bunyan and Bunyan's work should also completely reject the theological system that underlies all Bunyan's writings. J. A. Froude was a much deeper critic than Macaulay; he gave full weight in human life and in literature to the ever-pressing problems of religion and ethics, but must have seemed to Bunyan almost as much an alien to the household of faith as Macaulay was. Yet, protesting throughout his book on Bunyan against the shallow judgment of those who called him 'a Philistine of genius,' Froude thus comments: 'And yet Bunyan, intensely religious as he was, and narrow as his theology was, is always human. His genius remains fresh and vigorous under the least promising conditions. All mankind being under sin together, he has no favourites to flatter, no opponents to misrepresent. There is a kindness in his descriptions, even of the Evil One's attacks upon himself.'

'The Pilgrim's Progress, though professedly an allegoric story of the Protestant plan of salvation, is conceived in the large, wide spirit of humanity itself. Anglo-Catholic and Lutheran, Calvinist and Deist, can alike read it with delight, and find their own theories in it. Even the Romanist has only to blot out a few paragraphs, and can discover no purer model of a Christian life to place in the hands of his children. The religion of the Pilgrim's Progress is the religion which must be always and everywhere, as long as man believes that he has a soul and is responsible for his actions; and thus it is that, while theological folios once devoured as manna from Heaven now lie on the bookshelves dead as Egyptian mummies, this book is wrought into the mind and memory of every well-conditioned English or American child; while the matured man, furnished with all the knowledge which literature can teach him, still finds the adventures of Christian as charming as the adventures of Ulysses or Æneas.'

Froude also protests against 'the common fashion' of calling Bunyan's verse doggerel, and disputes the universal judgment mainly on the (debatable) ground that 'no verse is doggerel which has a sincere and rational meaning in it.' But few will agree with him that 'Bunyan's lines are often as successful as the best lines of Quarles or George Herbert.' Perhaps the best-known is the first verse of the shepherd-boy's song in the second part of the Pilgrim:

He that is down needs fear no fall,
He that is low no pride;
He that is humble ever shall Have God to be his guide.

Bunyan sometimes saw the events of everyday life through a poetical magnifier. The very simple enterprise of killing an adder is described in the extract from Grace Abounding as if it had been a death-struggle with a dragon. The adder's bite, though painful, is not dangerous to any healthy man; and the sting—since adders administer their poison from a hollow tooth—was the harmless forked tongue.

Allegorical pilgrimages from this to a better world were no novelty in European literature. In 1858 an interesting parallel was shown to exist between the Pilgrim's Progress and Le Pèlerinage de l'Homme of De Guilleville or Guilleville, a Parisian poet who died about 1360. The pilgrimage here too was from the world and its vices and sorrows, through difficulties and dangers, to the celestial city of Jerusalem; the work was Englished as The Pilgrimage of the Life of Man, or Pilgrimage de Mounde, by Lydgate, in 1426 (printed by Furnivall for the E.E.T.S., Part I., 1899). Another translation was printed by Caxton. Geiler von Kaisersberg wrote also a Christliche Pilgerschaft zum ewigen Vaterland in 1512; and as Bunyan seems to have learnt something from the Anabaptists, this German 'pilgrimage to the everlasting Fatherland' might possibly have indirectly influenced him. Many resemblances between Bunyan and earlier dreamers of dreams with a purpose—including Hampole, Wyclif, Spenser, 'Piers Plowman,' and Walter Map—are discussed in N. Hill's Guillaume de Guilleville compared with Bunyan (1858) and in Wharey's Sources of Bunyan's Allegories (1904).

Hundreds of notable English writers from his own day till ours have owned their deep debt to Bunyan, and shown in their style traces of his influence. And not merely English writers: Bunyan's stamp has been found on some of Schiller's poems, and Wieland, of all people in the world, received an impulse from the English dreamer of dreams. Frank T. Bullen professed that his style was wholly based on the Bible and Bunyan. W. E. Henley said of the chameleon-like R. L. Stevenson (who surely in this respect more than any man served many masters): 'Bunyan was born a master. Stevenson was born—a student of Bunyan. There is the difference.'

From 'Grace Abounding.'

In this my relation of the merciful working of God upon my soul, it will not be amiss if in the first place I do in a few words give you a hint of my pedigree and manner of bringing up, that thereby the goodness and bounty of God towards me may be the more advanced and magnified before the sons of men.

For my descent then, it was, as is well known by many, of a low and inconsiderable generation, my father's house being of that rank that is meanest and most despised of all the families of the land. Wherefore I have not here, as others, to boast of noble blood and of any high-born state according to the flesh, though, all things considered, I magnify the heavenly majesty, for that by this door he brought me into the world, to partake of the grace and life that is in Christ by the gospel. But notwithstanding the meanness and inconsiderableness of my parents, it pleased God to put it into their hearts to put me to school, to learn me both to read and write; the which I also attained, according to the rate of other poor men's children, though to my shame I confess I did soon lose that I had learned, even almost utterly, and that long before the Lord did work his gracious work of conversion upon my soul. As for my own natural life, for the time that I was without God in the world, it was indeed according to the course of this world, and the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience, Eph. ii. 2, 3. It was my delight to be taken captive by the devil at his will, 2 Tim. ii. 26, being filled with all unrighteousness; the which did also so strongly work both in my heart and life, that I had but few equals, both for cursing, swearing, lying, and blaspheming the holy name of God. Yea, so settled and rooted was I in these things, that they became as a second nature to me; the which, as I have also with soberness considered since, did so offend the Lord that even in my childhood he did scare and terrify me with fearful dreams and visions. For often after I had spent this and the other day in sin, I have been greatly afflicted while asleep with the apprehensions of devils and wicked spirits, who, as I then thought, laboured to draw me away with them, of which I could never be rid. Also I should at these years be greatly troubled with the thoughts of the fearful torments of hell-fire, still fearing that it would be my lot to be found at last among those devils and hellish fiends who are there bound down with the chains and bonds of darkness unto the judgment of the great day.

These things, I say, when I was but a child but nine or ten years old, did so distress my soul, that then, in the midst of my many sports and childish vanities, amidst my vain companions, I was often much cast down and afflicted in my mind therewith, yet could I not let go my sins. Yea, I was also then so overcome with despair of life and heaven, that I should often wish either that there had been no hell, or that I had been a devil, supposing they were only tormentors, that if it must needs be that I went thither, I might be rather a tormentor than be tormented myself.

A while after, these terrible dreams did leave me, which also I soon forgot; for my pleasures did quickly cut off the remembrance of them, as if they had never been; wherefore with more greediness, according to the strength of nature, I did still let loose the reins of my lusts, and delighted in all transgressions against the law of God; so that until I came to the state of marriage, I was the very ringleader in all manner of vice and ungodliness. Yea, such prevalency had the lusts of the flesh on my poor soul, that had not a miracle of precious grace prevented, I had not only perished by the stroke of eternal justice, but also laid myself open to the stroke of those laws which bring some to disgrace and shame before the face of the world.

In these days the thoughts of religion were very grievous to me; I could neither endure it myself, nor that any other should; so that when I have seen some read in those books that concerned Christian piety, it would be as it were a prison to me. Then I said unto God: 'Depart from me, for I desire not the knowledge of thy ways,' Job, xxi. 14, 15. I was now void of all good consideration; heaven and hell were both out of sight and mind; and as for saving and damning, they were least in my thoughts. 'O Lord, thou knowest my life, and my ways are not hid from thee.'

But this I well remember, that though I could myself sin with the greatest delight and ease, yet even then, if I had at any time seen wicked things by those who professed goodness, it would make my spirit tremble. As once, above all the rest, when I was in the height of vanity, yet hearing one to swear that was reckoned for a religious man, it had so great a stroke upon my spirit, that it made my heart ache. But God did not utterly leave me, but followed me still, not with convictions, but judgments mixed with mercy. For once I fell into a creek of the sea, and hardly escaped drowning. Another time I fell out of a boat into Bedford river, but mercy yet preserved me; besides, another time being in the field with my companions, it chanced that an adder passed over the highway, so I, having a stick, struck her over the back, and having stunned her, I forced open her mouth with my stick, and plucked her sting out with my fingers; by which act, had not God been merciful to me, I might by my desperateness have brought myself to my end. This also I have taken notice of with thanksgiving: when I was a soldier, I with others were drawn out to go to such a place to besiege it; but when I was just ready to go, one of the company desired to go in my room; to which when I had consented, he took my place, and coming to the siege, as he stood sentinel, he was shot in the head with a musket-bullet and died. Here, as I said, were judgments and mercy, but neither of them did awaken my soul to righteousness; wherefore I sinned still, and grew more and more rebellious against God, and careless of my own salvation.

Presently after this I changed my condition into a married state, and my mercy was to light upon a wife whose father and mother were counted godly; this woman and I, though we came together as poor as poor might be, not having so much household stuff as a dish or spoon betwixt us both, yet this she had for her part, The Plain Man's Pathway to Heaven, and The Practice of Piety, which her father had left when he died. In these two books I sometimes read, wherein I found some things that were somewhat pleasant to me; but all this while I met with no conviction. She also often would tell me what a godly man her father was, and how he would reprove and correct vice, both in his house and among his neighbours, and what a strict and holy life he lived in his days, both in word and deed. Wherefore these books, though they did not reach my heart to awaken it about my sad and sinful state, yet they did beget within me some desires to reform my vicious life, and fall in very eagerly with the religion of the times; to wit, to go to church twice a day, and there very devoutly both say and sing as others did, yet retaining my wicked life; but withal was so overrun with the spirit of superstition, that I adored, and that with great devotion, even all things (both the high-place, priest, clerk, vestment, service, and what else) belonging to the church; counting all things holy that were therein contained, and especially the priest and clerk most happy, and without doubt greatly blessed, because they were the servants, as I then thought, of God, and were principal in the holy temple, to do his work therein. This conceit grew so strong upon my spirit, that had I but seen a priest, though never so sordid and debauched in his life, I should find my spirit fall under him, reverence him, and knit unto him; yea, I thought for the love I did bear unto them (supposing they were the ministers of God) I could have lain down at their feet, and have been trampled upon by them—their name, their garb, and work did so intoxicate and bewitch me. . . .

But all this while I was not sensible of the danger and evil of sin; I was kept from considering that sin would damn me, what religion soever I followed, unless I was found in Christ. Nay, I never thought whether there was such a one or no. Thus man while blind doth wander, for he knoweth not the way to the city of God, Eccles. x. 15.

But one day, amongst all the sermons our parson made, his subject was to treat of the Sabbath-day, and of the evil of breaking that, either with labour, sports, or otherwise; wherefore I fell in my conscience under his sermon, thinking and believing that he made that sermon on purpose to shew me my evil doing. And at that time I felt what guilt was, though never before that I can remember; but then I was for the present greatly loaded therewith, and so went home, when the sermon was ended, with a great burden upon my spirit. This, for that instant, did embitter my former pleasures to me; but hold, it lasted not, for before I had well dined, the trouble began to go off my mind, and my heart returned to its old course; but oh, how glad was I that this trouble was gone from me, and that the fire was put out, that I might sin again without control! Wherefore, when I had satisfied nature with my food, I shook the sermon out of my mind, and to my old custom of sports and gaming I returned with great delight. . . . But the same day, as I was in the midst of a game of cat, and having struck it one blow from the hole, just as I was about to strike it the second time, a voice did suddenly dart from heaven into my soul, which said: 'Wilt thou leave thy sins and go to heaven, or have thy sins and go to hell?' At this I was put to an exceeding maze; wherefore, leaving my cat upon the ground, I looked up to heaven, and was as if I had with the eyes of my understanding seen the Lord Jesus look down upon me, as being very hotly displeased with me, and as if he did severely threaten me with some grievous punishment for those and other ungodly practices. . . .

But quickly after this, I fell into company with one poor man that made profession of religion, who, as I then thought, did talk pleasantly of the Scriptures and of religion; wherefore, liking what he said, I betook me to my Bible, and began to take great pleasure in reading. . . . Wherefore I fell to some outward reformation both in my words and life, and did set the commandments before me for my way to heaven; which commandments I also did strive to keep, and, as I thought, did keep them pretty well sometimes, and then I should have comfort; yet now and then should break one, and so afflict my conscience; but then I should repent, and say I was sorry for it, and promise God to do better next time, and there got help again; for then I thought I pleased God as well as any man in England.

Thus I continued about a year, all which time our neighbours did take me to be a very godly and religious man, and did marvel much to see such great alteration in my life and manners; and indeed so it was, though I knew not Christ, nor grace, nor faith, nor hope; for, as I have since seen, had I then died, my state had been most fearful. But, I say, my neighbours were amazed at this my great conversion—from prodigious profaneness to something like a moral life and sober man. Now therefore they began to praise, to commend, and to speak well of me, both to my face and behind my back. Now I was, as they said, become godly; now I was become a right honest man. But oh! when I understood those were their words and opinions of me, it pleased me mighty well; for though as yet I was nothing but a poor painted hypocrite, yet I loved to be talked of as one that was truly godly. I was proud of my godliness, and indeed I did all I did either to be seen of or well spoken of by men; and thus I continued for about a twelvemonth or more.

Now you must know that before this I had taken much delight in ringing, but my conscience beginning to be tender, I thought such practice was but vain, and therefore forced myself to leave it; yet my mind hankered; wherefore I would go to the steeple-house and look on, though I durst not ring; but I thought this did not become religion neither; yet I forced myself, and would look on still. But quickly after, I began to think, 'How if one of the bells should fall?' Then I chose to stand under a main beam that lay overthwart the steeple, from side to side, thinking here I might stand sure; but then I thought again, should the bell fall with a swing, it might first hit the wall, and then rebounding upon me, might kill me for all this beam. This made me stand in the steeple-door; and now, thought I, I am safe enough; for if the bell should then fall, I can slip out behind these thick walls, and so be preserved notwithstanding. So after this I would yet go to see them ring, but would not go any further than the steeple-door; but then it came into my head, 'How if the steeple itself should fall?' And this thought (it may, for aught I know, when I stood and looked on) did continually so shake my mind, that I durst not stand at the steeple-door any longer, but was forced to flee, for fear the steeple should fall upon my head.

Another thing was my dancing; I was a full year before I could quite leave that. But all this while, when I thought I kept that or this commandment, or did by word or deed anything I thought was good, I had great peace in my conscience, and would think with myself, God cannot choose but be now pleased with me; yea, to relate it in my own way, I thought no man in England could please God better than I. But, poor wretch as I was, I was all this while ignorant of Jesus Christ, and going about to establish my own righteousness; and had perished therein, had not God in his mercy shewed me more of my state by nature.

The Golden City—from 'The Pilgrim's Progress.'

Now I saw in my dream that by this time the pilgrims were got over the Enchanted Ground, and entering into the country of Beulah, whose air was very sweet and pleasant, the way lying directly through it, they solaced them there for a season. Yea, here they heard continually the singing of birds, and saw every day the flowers appear in the earth, and heard the voice of the turtle in the land. In this country the sun shineth night and day; wherefore it was beyond the Valley of the Shadow of Death, and also out of the reach of Giant Despair; neither could they from this place so much as see Doubting Castle. Here they were within sight of the city they were going to; also here met them some of the inhabitants thereof: for in this land the Shining Ones commonly walked, because it was upon the borders of Heaven. In this land also the contract between the bride and bridegroom was renewed; yea, here, 'as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so did their God rejoice over them.' Here they had no want of corn and wine; for in this place they met abundance of what they had sought for in all their pilgrimage. Here they heard voices from out of the city, loud voices, saying: 'Say ye to the daughter of Zion, behold thy salvation cometh, behold, his reward is with him.' Here all the inhabitants of the country called them 'the holy people, the redeemed of the Lord, sought out,' &c.

Now as they walked in this land, they had more rejoicing than in parts more remote from the kingdom to which they were bound; and drawing near to the city they had yet a more perfect view thereof: it was builded of pearls and precious stones, also the streets thereof were paved with gold; so that, by reason of the natural glory of the city, and the reflection of the sunbeams upon it, Christian with desire fell sick; Hopeful also had a fit or two of the same disease: wherefore here they lay by it a while, crying out because of their pangs: 'If you see my Beloved, tell him that I am sick of love.'

But being a little strengthened, and better able to bear their sickness, they walked on their way, and came yet nearer and nearer, where were orchards, vineyards, and gardens, and their gates opened into the highway. Now as they came up to these places, behold the gardener stood in the way, to whom the pilgrims said: 'Whose goodly vineyards and gardens are these?' He answered: 'They are the King's, and are planted here for his own delight, and also for the solace of pilgrims. So the gardener had them into the vineyards, and bid them refresh themselves with dainties; he also shewed them there the King's walks and arbors where he delighted to be; and here they tarried and slept.'

Now I beheld in my dream that they talked more in their sleep at this time than ever they did in all their journey; and being in a muse thereabout, the gardener said even to me: 'Wherefore musest thou at the matter? It is the nature of the fruit of the grapes of these vineyards to go down so sweetly as to cause the lips of them that are asleep to speak.'

So I saw that when they awoke they addressed themselves to go up to the city. But as I said, the reflection of the sun upon the city (for the city was pure gold) was so extremely glorious, that they could not as yet with open face behold it, but through an instrument made for that purpose. So I saw that, as they went on, there met them two men in raiment that shone like gold; also their faces shone as the light. These men asked the pilgrims whence they came; and they told them. They also asked them where they had lodged, what difficulties and dangers, what comforts and pleasures, they had met with in their way; and they told them. Then said the men that met them: 'You have but two difficulties more to meet with, and then you are in the city.'

Christian then and his companion asked the men to go along with them; so they told them they would; but, said they, you must obtain it by your own faith. So I saw in my dream that they went on together till they came in sight of the gate.

Now I further saw that betwixt them and the gate was a river, but there was no bridge to go over, the river was very deep. At the sight therefore of this river, the pilgrims were much stounded; but the men that went with them said: 'You must go through, or you cannot come at the gate.'

The pilgrims then began to inquire if there was no other way to the gate; to which they answered: 'Yes; but there hath not any save two, to wit, Enoch and Elijah, been permitted to tread that path since the foundation of the world, nor shall, until the last trumpet shall sound. The pilgrims then, especially Christian, began to dispond in his mind, and looked this way and that; but no way could be found by them by which they might escape the river. Then they asked the men if the waters were all of a depth. They said: 'No; yet they could not help them in that case; for said they, You shall find it deeper or shallower, as you believe in the King of the place.'

They then addressed themselves to the water, and entering, Christian began to sink, and crying out to his good friend Hopeful, he said: 'I sink in deep waters: the billows go over my head; all the waters go over me. Selah. Then said the other: 'Be of good cheer, my brother; I feel the bottom, and it is good. Then said Christian: 'Ah! my friend, the sorrow of death hath encompassed me about: I shall not see the land that flows with milk and honey. . . .

Then I saw in my dream that Christian was in a muse a while. To whom also Hopeful added this word: 'Be of good cheer; Jesus Christ maketh thee whole: and with that Christian brake out with a loud voice, Oh I see him again; and he tells me: 'When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee.' Then they both took courage, and the enemy was after that as still as a stone, until they were gone over. Christian therefore presently found ground to stand upon, and so it followed that the rest of the river was but shallow. Thus they got over. Now upon the bank of the river on the other side, they saw the two shining men again, who there waited for them. Wherefore being come out of the river, they saluted them saying: 'We are ministring spirits, sent forth to minister to those that shall be heirs of salvation.' Thus they went along towards the gate. Now you must note that the city stood upon a mighty hill; but the pilgrims went up that hill with ease, because they had these two men to lead them up by the arms; they had likewise left their mortal garments behind them in the river; for though they went in with them, they came out without them. They therefore went up here with much agility and speed, though the foundation upon which the city was framed was higher than the clouds. They therefore went up through the region of the air, sweetly talking as they went, being comforted because they got safely over the river, and had such glorious companions to attend them. . . .

Now while they were thus drawing towards the gate, behold a company of the heavenly host came out to meet them; to whom it was said by the other two Shining Ones: These are the men that have loved our Lord when they were in the world, and that have left all for his holy name; and he hath sent us to fetch them, and we have brought them thus far on their desired journey, that they may go in and look their Redeemer in the face with joy. Then the Heavenly Host gave a great shout, saying: 'Blessed are they that are called to the marriage-supper of the Lamb.' There came also out at this time to meet them several of the King's trumpeters, clothed in white and shining raiment, who with melodious noises and loud made even the heavens to echo with their sound. These trumpeters saluted Christian and his fellow with ten thousand welcomes from the world; and this they did with shouting and sound of trumpet.

This done, they compassed them round about on every side; some went before, some behind, and some on the right hand, some on the left (as 'twere to guard them through the upper regions) continually sounding as they went, with melodious noise, in notes on high; so that the very sight was to them that could behold it as if heaven itself was come down to meet them. Thus, therefore, they walked on together; and as they walked, ever and anon these trumpeters, even with joyful sound, would by mixing their music with looks and gestures, still signify to Christian and his brother how welcome they were into their company, and with what gladness they came to meet them: and now were these two men, as 'twere, in heaven before they came at it, being swallowed up with the sight of angels, and with hearing of their melodious notes. Here also they had the city itself in view, and they thought they heard all the bells therein to ring, to welcome them thereto; but above all, the warm and joyful thoughts that they had about their own dwelling there with such company, and that for ever and ever. Oh! by what tongue or pen can their glorious joy be expressed? Thus they came up to the gate.

Now, when they were come up to the gate, there was written over it in letters of gold: 'Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have a right to the Tree of Life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.'

Then I saw in my dream that the shining men bid them call at the gate; the which when they did, some from above looked over the gate, to wit Enoch, Moses, Elijah, &c.; to whom it was said: These pilgrims are come from the City of Destruction, for the love that they bear to the King of this place; and then the pilgrims gave in unto them each man his certificate, which they had received in the beginning: those therefore were carried in to the King, who, when he had read them, said: Where are the men? To whom it was answered: They are standing without the gate. The King then commanded to open the gate, 'That the righteous nation,' said he, 'that keepeth truth, may enter in.'

Now I saw in my dream that these two men went in at the gate; and lo, as they entered, they were transfigured, and they had raiment put on that shone like gold. There was also that met them with harps and crowns, and gave to them; the harps to praise withal, and the crowns in token of honour. Then I heard in my dream that all the bells in the city rang again for joy, and that it was said unto them: 'Enter ye into the joy of your Lord.' I also heard the men themselves, that they sang with a loud voice, saying: 'Blessing, honour, and glory, and power be to Him that sitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb, for ever and ever.'

Now, just as the gates were opened to let in the men, I looked in after them, and behold the city shone like the sun; the streets also were paved with gold, and in them walked many men with crowns on their heads, palms in their hands, and golden harps to sing praises withal.

One of seven known copies of the first edition (facsimile reprint, 1926) of the Pilgrim's Progress was sold in 1901 for £1475; a copy sold in 1926 for £6800 was returned on proving to be of the second issue of the first edition, with a list of 'Erata.' There is a complete series of editions down to the thirty-fourth—except the seventeenth. An incomplete folio edition of Bunyan's general works appeared in 1692, and complete editions in two volumes folio in 1736-37 and 1767. A thick folio of 1112 pages, double columns, was published in Edinburgh in 1771, and other collected editions have been issued in England, Scotland, and America. See Bibliography by F. M. Harrison (1932), who also wrote a Life (1928). See Lives by Southey (1830), Offor (1862), Froude (1880), Dr John Brown of Bedford (the fullest; 1885, new ed. 1928), Hale White (1904), G. B. Harrison (1928); and Wright's Bunyan as a Man of Letters (1916).

Robert Boyle (1627-91), the most distinguished of the 'experimental philosophers' who in England hastened to possess the new worlds of which Bacon had glimpses, was a son of the first ('great') Earl of Cork, at whose mansion of Lismore he was born. After studying at Eton and Geneva, he travelled through Italy, returning to England in 1644; and henceforward to the end of his life he devoted himself to researches and experiments in chemistry and physics. From 1644 till 1650 he lived in the manor of Stalbridge in Dorset, now his by his father's death. In 1654 he settled at Oxford. From 1645 weekly meetings were held at London and at Oxford for the cultivation of what was then termed 'the new philosophy'—in Oxford first at the lodgings of Dr Wilkins, and subsequently, for the most part, at Boyle's. These scientific students—Wilkins, Boyle, Seth Ward, Wren, Wallis, Petty—with others who afterwards joined them, were incorporated by Charles II. in 1662 as the Royal Society. Boyle, in London after 1668, was one of its most active members, and many of his treatises originally appeared in the Society's Transactions. He died in 1691, and his works are voluminous enough to fill five folio volumes. They consist chiefly of accounts of his experimental researches in chemistry and natural philosophy, especially on the mechanical and chemical properties of air, on freezing, boiling, refraction, specific gravity, and electricity. By means of the air-pump, the construction of which he materially improved, he made valuable discoveries. In 1662 he published experimental proof of the proportional relation between elasticity and pressure, properly called Boyle's Law (sometimes called Mariotte's, after the experimenter who in 1676 confirmed Boyle's results). His researches and results in many departments mark the final defeat of mediævalism and the triumph of the modern spirit—though he clung to the belief in the transmutation of gold. A devout and amiable man, he published much in defence of Christianity, and on the importance of studying the Divine attributes as displayed in the material world. He devoted much time and money to missionary enterprises, and made provision for the delivery of eight lectures yearly in London 'for proving the Christian religion against notorious infidels, namely, atheists, theists, pagans, Jews, and Mohammedans; not descending lower to any controversies that are among Christians themselves.' In 1660 he was solicited by Lord Clarendon to take orders, but modestly professed himself unequal to the high duties of the pastoral office; he thought he had even a better chance to advance religion by his writings as a layman. He spent large sums in the translation and diffusion of the Scriptures, in publishing useful books (such as Burnet's History of the Reformation), and in advancing science. In spite of feeble health and positive illness, he continued research and writing till shortly before his death at the end of 1691. He had been elected president of the Royal Society (an honour he declined), governor of the corporation for the spread of the gospel in New England, and director of the East India Company (whose charter he helped to obtain).

Besides treatises such as The Origin of Forms and Qualities, Experiments touching Colours, Hydrostatical Paradoxes, disquisitions on gems, the temperature of the blood, the usefulness of experimental philosophy, Observations touching Cold, &c., he published books on the style of the Scriptures, against swearing, on the reconcilableness of reason and religion, on final causes, The Christian Virtuoso [i.e. experimentalist], and A Treatise on Seraphic Love; not to speak of the famous Occasional Reflections on Several Subjects (1665), mostly written in early life, which Butler caricatured and Swift ridiculed in his Meditations on a Broom-stick. Even without this association, the Reflections inevitably provoke a smile—lessons on the goodness of the Creator, the duty of humility, the uncertainty of life, &c., drawn from such 'occasions' as 'his manner of giving meat to his dog,' 'on sitting at ease in a coach that went very fast,' 'upon the taking of physic,' 'upon one's drinking water out of the brims of his hat,' and 'on killing a crow (out of a window) in a hog's trough, and immediately tracing the ensuing reflection with a pen made of one of his quills,' solemnly set forth in handsome type on great folio pages. Fifteen meditations turn on 'the accidents of an ague,' the first—'Upon the first invasion of the disease'—describing how the 'chilness' surprised him as he was 'sitting quietly in his chamber, delightfully entertained by an outlandish virtuoso with an account of the several attempts that are either made or designed in foreign parts to produce curiosities and improve knowledge.' The last of the series appropriately arises out of his 'reviewing and tacking together the several bills piled up in the apothecary's shop.' It will not be unfair to this voluminous author to choose our specimens not from the more ponderous works—written mostly in a plain and clear yet prolix style—but from the Occasional Reflections. The first is a fair average one; the second, more whimsical, contains a number of physiological remarks here omitted as now quite unsuited for general reading. But it has the reputed merit of having by its concluding paragraphs given Swift the suggestion for Gulliver's Travels. At least it is entitled to the credit of having fairly formulated the ingenious though simple plan for bringing veiled but effective satire to bear on home foibles by the ingenuous remarks of intelligent but imaginary foreigners; the device that was carried out in the next century by Dufresny, by Montesquieu, and by Goldsmith in his Citizen of the World; as also since by Morier in Hajji Baba in England, at times by Mr Punch, and by many others. There is a Life of Boyle by Flora Masson (1914), and a Bibliography by J. F. Fulton (1932).

Upon the Sight of Roses and Tulips growing near one another.

It is so uncommon a thing to see tulips last till roses come to be blown, that the seeing them in this garden grow together, as it deserves my notice, so methinks it should suggest to me some reflection or other on it. And perhaps it may not be an improper one to compare the difference betwixt these two kinds of flowers to the disparity which I have often observed betwixt the fates of those young ladies that are only very handsome, and those that have a less degree of beauty, recompensed by the accession of wit, discretion, and virtue: for tulips, whilst they are fresh, do indeed by the lustre and vividness of their colours more delight the eye than roses; but then they do not alone quickly fade, but as soon as they have lost that freshness and gaudiness that solely endeared them, they degenerate into things not only undesirable but distasteful; whereas roses, besides the moderate beauty they disclose to the eye (which is sufficient to please, though not to charm) do not only keep their colour longer than tulips, but when that decays, retain a perfumed odour, and divers useful qualities and virtues that survive the spring and recommend them all the year. Thus those unadvised young ladies, that because nature has given them beauty enough despise all other qualities, and even that regular diet which is ordinarily requisite to make beauty itself lasting, not only are wont to decay betimes, but as soon as they have lost that youthful freshness that alone endeared them, quickly pass from being objects of wonder and love, to be so of pity, if not of scorn; whereas those that were as solicitous to enrich their minds as to adorn their faces, may not only with mediocrity of beauty be very desirable whilst that lasts, but notwithstanding the recess of that and youth, may by the fragrant reputation and those virtues and ornaments of the mind that time does but improve, be always sufficiently endeared to those that have merit enough to discern and value such excellences, and whose esteem and friendship is alone worth their being concerned for. In a word, they prove the happiest as well as they are the wisest ladies, that, whilst they possess the desirable qualities that youth is wont to give, neglect not the acquist [acquisition] of those that age cannot take away.

Upon the Eating of Oysters.

Eugenius. Whilst every body else is commending these oysters, either with his tongue or with his teeth, so that one of the company sticks not to say that they are as much worth as if they contained each of them a pearl, you only seemed as unconcerned a spectator, as if you thought their proper use, like that of flowers, were rather to be looked on than to be eaten.

Lindamor. I confess, Eugenius, that I found myself more inclinable to reflect on what you are doing, than to keep you company in it; and whilst I saw such persons so gustfully swallow these extolled fishes, the sight led me to take more notice than perhaps you have done of the strange power of education and custom.

Eug. And what, I pray you, has custom to do with oysters?

Lind. You will soon know that, if I tell you, that I was considering on this occasion how forward we are to think other nations absurd or barbarous for such practices, that either the same or little better may be found unscrupled at among our selves; and I acknowledge it to be one of the chief advantages I account myself to have obtained by my travels, that as I do not easily admire, so I am not forward to deride, the practice of any people for being new, and am not apt to think their customs must be therefore worse than ours, because they widely differ from them.

I could give you store of instances to justify this impartiality; but because the circumstances of eating and drinking are those which make men with the greatest confidence term other nations brutish and barbarous, I will confine myself to some examples of that nature.

We impute it for a barbarous custom to many nations of the Indians, that like beasts they eat raw flesh. And pray how much is that worse than our eating raw fish, as we do in eating these oysters? Nor is this a practice of the rude vulgar only, but of the politest and nicest persons among us, such as physicians, divines, and even ladies. And our way of eating seems much more barbarous than theirs, since they are wont to kill before they eat, but we scruple not to devour oysters alive, and kill them not with our hands or teeth, but with our stomachs, where (for aught we know) they begin to be digested before they make an end of dying. Nay, sometimes when we dip them in vinegar, we may, for sauce to one bit, devour alive a shoal of little animals, which, whether they be fishes or worms, I am not so sure as I am that I have by the help of convenient glasses seen great numbers of them swimming up and down in less than a saucer full of vinegar.

We detest and despise some other nations for feeding upon caterpillars, grasshoppers, and other insects; and others for feeding upon carrion and stinking food.

And do not many of us do as bad, when we not only eat but extol rotten cheese, whose livid colour sufficiently betrays its putrefaction, and whose odious smell offends most men's noses and turns some men's stomachs? Nay, when this cheese is grown to that high degree of rottenness that our critical palates like it best in, we then devour whole hundreds of mites, which are really crawling insects, bred out of putrefaction, and these too are so numerous and little, that our greediness makes us swallow many of them alive. . . .

Eug. You put me in mind of a fancy of your friend Mr Boyle, who was saying that he had thoughts of making a short romantick story, where the scene should be laid in some island of the southern ocean, governed by some such rational laws and customs as those of Utopia, or the New Atlantis; and in this country he would introduce an observing native, that upon his return home from his travels made in Europe should give an account of our countries and manners under feigned names, and frequently intimate in his relations (or in his answers to questions that should be made him), the reasons of his wondering to find our customs so extravagant, and differing from those of his country. For your friend imagined that by such a way of proposing many of our practices, we should ourselves be brought unawares to condemn or perhaps laugh at them, and should at least cease to wonder to find other nations think them as extravagant as we think the manners of the Dutch and Spaniards, as they are represented in our travellers' books.

Lind. I dislike not the project, and wish it were prosecuted by somebody that being impartial were more a friend to fables. For when I consider that the name of Barbarian was given by the two noblest people of the earth, the Greeks and Romans, not only to all the rest of the world, but to one another, though both those nations were highly civilized, and the courtly Persians, and other voluptuous Asiatics were perhaps no less so than they; I doubt that most nations in styling one another's manners extravagant and absurd are guided more by education and partiality than reason; and that we laugh at many customs of strangers only because we never were bred to them, and prize many of our own only because we never considered them. And we may well believe that custom has much a larger empire than men seem to be aware of, since whole nations are wholly swayed by it that do not reckon themselves among its subjects, nor so much as dream that they are so.

THE RESTORATION.

THOUGH the greatest writer of his generation—Milton—strove with all the energy of despair to support the falling fabric of republicanism, to no section of the community was the restoration of Charles II. more welcome than to men of letters. Notable books had been published during the Civil Wars and Protectorate, but the chief literary product had been a rank crop of unprofitable pamphlets.

An immediate result of the Restoration was the revival of the drama. For nearly eighteen years the acting of plays had been prohibited, but at the Restoration permission was given for the establishment of two theatrical companies—the King's (under Thomas Killigrew) and the Duke's (under Sir William D'Avenant). Of the famous dramatists who flourished before the outbreak of the Civil Wars only one survived—James Shirley, who in 1659 had published The Contention of Ajax and Ulysses (written for a private entertainment), containing the fine and solemn song, 'The glories of our blood and State,' which Bowman the actor used to sing to Charles II. Several of Shirley's plays were revived at the Restoration (The Cardinal and The Traitor most frequently); but in the preface to The Contention he had announced that 'nothing of this nature shall after this engage either my pen or invention,' and he kept his word. He died in 1666; and in MacFlecknoe (1682) Dryden held up his works, with Thomas Heywood's, to derision. On the Restoration stage revivals of old plays—notably of Beaumont and Fletcher—were constantly produced, not seldom in garbled versions. The store of old dramatic poetry was ransacked from end to end by rapacious plagiarists. Shakespeare kept his popularity, though his plays were less frequently acted than Beaumont and Fletcher's; but irreverent playwrights did not hesitate to mutilate even Shakespeare's masterpieces by wanton and insipid 'alterations.'

The foremost part in restoring the fortunes of the theatre was taken by Sir William D'Avenant, who had written for the stage in the days of Charles I. He is not to be ranked with the elder and nobler dramatists, but he possessed high accomplishments and versatile abilities, and he never grew old. In his philosophical poem Gondibert he achieved a solid success. Some of his songs (notably 'The lark now leaves his watery nest') are of rare excellence. He was a devoted admirer of Shakespeare, but he had lived an exile in France, and came back a modern of the moderns. Dryden found him of 'so quick a fancy that nothing was proposed to him on which he could not suddenly produce a thought extremely pleasant and surprising.' Four years before the Restoration he had obtained leave from the authorities to produce at the Cockpit an operatic piece, The Siege of Rhodes. After the Restoration he wrote regularly for the stage, sometimes in conjunction with Dryden, down to the year of his death (1668). Too much attention was paid by D'Avenant to spectacular effects; but it cannot be denied that the personation of women's characters by women, instead of by boys as heretofore, was a welcome innovation.

One of the earliest of the Restoration dramatists was John Wilson, Recorder of London-derry, who wrote comedies of considerable merit on the model of Ben Jonson. To the Earl of Orrery was due the introduction of rhymed tragedies. Dryden followed Orrery's lead, and wrote play after play in rhymed heroics, mixing good poetry with intolerable fustian. Sir Robert Howard, Dryden's brother-in-law, also cultivated the heroic drama. John Crowne and, at about the same date, Nathaniel Lee—writers who sixty years earlier might have done excellent work—composed tragedies that, in spite of crudeness and violent exaggeration, have unmistakable power. Lee confined himself to tragedy; but Crowne, in Sir Courtly Nice, showed comic talent of a high order. The best picture of contemporary manners is to be found in the plays of Thomas Shadwell, whom Dryden assailed so bitterly. We must not look to Shadwell for poetry, though he was appointed poet-laureate at the Revolution; but in depicting the brisk, bustling life of the town he showed himself an apt pupil of the master in whose steps he essayed to tread—Ben Jonson. More refined than Shadwell was Sir George Etherege, who may claim to be the founder of 'artificial comedy' or 'comedy of manners.' Foremost among the writers of this school are Wycherley and Congreve. The licentiousness which disfigures the Restoration drama becomes in Wycherley's plays (valuable though they be for their vigorous satire and abundant mirth) positively revolting. For wit and brilliancy Congreve has never been surpassed; indeed, the wit and brilliancy are lavished with so free a hand as to cause at times a feeling of fatigue. In tragedy Congreve does not show to advantage. Tenderness and a measure of tragic power belonged to the ill-starred poet Thomas Otway, whose Orphan and Venice Preserved stirred by their pathos many generations of playgoers. Sir John Vanbrugh wisely refrained from attempting tragedy, but his comedies are very readable for their vivacious dialogue and dexterous plots. The plays of Mrs Aphra Behn, though they transgress the bounds of decency and decorum, are bustling and diverting. Mrs Manley's contributions to the stage may be safely neglected; but the farcical comedies of Mrs Centlivre will repay perusal. Thomas Southerne, an amiable poet, who was the friend of Dryden, and in his old age was complimented by Gray, wrote tragedy and comedy with equal facility. His Oroonoko, founded on Mrs Behn's once-famous romance, appealed effectively to sentimental audiences, and contains a few passages that rise above mediocrity. George Farquhar, who died at nine-and-twenty (in 1707), achieved a brilliant success with The Beaux' Stratagem, but in his less famous plays there is no lack of exuberant spirits and comic invention. Among playwrights who would claim notice in an extended survey of the drama are the Killigrews, Sir Charles Sedley, Lacy the actor, Ravenscroft (a brutal writer), honest Tom Durfey, and Elkanah Settle (whose Empress of Morocco is prized by collectors for the 'sculptures' with which it is adorned).

Dryden's supremacy in the drama was maintained throughout the later years of the seventeenth century. His first play, The Wild Gallant (1663), with a plot drawn (as frequently in Restoration plays) from Spanish sources, was a distinct failure; and The Rival Ladies, produced later in the same year, attained only a moderate success. He established his reputation firmly in 1667 by his Secret Love, which placed him at the head of contemporary playwrights. In 1671 the Duke of Buckingham, collaborating with Samuel Butler and others, held up the heroic drama to ridicule in that brilliant burlesque The Rehearsal (Dryden figuring therein as the poet Bayes); but Dryden's popularity was secure against all assaults—though not all his plays achieved success. In 1675 appeared the last of his rhymed tragedies, Aureng-Zebe, and for three years he ceased to write for the stage. In All for Love (1677-78) he abandoned rhyme, declaring, 'In my style I have professed to imitate the divine Shakespeare, which that I might perform freely, I have disencumbered myself from rhyme, not that I condemn my former way, but that it is more proper to my present purpose.' On the present occasion he wrote 'for himself'; his earlier plays were 'given to the people.' No notice, however brief, of Dryden's connection with the stage should fail to make mention of his admirably pithy and pointed prologues and epilogues, wherein he surpassed all his contemporaries.

In the Restoration drama we see reflected the dissolute manners of the court. The inevitable reaction against Puritanism had set in strongly, sweeping away the restraints prescribed by decency and good taste. Jeremy Collier's famous attack on contemporary playwrights, in his Short View (1698), was inspired by honest indignation. Not only does the drama of the Restoration and the Revolution offend by its grossness, but it leaves on the reader's mind an impression of ignobility and unreality. Only in an unheroic age would the impossible 'heroic tragedy' have been tolerated. In Elizabethan plays rant and bombast can be freely found (and grossness frequently abounds), but these faults are redeemed by the presence of fine poetry and exalted sentiment. Chapman in Bussy D'Ambois raved furiously, but his ravings were the frenzy of a poet; Dryden's extravagances, or Crowne's, or Lee's, simply provoke the reader's impatient derision. The ignobility of the Restoration drama is shown most clearly by reference to Molière. With avidity the English dramatists seized the delicate creations of the French master, and produced coarse, depraved imitations—turning pure gold to dross.

In non-dramatic poetry Dryden established his supremacy even more firmly than in the drama. Milton was to publish Paradise Lost, Paradise Regained, and Samson Agonistes, but into a discussion on Restoration poetry Milton's name must not come, for he stands aloof and afar from the Restoration writers—in solitary grandeur, unregarding and unregarded. Never was a poet more divinely inspired than Milton's friend Andrew Marvell, when he wrote in earlier manhood, 'Where the remote Bermudas ride,' and his garden fancies, 'How vainly men themselves amaze,' but at the Restoration he became more scurrilous in his satires than a fishwife. The oldest surviving poet was George Wither (born in 1588), who far back in the days of James I. had written fresh-coloured eclogues and delightful songs. Always an ardent reformer, he had suffered imprisonment in youth for his outspoken satires. Through the Civil Wars his sword and pen had been freely used in the service of the Parliament. At the Restoration his possessions were confiscated and he was flung into prison, where he still continued to issue pamphlet after pamphlet. Released in 1663, he ended his stormy career four years later. It is no light task to read even the titles of his multitudinous productions. That joyous lyrist Robert Herrick, who was only three years younger than Wither, had given to the world his Hesperides and Noble Numbers in 1647-48. At the Restoration he was reinstated in his Devonshire rectory, and there died in 1674. No lyrical poet's fame is more secure to-day than Herrick's, but his fame suffered neglect for upwards of a century. The wits of the Restoration reserved their warmest praise for Edmund Waller (1605-87), whose verses to Sacharissa are occasionally models of pointed felicity, and who undoubtedly did much to perfect the form of the heroic couplet. Dryden declared in 1664 that 'the excellence and dignity of rhyme were never fully known till Mr Waller taught it;' but Dryden's eulogy was far too extravagant. Much of Waller's writing (and he wrote comparatively little) is cold and laboured. Another poet whom it was the fashion of the age to overpraise was Sir John Denham, author of the descriptive poem Cooper's Hill, which contains the justly celebrated address to the Thames. Great, too, was the fame of Abraham Cowley, a poet who has been badly treated by posterity. When criticism has said its last word about Cowley's tortured and inept conceits, his harshness and obscurity, the frigidity of his love-poems, and the chaotic metre of his Pindariques, a few readers in every age will be attracted by the tenderness and sincerity of his elegies, the eloquence and weightiness of his didactic verse, the archness and sprightliness (though the note of genuine passion be wanting) of the group of poems devoted to his imaginary 'Mistress.' His best work was done long before the Restoration, and in later life his poetical efforts were chiefly confined to the penning of Pindariques—irregular, bastard odes that pleased the town and set a bad example to younger writers. D'Avenant's Gondibert was written in the long rhymed quatrains that Sir John Davies had employed in Nosce Teipsum, and Dryden followed D'Avenant when he chose this stately but somewhat wearisome metre for Annus Mirabilis. Very different was the metre employed by Samuel Butler in Hudibras. This witty and whimsical satire on the Puritans is written in rhymed octosyllables that hurry the reader along willy-nilly. Butler's ingenuity in rhyming was simply astonishing. Rhymed octosyllables had been employed not unsuccessfully by previous writers for lampoons, but as a metrical funambulist Butler is unequalled. Moreover, by his force of genius he was able to make this skimble-skamble metre a fitting vehicle for heightened descriptive poetry and profound moral reflection. Charles Cotton, a man of varied accomplishments, in Scarronides attempted to write in Hudibrastic verse, but showed more indelicacy than wit. That he was, however, a genuine poet his New Year verses (admired by Charles Lamb and Wordsworth) and his poetical addresses to Izaak Walton amply testify. Other poets who resembled Cotton in the extent and variety of their attainments were Thomas Stanley and Sir Richard Fanshawe; the former translated Anacreon, the latter Il Pastor Fido, and both wrote graceful original poetry. A greater poet than these was Henry Vaughan, who—taking George Herbert for his model—excelled his master. After keeping silence for nearly thirty years, he published in 1678 his last volume, Thalia Rediviva, containing many poems that are evidently early pieces, but some that were written after the Restoration. Among his friends was Mrs Katherine Philips, 'the matchless Orinda,' who presided over a literary coterie at Cardigan, translated with the help of friends some plays of Corneille, and published a volume of miscellaneous poems, which was praised by Cowley and Dryden. Another lady who cultivated poetry and patronised poets was the fantastic Duchess of Newcastle, best known by her biography of her husband (who befriended Shirley, and wrote plays in which Shirley had a hand). Her verse is diffuse and rambling, but in an artificial age she had a feeling for Nature, and has left some happy descriptive passages—such as we find later in the writings of Anne Finch, Countess of Winchester (1660–1720). The poetic achievements of these titled ladies were, it must be allowed, far surpassed by the notorious Mrs Behn, whose songs at their best are hard to beat.

Dryden's first mature poem was his Heroic Stanzas (written in his twenty-eighth year) on the death of Oliver Cromwell (1658). Elsewhere will be found (pages 791 to 797) a record and estimate of his long and varied life-work. He continued working to the end, though his health was failing fast. His Fables—renderings from Chaucer, Boccaccio, and Ovid—were published at the end of 1699; and only a few days before his death (1st May 1700) he had written a prologue and epilogue for a revival of Fletcher's Pilgrim. No sign of decaying power is noticeable in the Fables. But with all his high and varied accomplishments, Dryden could not write such songs as may be found by the score among the Elizabethan dramatists. The songs scattered through his plays are well turned and tunable, but they lack the incommunicable charm of the earlier singers. To the highest regions of romantic poetry he could not ascend. But he sharpened the weapons of satire so effectively that even Pope could hardly put a finer edge upon them; he made the heroic couplet an eloquent vehicle for philosophical argument; and in his best epistles he showed more sincerity than Horace, and hardly inferior art.

In satire Dryden's aptest pupil was Oldham, who died at thirty, and to whose memory the master paid a fine tribute. A crowd of writers essayed satire, but their efforts are chiefly marked by dullness and obscurity. The most licentious was Rochester; but he must not be held responsible for all the scurrilous effusions that were fathered upon him, and it must be allowed that he had genuine talent for song-writing. Sir Charles Sedley wrote numerous gay and sparkling songs (occasionally with too much freedom), and the generous Lord Dorset handled lyric verse lightly. Thomas Flatman, the miniaturist, wrote Pindariques (after Cowley) execrably; but his poems inspired by meditations on death are profoundly impressive. John Sheffield, Earl of Mulgrave, afterwards Duke of Buckinghamshire, gained some applause by his Essay on Satire (1679) and Essay on Poetry (1682), the former containing a bitter attack on Rochester; and Wentworth Dillon, Earl of Roscommon, was extravagantly lauded for his Essay on Translated Verse. At the close of the century two physicians made some stir in the world of letters. Sir Richard Blackmore—'everlasting Blackmore'—published huge epics which provoked the derision of the wits; but the more furiously they lampooned him the faster he wrote, issuing folio after folio until out of sheer weariness they forbore to attack. The other was Sir Samuel Garth, a genial, cultivated man, the friend of Dryden and Pope. His fame rests—not too securely—on The Dispensary (1699), a mock-heroic satire that has lost its savour. Thomas D'Urfey (Tom Durfey), if only for his Winchester Wedding, should not be passed over; and he did really valuable service by collecting together, from every quarter, songs old and new in his Pills to Purge Melancholy. One of his own most popular songs, 'She rose and let me in,' was Scotticised, and wrongly attributed to Francis Sempill of Beltrees, author of the oldest version of 'Auld Langsyne' (Ebsworth's Roxburghe Ballads, vol. vi. pp. 193–199). The Anacreontics of John Oldmixon had a vein of sprightliness; but Pope consigned him to eternal infamy in The Dunciad. A playful poem, The Despairing Lover, by Pope's friend William Walsh, has found a place in modern anthologies; and Peter Anthony Motteux' 'Man is for the woman made' is still remembered. But never was English poetry in a more deplorable condition than in 1700—when Dryden died and the author of The Castle of Indolence was born.

It is commonly held that, though poetry deteriorated at the Restoration, prose was improved and refined; and Dryden is regarded by competent critics as 'the great reformer of English prose.' In the second half of the seventeenth century prose certainly began to be written with more orderliness, plainness, and conciseness; but these qualities, valuable though they be, were obtained at a heavy sacrifice. At the Restoration two writers were alive whose prose has never been surpassed for lofty, sustained eloquence—the royalist physician Sir Thomas Browne, and the Puritan poet Milton. No lessons in style were needed by Browne or Milton from their younger contemporaries. Nor is it easy to see how the enduring charm of Walton's Compleat Angler could have been heightened by added graces from any later hand. Fuller will outlive South—his witty periods were richer in terse epigram and more graciously attired. Jeremy Taylor, who combines the ripe wisdom of the man of the world with the spiritual ecstasy of the divine, is widely read to-day, while Tillotson and Stillingfleet are coldly remembered and Sherlock is forgotten. When we turn from divinity to philosophy, we cannot but admit that Hobbes wrote with a force and incisiveness that were denied to Locke. The difference between the older school and the newer is nowhere more clearly seen than in comparing Clarendon's History of the Rebellion with Burnet's History of my own Time. Not only is Clarendon more generous and just in his judgments, but his diction has the weight and dignity that befit a serious historian, while Burnet writes in the facile style of modern journalism.

Few have written better prose than Cowley, whose essays have a leisurely, unstudied grace that contrasts strangely with the violent conceits of his Pindariques. Something of the same charm is found in the writings of Sir William Temple, particularly when he is discoursing on the subject of gardens. Another authority on gardening and forestry was John Evelyn, a high-minded country gentleman, whose Diary contains much information on the history and social life of the second half of the seventeenth century. Evelyn viewed with anxious concern the dissolute life of the king and the court, and gravely animadverted in his Diary on the 'inexpressible luxury and profaneness' that prevailed. But we must turn to another diarist, Samuel Pepys, if we wish to see a lively picture of Restoration society. Pepys was at once a hard-working official and frivolous man of pleasure; and in his Diary—the most astonishing record of its kind in existence—he set down, for several years together, in minutest detail his day-to-day experiences, never imagining that the key to the cipher in which it was written would one day be found, and that the frank confessions of his foibles and follies would be printed for the instruction and amusement of posterity.

Some of the best memoirs in the language belong to the second half of the seventeenth century. Walton's fragrant Lives, delightful in their artless simplicity, were written at various times, the earliest being the Life of Donne (1640), and the latest the Life of Bishop Sanderson (1678). On the Puritan side is Mrs Hutchinson's Life of her husband, Colonel Hutchinson, which is deservedly popular; but the Duchess of Newcastle—'Mad Madge,' whom Lamb chivalrously exalted—merits as full a recognition, while Lady Fanshawe is perhaps the most fascinating of the three. With these memoirs may be placed the letters of Dorothy Osborne, written a few years before the Restoration (1652-54), to her affianced husband, Sir William Temple. Such books as Ludlow's Memoirs and Whitelocke's Memorials appeal to the historical student rather than to the lover of literature. A capital, but unedifying, sketch of the court of Charles II. is afforded by the Mémoires which the Comte de Grammont dictated early in the next century, in his old age, to his brother-in-law, Anthony Hamilton. Very entertaining and very valuable is the posthumous Lives of the Norths, by Roger North (1653-1734), who—having secured, by the practice of the law, an ample fortune—retired at the Revolution (being an honest nonjuror) to his estate at Rougham, Norfolk, where he lived the life of a country gentleman, and amused himself in later years by writing memoirs of his distinguished kinsmen.

After the Restoration the study of natural science made great strides. The Royal Society, incorporated in 1662, grew out of some scientific meetings held at Oxford in the rooms of Dr John Wilkins, President of Wadham. This liberal divine is the author of some curious and fantastic treatises, written with ease and elegance. Dr Isaac Barrow was equally eminent as a mathematician and theologian. In 1669 he resigned his chair of Lucasian Professor of Mathematics to the greatest of all natural philosophers, Sir Isaac Newton. Robert Boyle, a son of Richard Boyle, Earl of Cork, cultivated natural science with success, but his moral Reflections are superficial and prolix. Theology and natural science were closely connected in the early days of the Royal Society, men of science (Newton among them) writing on theology, and theologians discussing scientific subjects. John Ray, the botanist, published in 1691 The Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation, which was widely and deservedly popular. Dr Thomas Burnet's Sacred Theory of the Earth combines high imagination with gorgeous wealth of expression. A most interesting group of writers were the 'Cambridge Platonists'—Henry More, Cudworth, Glanville, and others—profoundly learned men, steeped in mysticism.

The ranks of Dissent furnished many admirable writers. Richard Baxter's Call to the Unconverted and Saints' Everlasting Rest were as widely popular as The Whole Duty of Man (ascribed to Richard Allestree, Provost of Eton). In his old age, when he published his autobiography, Baxter became very tolerant of the opinions of others, and very critical of himself. Quakerism was well represented by the Journal of George Fox, Barclay's Apology, William Penn's No Cross, no Crown ('a most capital book, good thoughts in good language,' wrote Lamb to Coleridge), and the autobiography of Milton's young friend, Thomas Ellwood. To a Dissenter, John Bunyan, we owe the most popular religious work in the English language, Pilgrim's Progress. The Bible and Foxe's Book of Martyrs were Bunyan's prison companions; and Pilgrim's Progress, with its story of Christian's difficulties, is written in language of the bare simplicity of the Book of Genesis—language that lives in the heart of the people. Allegories are usually tedious; Pilgrim's Progress was a shining exception, but the more laboured Holy War is at times fatiguing. Bunyan's humour and irony were well displayed in his Life and Death of Mr Badman.

During the Civil Wars the French heroical romances found readers, translators, and imitators in England; and these interminable productions maintained their vogue at the Restoration. John Crowne, the Earl of Orrery, Sir Henry North, and others wrote romances—quite unreadable to-day—after the manner of Madeleine de Scudéry and La Calprenède. The modern novel had not been born, but Mrs Behn—in her humanitarian romance Oroonoko—has been claimed as a forerunner of Rousseau.

In criticism as in poetry Dryden was unrivalled. He was often captious in his judgments, but his critical dissertations are models of felicitous writing—flexible and forcible, neither ornate nor bare. For criticism and exposition no style could be better than Dryden's; and the last piece of prose to which he set his hand (the preface to his Fables) shows all his good qualities in full perfection—his clear and vigorous understanding, his adroitness and versatility, his large-heartedness, his pride of spirit, his manly blend of patience and disdain. An enlightened critic was John Dennis, Milton's admirer, who has never recovered from the attack made upon him by Pope. At the close of the seventeenth century Thomas Rymer, historiographer, put forward some extraordinary views about Shakespeare, denouncing Othello as 'a bloody farce without salt or savour.' His Tragedies of the Last Age is entertaining, but it is hard to believe that he was writing seriously. Milton's nephews, John and Edward Phillips, who were educated by their uncle, had a love for letters. Edward Phillips published an interesting anthology, The Mysteries of Love and Eloquence, and Theatrum Poetarum, an account of the English poets, in which Milton is traditionally supposed to have revised the notice of Shakespeare. A valuable Account of the English Dramatic Poets (enlarged from his earlier work Momus Triumphant, 1687) was published in 1691 by Gerard Langbaine the younger, who showed with some humour and gusto how the later writers had freely plagiarised from the old playwrights whom they affected to despise. In 1698 Jeremy Collier startled the town with his Short View of the Immorality and Profaneness of the English Stage, in which he sturdily attacked Dryden, Congreve, Wycherley, Vanbrugh, and others. Some of Collier's strictures betray petulant intolerance, but this tractate—to which Congreve, Vanbrugh, and others replied—was by no means deficient in good sense and sound judgment; and its publication had a salutary effect.

Much attention was devoted in the later years of the seventeenth century to the study of historical antiquities. It was the age of Dugdale, Strype, Rymer, Anthony Wood, Aubrey, and many other curious inquirers. In economics Sir William Petty and Sir Josiah Child achieved high distinction. The finest classical scholar that England ever produced—Richard Bentley—published his famous Dissertation on Phalaris in 1698. Two unscrupulous controversialists, Needham and L'Estrange, claim notice as pioneers of the modern newspaper press.

'I question whether in Charles II.'s reign English did not come to its full perfection; and whether it has not had its Augustan age as well as the Latin.' So wrote the anonymous critic—doubtless Francis Atterbury—who contributed the Preface to the Second Part of Waller's Poems, 1690. 'But posterity,' he adds, 'will best judge of this.' Posterity has judged that Waller's services to English poetry were greatly overestimated by his contemporaries, and that the Restoration poets—whether lyric or dramatic—were far inferior to their Elizabethan and Jacobean predecessors. The influence of Donne had powerfully affected the Caroline poets, who reproduced his extravagant conceits so closely that it is hard at times to distinguish the master's hand from the pupil's. But these imitators, able as they were (such men as Carew, Randolph, and Cleveland), could not follow him in his higher flights. It was inevitable that there should be a reaction in the direction of 'smoothness,' and Waller set the example of writing smoothly. Among prose-writers a similar movement set in. Elaborate and intricate periods were exchanged for an easier and simpler style. Younger writers cultivated lucidity of expression, and their prose—though it lacked the stateliness and energy that distinguished the Elizabethan writers—is engagingly frank and straightforward.

However necessary it may be for convenience of treatment to divide the writers of the seventeenth century into chronological series—Elizabethan, Jacobean, Caroline, Restoration, Revolution—it is well to remember that those most strictly contemporary were often separated in tone and temper by a wide gulf, and that the continuous succession cannot be broken up without some arbitrariness. Wither, who, as we have seen, was famous in James I.'s time, was imprisoned for his satire on a Restoration Parliament. Milton, an approved poet by 1630, wrote most of Paradise Lost under Charles II. Dryden, whose first-fruits date from 1650, was still writing for the press in the very last year of the century. Many of the authors of 'good King Charles's golden days' were even more conspicuous under William and Mary; and some of them lived on well into the period of Queen Anne. Hence some of those just named in connection with the Restoration period will be found treated in an earlier, some in a later, section of this work.

Though the second half of the seventeenth century was not one of the great ages of English literature, it was a time of varied intellectual activity. The drama merely supplied amusement for a dissolute court, and high romantic poetry was dead. But the spirit of speculation was abroad, and keen intellects were engaged in searching 'Nature's infinite book of secrecy.' An age which nurtured Newton, Bunyan, Dryden, and Locke can never be described as barren.

A. H. BULLEN.

Samuel Butler.

The author of Hudibras, the most brilliant satiric-comic genius our country has ever produced, was born in 1612 at Strensham, Worcestershire, the son of a farmer, a yeoman of small estate. From Worcester grammar-school Samuel Butler went, says Wood, 'as his brother, now living, affirms, to the university of Cambridge; yet others of the neighbourhood say to Oxon, but whether true I cannot tell.' As clerk to a justice of the peace, Mr Jeffreys of Earls-Croome, Worcestershire, he occupied his leisure with music and painting. He was afterwards in the service of the Countess of Kent at Wrest, in Bedfordshire, where he had the use of a library and conversed with Selden, who often employed him as amanuensis; he also at this time made the friendship of Samuel Cooper, the miniaturist. He is next said to have been clerk to the Puritan Sir Samuel Luke, of Cople Hoo, near Bedford. Luke was one of Cromwell's officers—scoutmaster for Bedfordshire—and was doubtless marked by the convictions and usages of his party; a post under him would have been a trying one for such a wit and humorist, even had his gifts not made him a royalist. Daily exposed to association with persons whose character he could not but dislike, Butler conceived the design of a general satire on the sectaries. The matchless fiction of Cervantes supplied him with a model, in which he had to substitute the extravagances of political and religious fanaticism—even more absurdly exaggerated by the caricaturist—for those of chivalry. Butler is generally said to have satirised Luke himself in Sir Hudibras:

'Tis sung, there is a valiant Mamaluke
In foreign land, yclep'd—
To whom we oft have been compar'd
For person, parts, address and beard.

But this assumption, though not improbable, is by no means certain, and the picture could not have been designed to be a recognisable portrait. Luke is an odd link between two men so widely apart as Butler and Bunyan (see page 719).

The Restoration threw a faint and brief sunshine over the life of Butler. He was appointed secretary to the Earl of Carbery, president of the principality of Wales; and when the Wardenship of the Marches was revived, the Earl made his secretary steward of Ludlow Castle. The poet, now fifty years of age, seemed to add to his security for the future by marrying a widow named Herbert, who was of good family and fortune; but this prospect proved delusive, in consequence of the failure of persons on whom the lady's fortune depended. It was now that Butler appeared as an author. The first part of Hudibras was published in 1663, and immediately became popular. Its wit, so suited to the taste of the time, and the breadth of the satiric pictures, for which most men could doubtless supply prototypes from memory, could not fail to give it extensive currency. By the Earl of Dorset, an accomplished friend of letters, it was introduced to the court; and the king is said to have had pleasure in reading and quoting it. A second part appeared in 1664, and a third in 1678. But though the poet and his work won the praise of all ranks, from royalty downwards, he was himself little benefited by it; the later part of his life was spent in poverty and obscurity in London. The Earl of Clarendon was said to have promised him a place at court he never got; the king to have granted him but three hundred pounds—which went to his creditors; and he was favoured with an interview with the Duke of Buckingham, who, seeing two court-ladies pass, ran out to them, and did not come back. Such are the incidents reported as having checkered twenty years of obscure misery. Butler died in Rose Street, Covent Garden, 25th September 1680, and was buried in St Paul's Churchyard, Covent Garden, the expense of his funeral being defrayed by his friend William Longueville of the Temple. He is described as 'of a leonine-coloured hair, sanguine, choleric, middle-sized, strong.'

SAMUEL BUTLER.

From the Picture by E. Lutterell in the National Portrait Gallery.

It is rarely that a pasquinade written to satirise living characters or systems outlives its own age; when it does, we may well conclude that there is something remarkable as well in the work as in its author. Such a work is Hudibras, the Cavalier burlesque of the extreme views and rigid manners of the English Puritans of the Civil War and Commonwealth. Marked alike by the ingenuity of its versification and the profusion of its wit, this marvellous medley still retains its place amongst the classic monuments of English literature, although it is seldom read through at once—a test for which its incessant brilliancy in some measure unfits it. Yet it is not only the best burlesque on the Puritans of that age, so fertile in satire, but is the best burlesque in the English tongue. Such wealth of knowledge of the world, not always unkindly cynicism, wit, shrewdness, acute suggestion, felicitous illustration, and irresistible drollery has never been comprised within the same limits. The idea of the knight, Sir Hudibras, going out 'a-colonelling' with his squire Ralph, is of course imitated from Cervantes; but the filling-up of the story is original. Don Quixote presents us with a wide range of adventures which interest the imagination and the feelings; there is a tenderness and romance about the Spanish hero, a tone of high honour and chivalry, which was in nowise cognate to Butler's scheme. His aim was to cast ridicule on the whole body of the English Puritans, especially their leaders, and to debase them by low and vulgar associations. In many of their proceedings, no doubt, there was ground for sarcasm. The affected dress, language, and manners of some of them, their fanatical legislation against walking in the fields on Sundays, village May-poles, and other unimportant matters, were fair subjects for the satirical poet; and their religious zeal led them into intolerance and absurdity. Contending for so dear a prize as liberty (and constraint) of conscience, and believing that they were specially appointed to shake and overturn the old corruptions of the kingdom, the Puritans were hardly guided by prudence, policy, or forbearance. Even Milton, the friend and associate of the party, was forced to admit that 'New Presbyter was but Old Priest writ large.' The higher qualities of these men, their indomitable courage and lofty zeal, were of course overlooked or despised by their royalist opponents, and Butler did not choose to remember them. His burlesque was read with delight, and was popular for generations after the more eccentric Puritans had merged into the sober English Dissenters. The plot or action of Hudibras is narrow and defective, and seems only to have been used as a sort of peg on which the satirist could hang his caricatures and allusions. The first cantos were written early, when the Civil War commenced, but we are immediately carried on to the death of Cromwell, at least fifteen years later, and have a sketch of public affairs to the dissolution of the Rump Parliament. The idea of a Presbyterian justice sallying out with his attendant, an Independent clerk, to redress superstition and correct abuses, is sufficiently preposterous, and the incredible extravagance is maintained by the dialogues between the parties, however witty and ludicrous; by their attack on the bear and the fiddle; their imprisonment in the stocks; the voluntary penance of whipping submitted to by the knight, and his adventures with his lady. The love of Hudibras is almost as outré as that of Falstaff, and he argues in the same manner for the utmost freedom; men having nothing but 'frail vows' to oppose to the stratagems of the fair. This kind of deliberate outrage on Puritanism was not peculiar to Butler, who makes his hero thus moralise:

For women first were made for men,
Not men for them: It follows, then,
That men have right to every one,
And they no freedom of their own;
And therefore men have power to choose,
But they no charter to refuse.
Hence 'tis apparent that, what course
Soe'er we take to your amours,
Though by the indirectest way,
'Tis no injustice nor foul play;
And that you ought to take that course
As we take you, for better or worse,
And gratefully submit to those Who you, before another, chose.

The poem was left unfinished, but even King Charles's contemporaries would hardly have demanded much more of it. There is a plethora of wit in Hudibras, and an artificial terseness of thought and style which becomes oppressive and tiresome. After thirty or forty pages, the reader is fain to seek a change of subject or of occupation. But many of the short burlesque descriptions are inimitable. In the Morning—

The sun has long since, in the lap
Of Thetis, taken out his nap,
And, like a lobster boiled, the morn
From black to red began to turn.

At Night—

The sun grew low, and left the skies,
Put down, some write, by ladies' eyes;
The moon pulled off her veil of light,
That hides her face by day from sight—
Mysterious veil, of brightness made,
That's both her lustre and her shade—
And in the lantern of the night,
With shining horns hung out her light;
For darkness is the proper sphere,
Where all false glories use to appear.
The twinkling stars began to muster,
And glitter with their borrowed lustre;
While sleep the wearied world relieved,
By counterfeiting death revived.

Many of the lines and similes in Hudibras are completely incorporated with the language—such as the opening lines of Part II. canto iii.:

Doubtless the pleasure is as great
Of being cheated as to cheat;

As lookers-on feel most delight
That least perceive a juggler's sleight;
And still the less they understand,
The more they admire his sleight-of-hand.

Or where, on the head of money, the knight asks:

For what in worth is anything,
But so much money as 'twill bring?

Accomplishments of Hudibras.

When civil dudgeon first grew high,
And men fell out, they knew not why:
When hard words, jealousies, and fears,
Set folks together by the ears,
And made them fight, like mad or drunk,
For Dame Religion as for punk;
Whose honesty they all durst swear for,
Though not a man of them knew wherefore:
When gospel-trumpeter, surrounded
With long-eared rout, to battle sounded,
And pulpit, drum ecclesiastic,
Was beat with fist, instead of a stick:
Then did Sir Knight abandon dwelling,
And out he rode a-colonelling.

A wight he was, whose very sight would Entitle him mirror of knighthood;
That never bowed his stubborn knee
To anything but chivalry;
Nor put up blow, but that which laid
Right-worshipful on shoulder-blade:
Chief of domestic knights and errant,
Either for cartel or for warrant:
Great on the bench, great in the saddle,
That could as well bind o'er, as swaddle: cudgel
Mighty he was at both of these,
And styled of war as well as peace.
(So some rats, of amphibious nature,
Are either for the land or water.)
But here our authors make a doubt,
Whether he were more wise or stout;
Some hold the one, and some the other:
I ut howsoe'er they make a pother,
The difference was so small, his brain
Outweighed his rage but half a grain;
Which made some take him for a tool
That knaves do work with, called a fool.
For't has been held by many, that
As Montaigne, playing with his cat,
Complains she thought him but an ass,
Much more she would Sir Hudibras.
(For that's the name our valiant knight
To all his challenges did write.)
But they're mistaken very much;
'Tis plain enough he was no such:
We grant, although he had much wit,
He was very shy of using it;
As being loath to wear it out,
And therefore bore it not about,
Unless on holidays or so,
As men their best apparel do;
Beside, 'tis known he could speak Greek
As naturally as pigs squeak;
That Latin was no more difficile,
Than to a blackbird 'tis to whistle:
Being rich in both, he never scanted
His bounty unto such as wanted;

But much of either would afford
To many that had not one word,
For Hebrew roots, although they're found
To flourish most in barren ground,
He had such plenty as sufficed
To make some think him circumcised. . . .

He was in logic a great critic,
Profoundly skilled in analytic;
He could distinguish, and divide
A hair 'twixt south and south-west side;
On either which he would dispute,
Confute, change hands, and still confute;
He'd undertake to prove by force
Of argument a man's no horse;
He'd prove a buzzard is no fowl,
And that a lord may be an owl,
A calf an alderman, a goose a justice,
And rooks committee-men and trustees.
He'd run in debt by disputation,
And pay with ratiocination:
All this by syllogism true
In mood and figure he would do.

For rhetoric, he could not ope
His mouth but out there flew a trope;
And when he happened to break off
I' th' middle of his speech, or cough,
H' had hard words, ready to shew why,
And tell what rules he did it by:
Else, when with greatest art he spoke,
You'd think he talked like other folk;
For all a rhetorician's rules
Teach nothing but to name his tools.
But when he pleased to shew 't, his speech
In loftiness of sound was rich;
A Babylonish dialect,
Which learned pedants much affect:
It was a party-coloured dress
Of patched and piebald languages;
'Twas English cut on Greek and Latin,
Like fustian heretofore on satin.
It had an odd promiscuous tone,
As if he had talked three parts in one;
Which made some think, when he did gabble,
Th' had heard three labourers of Babel;
Or Cerberus himself pronounce
A leash of languages at once.
This he as volubly would vent
As if his stock would ne'er be spent;
And truly, to support that charge,
He had supplies as vast and large:
For he could coin and counterfeit
New words, with little or no wit;
Words so debased and hard, no stone
Was hard enough to touch them on:
And when with hasty noise he spoke 'em,
The ignorant for current took 'em;
That had the orator, who once
Did fill his mouth with pebble-stones
When he harangued, but known his phrase,
He would have used no other ways.
In mathematics he was greater Than Tycho Brahe or Erra Pater,
For he by geometric scale
Could take the size of pots of ale;
Resolve by sines and tangents straight
If bread or butter wanted weight;

A Jewish doctor to whom various astrological works were ascribed.

And wisely tell what hour o' th' day
The clock did strike, by algebra.

His Religion.

For his religion, it was fit
To match his learning and his wit.
'Twas Presbyterian true-blue;
For he was of that stubborn crew
Of errant saints, whom all men grant
To be the true church militant;
Such as do build their faith upon
The holy text of pike and gun;
Decide all controversy by Infallible artillery;
And prove their doctrine orthodox
By apostolic blows and knocks;
Call fire, and sword, and desolation,
A godly thorough reformation,
Which always must be carried on,
And still be doing, never done;
As if religion were intended
For nothing else but to be mended;
A sect whose chief devotion lies
In odd perverse antipathies;
In falling out with that or this,
And finding somewhat still amiss;
More peevish, cross, and splenetic,
Than dog distract or monkey sick; distraught
That with more care keep holiday
The wrong, than others the right way;
Compound for sins they are inclined to,
By damning those they have no mind to.
Still so perverse and opposite,
As if they worshipped God for spite;
The self-same thing they will abhor
One way, and long another for;
Free-will they one way disavow,
Another, nothing else allow;
All piety consists therein
In them, in other men all sin;
Rather than fail, they will defy
That which they love most tenderly;
Quarrel with minced pies, and disparage
Their best and dearest friend,* plum-porridge;
Fat pig and goose itself oppose,
And blaspheme custard through the nose.

His Outer Man.

His tawny beard was th' equal grace
Both of his wisdom and his face;
In cut and dye so like a tile,
A sudden view it would beguile;
The upper part thereof was whey,
The nether, orange, mixed with gray.
This hairy meteor did denounce
The fall of sceptres and of crowns;
With grisly type did represent
Declining age of government;
And tell with hieroglyphic spade
Its own grave and the state's were made.
Like Samson's heart-breakers, it grew love-locks
In time to make a nation rue;
Though it contributed its own fall,
To wait upon the public downfall;
It was monastic, and did grow
In holy orders by strict vow;

Of rule as sullen and severe,
 As that of rigid Cordelier ;
 'Twas bound to suffer persecution,
 And martyrdom with resolution ;
 To oppose itself against the hate
 And vengeance of th' incensed state,
 In whose defiance it was worn,
 Still ready to be pulled and torn ;
 With red-hot irons to be tortured,
 Reviled, and spit upon, and martyred ;
 Maugre all which 'twas to stand fast
 As long as monarchy should last ;
 But when the state should hap to reel,
 'Twas to submit to fatal steel,
 And fall, as it was consecrate,
 A sacrifice to fall of state ;
 Whose thread of life the fatal Sisters
 Did twist together with its whiskers,
 And twine so close, that Time should never,
 In life or death, their fortunes sever ;
 But with his rusty sickle mow
 Both down together at a blow. . . .

His doublet was of sturdy buff,
 And though not sword, yet cudgel proof ;
 Whereby 'twas fitter for his use,
 Who feared no blows but such as bruise.
 His breeches were of rugged woollen,
 And had been at the siege of Bullen ;
 To old king Harry so well known,
 Some writers held they were his own ;
 Through they were lined with many a piece
 Of ammunition, bread and cheese,
 And fat black-puddings, proper food
 For warriors that delight in blood ;
 For, as we said, he always chose
 To carry victual in his hose,
 That often tempted rats and mice
 The ammunition to surprise ;
 And when he put a hand but in
 The one or t' other magazine,
 They stoutly on defence on 't stood,
 And from the wounded foe drew blood ;
 And till they were stormed and beaten out,
 Ne'er left the fortified redoubt ;
 And though knights-errant, as some think,
 Of old, did neither eat nor drink,
 Because when thorough deserts vast
 And regions desolate they passed,
 Where belly-timber above ground,
 Or under, was not to be found,
 Unless they grazed, there's not one word
 Of their provision on record ;
 Which made some confidently write
 They had no stomachs but to fight.
 'Tis false, for Arthur wore in hall
 Round table like a farthingal ;
 On which, with shirt pulled out behind,
 And eke before, his good knights dined ;
 Though 'twas no table some suppose,
 But a huge pair of round trunk-hose,
 In which he carried as much meat
 As he and all the knights could eat ;
 When laying by their swords and truncheons,
 They took their breakfasts or their nuncheons.
 But let that pass at present, lest
 We should forget where we digressed,

Boulogne,
 1544

As learned authors use, to whom
 We leave it, and to th' purpose come.

His puissant sword unto his side,
 Near his undaunted heart, was tied,
 With basket-hilt that would hold broth,
 And serve for fight and dinner both ;
 In it he melted lead for bullets
 To shoot at foes, and sometimes pullets,
 To whom he bore so fell a grutch.
 He ne'er gave quarter t' any such.
 The trenchant blade, Toledo trusty,
 For want of fighting, was grown rusty,
 And ate into itself, for lack
 Of somebody to hew and hack :
 The peaceful scabbard where it dwelt,
 The rancour of its edge had felt ;
 For of the lower end two handful
 It had devoured, 'twas so manful,
 And so much scorned to lurk in case,
 As if it durst not shew its face. . . .

This sword a dagger had, his page,
 That was but little for his age ;
 And therefore waited on him so
 As dwarfs upon knights-errant do :
 It was a serviceable dudgeon,
 Either for fighting, or for drudging :
 When it had stabbed, or broke a head,
 It would scrape trenchers, or chip bread ;
 Toast cheese or bacon, though it were
 To bait a mouse-trap, would not care :
 'Twould make clean shoes, and in the earth
 Set leeks and onions, and so forth :
 It had been 'prentice to a brewer, a hit at Cromwell
 Where this and more it did endure,
 But left the trade, as many more
 Have lately done on the same score.

Butler was not the first to write politico-religious satire in burlesque somewhat of this kind ; Hudibrasms have been pointed out in Cleveland (see page 636), for example, and other wits and satirists. But the mirthfulness of Butler's matter, the trenchant point of his sarcasms, and his extraordinary mastery of those rough-and-tumble octosyllabic couplets gave him a unique position in our literature. His incredibly clever work is too uncouth to be called a classic ; but it has become a conspicuous, characteristic, and imperishable part of English literature. It was soon imitated on all hands : Welsh, Irish, Scottish, and even High and Low Dutch Hudibrases were routed out. In the next century there were over a score of nameworthy imitations ; and to this day inconvenient persons in Church and State, in society and literature, have been 'pummelled and pounded with Hudibrastic cudgels,' though never again with the skill and effect Butler had at command when his rough-hewn weapon was new.

After his death several spurious compilations of his other literary remains were issued (1716-20) ; but out of fifty pieces thus thrust upon the world only three were genuine, the rest being anonymous waifs and strays. At length, in 1759, two volumes of Remains in Verse and Prose were published from the original MSS. by Thyer. Next to the amusing verse satire on the Royal Society called The Elephant in the Moon, the most interesting of these relics are Characters in prose (edited in 1908 by A. R. Waller, with Passages from Notebooks).

Fragments from the 'Remains.'

The truest characters of ignorance
Are vanity, and pride, and arrogance;
As blind men use to bear their noses higher
Than those that have their eyes and sight entire.

All wit and fancy, like a diamond,
The more exact and curious 'tis ground,
Is forced for every carat to abate
As much in value as it wants in weight.

Love is too great a happiness
For wretched mortals to possess;
For could it hold inviolate
Against those cruelties of fate
Which all felicities below
By rigid laws are subject to,
It would become a bliss too high
For perishing mortality;
Translate to earth the joys above;
For nothing goes to heaven but love.

All love at first, like generous wine,
Ferments and frets until 'tis fine;
For when 'tis settled on the lee,
And from the impurer matter free,
Becomes the richer still the older,
And proves the pleasanter the colder.
As at the approach of winter, all
The leaves of great trees use to fall,
And leave them naked, to engage
With storms and tempests when they rage,
While humbler plants are found to wear
Their fresh green liveries all the year;
So when their glorious season's gone
With great men, and hard times come on,
The great'st calamities oppress
The greatest still, and spare the less.

In Rome no temple was so low
As that of Honour, built to shew
How humble honour ought to be,
Though there 'twas all authority.

All smatterers are more brisk and pert
Than those that understand an art;
As little sparkles shine more bright
Than glowing coals that give them light.

As 'tis a greater mystery in the art
Of painting to foreshorten any part
Than draw it out; so 'tis in books the chief
Of all perfections to be plain and brief.

To his Mistress.

Do not unjustly blame
My guiltless breast,
For venturing to disclose a flame
It had so long suppress.
In its own ashes it designed
For ever to have lain;
But that my sighs, like blasts of wind,
Made it break out again.

A Small Poet

Is one that would fain make himself that which nature never meant him; like a fanatic that inspires himself with his own whimsies. He sets up haberdasher of small poetry, with a very small stock and no credit. He believes it is invention enough to find out other men's wit; and whatsoever he lights upon either in books or company he makes bold with as his own. This he puts together so untowardly that you may perceive his own wit as the rickets by the swelling disproportion of the joints. . . . You may know his wit not to be natural, 'tis so unquiet and troublesome in him: for as those that have money but seldom are always shaking their pockets when they have it, so does he, when he thinks he has got something that will make him appear. He is a perpetual talker; and you may know by the freedom of his discourse that he came lightly by it, as thieves spend freely what they get. . . . He is like an Italian thief, that never robs but he murders, to prevent discovery; so sure is he to cry down the man from whom he purloins, that his petty larceny of wit may pass unsuspected. . . . He appears so over-concerned in all men's wits, as if they were but disparagements of his own; and cries down all they do, as if they were encroachments upon him. He takes jests from the owners and breaks them, as justices do false weights and pots that want measure. When he meets with anything that is very good, he changes it into small money, like three groats for a shilling, to serve several occasions. He disclaims study, pretends to take things in motion, and to shoot flying, which appears to be very true, by his often missing of his mark. . . . As for epithets, he always avoids those that are near akin to the sense. Such matches are unlawful and not fit to be made by a Christian poet; and therefore all his care is to choose out such as will serve, like a wooden leg, to piece out a maimed verse that wants a foot or two, and if they will but rhyme now and then into the bargain, or run upon a letter, it is a work of supererogation. For similitudes, he likes the hardest and most obscure best; for as ladies wear black patches to make their complexions seem fairer than they are, so when an illustration is more obscure than the sense that went before it, it must of necessity make it appear clearer than it did; for contraries are best set off with contraries. He has found out a new sort of poetical Georgics, a trick of sowing wit like clover-grass on barren subjects, which would yield nothing before. This is very useful for the times, wherein, some men say, there is no room left for new invention. He will take three grains of wit like the elixir, and, projecting it upon the iron age, turn it immediately into gold. All the business of mankind has presently vanished, the whole world has kept holiday; there has been no men but heroes and poets, no women but nymphs and shepherdesses: trees have borne fritters, and rivers flowed plum-porridge. . . . When he writes, he commonly steers the sense of his lines by the rhyme that is at the end of them, as butchers do calves by the tail. For when he has made one line, which is easy enough, and has found out some sturdy hard word that will but rhyme, he will hammer the sense upon it, like a piece of hot iron upon an anvil, into what form he pleases. There is no art in the world so rich in terms as poetry; a whole dictionary is scarce able to contain them; for there is hardly a pond, a sheep-walk, or a gravel-pit in all Greece, but the ancient name of it is become a term of art in poetry. By this means, small poets have such a stock of able hard words lying by them, as dryades, hamadryades, aönides, fauni, nymphæ, sylvani, &c. that signify nothing at all; and such a world of pedantic terms of the same kind, as may serve to furnish all the new inventions and 'thorough reformatations' that can happen between this and Plato's great year. . . .

The Puritans were constantly contending for a 'thorough reformation' of the Church of England. The Platonic year or perfect year was a great cycle at the end of which all the heavenly bodies were supposed to be in the same relative places as at the Creation.

A Vintner

Hangs out his bush to shew he has not good wine; for that, the proverb says, needs it not. . . . He had rather sell bad wine than good, that stands him in no more; for it makes men sooner drunk, and then they are the easier over-reckoned. By the knaveries he acts above-board, which every man sees, one may easily take a measure of those he does underground in his cellar; for he that will pick a man's pocket to his face, will not stick to use him worse in private, when he knows nothing of it. . . . He does not only spoil and destroy his wines, but an ancient reverend proverb, with brewing and racking, that says, 'In vino veritas;' for there is no truth in his, but all false and sophisticated; for he can counterfeit wine as cunningly as Apelles did grapes, and cheat men with it, as he did birds. . . . He is an anti-Christian cheat, for Christ turned water into wine, and he turns wine into water. He scores all his reckonings upon two tables, made like those of the Ten Commandments, that he may be put in mind to break them as oft as possibly he can; especially that of stealing and bearing false witness against his neighbour, when he draws him bad wine, and swears it is good, and that he can take more for the pipe than the wine will yield him by the bottle—a trick that a Jesuit taught him to cheat his own conscience with. When he is found to over-reckon notoriously, he has one common evasion for all, and that is, to say it was a mistake; by which he means, that he thought they had not been sober enough to discover it; for if it had passed, there had been no error at all in the case.

A Prater

Is a common nuisance, and as great a grievance to those that come near him, as a pewterer is to his neighbours. His discourse is like the braying of a mortar, the more impertinent the more voluble and loud, as a pestle makes more noise when it is rung on the sides of a mortar, than when it stamps downright, and hits upon the business. A dog that opens upon a wrong scent will do it oftener than one that never opens but upon a right. He is as long-winded as a ventiduct, that fills as fast as it empties; or a trade-wind, that blows one way for half a year together, and another as long, as if it drew in its breath for six months, and blew it out again for six more. He has no mercy on any man's ears or patience that he can get within his sphere of activity, but tortures him, as they correct boys in Scotland, by stretching their lugs without remorse. He is like an earwig, when he gets within a man's ear he is not easily to be got out again. . . . He is a siren to himself, and has no way to escape shipwreck but by having his mouth stopped instead of his ears. He plays with his tongue as a cat does with her tail, and is transported with the delight he gives himself of his own making.

An Antiquary

Is one that has his being in this age, but his life and conversation is in the days of old. He despises the present age as an innovation, and slights the future; but has a great value for that which is past and gone, like the madman that fell in love with Cleopatra. . . . All his curiosities take place of one another according to their seniority, and he values them not by their abilities, but their standing. He has a great veneration for words that are stricken in years, and are grown so aged that they have outlived their employments. These he uses with a respect agreeable to their antiquity, and the good services they have done. . . . He is a great time-server, but it is of time out of mind, to which he conforms exactly, but is wholly retired from the present. His days were spent and gone long before he came into the world; and since, his only business is to collect what he can out of the ruins of them. He has so strong a natural affection to anything that is old, that he may truly say to dust and worms, 'You are my father,' and to rottenness, 'Thou art my mother.' He has no providence nor foresight, for all his contemplations look backward upon the days of old, and his brains are turned with them, as if he walked backwards. He had rather interpret one obscure word in any old senseless discourse than be author of the most ingenious new one. . . . He values things wrongfully upon their antiquity, forgetting that the most modern are really the most ancient of all things in the world, like those that reckon their pounds before their shillings and pence, of which they are made up. He esteems no customs but such as have outlived themselves, and are long since out of use; as the Catholics allow of no saints but such as are dead, and the fanatics, in opposition, of none but the living.

Butler's Poetical Works were edited by Bell (3 vols. 1855), Brimley Johnson (2 vols. 1893); Hudibras, by A. R. Waller (1905).

Sir Roger L'Estrange (1616–1704) enjoyed in the reigns of Charles II. and James II. great notoriety as a political writer. A native of Hunstanton, Norfolk, he took up arms for the king in 1638, and in 1644 headed a conspiracy to seize the town of Lynn; but being captured, he was condemned to death, and in Newgate for almost four years constantly expected to be led forth to execution. He escaped by the connivance of the jailer, attempted a rising in Kent, then fled to Holland, but in 1653 was pardoned by Cromwell. On the eve of the Restoration he wrote vehemently in support of monarchy. In 1663 he published Considerations and Proposals in order to the Regulation of the Press, a pamphlet for which he was rewarded by being appointed licenser or censor of the press, and also by a grant of the sole privilege of printing and publishing news. As licenser he carried out his functions rigorously. In August 1663 appeared his newspaper The Public Intelligencer. From this time till a few years before his death he was constantly occupied in editing newspapers and writing pamphlets, mostly against Whigs and Dissenters, in support of the court, from which he at last received the honour of knighthood. In 1687 he prefixed to the third series of his paper called The Observer, A Brief History of the Times, relating chiefly to the Popish Plot. After the Revolution he lost his post, and was repeatedly imprisoned. As a controversialist L'Estrange was bold, lively, and vigorous, but coarse, impudent, and abusive. He is conspicuous in the history of journalism. (See G. Kitchin's Roger L'Estrange, 1913.) Johnson said he was the first writer who regularly engaged himself to support a party, right or wrong; and Defoe, Addison, and Steele accepted many useful hints from L'Estrange. He is known also as the translator of Æsop's Fables, Seneca's Morals (abridged), Cicero's Offices, Erasmus's Colloquies (a selection), Quevedo's Visions, several French novels of startling impropriety, Bona's Guide to Eternity (compiled from the Fathers), and the works of Josephus. The elder D'Israeli commented on the curiously familiar style of L'Estrange's Æsop. Ticknor thought his translation of Quevedo the most spirited, though it is hardly faithful or accurate: he altered the jokes to suit purely English contemporary conditions. Clarendon and Pepys praise his wit and conversation; Macaulay and Hallam denounce his style as 'a mean and flippant jargon' and 'the pattern of bad writing.' He was certainly copious, inexhaustible, and ready-witted, with a great power of raillery and vituperation, and wrote with ease and familiarity, making a free use of slang.

Much in the Æsop the Greek fabulist is in nowise responsible for, though it is too much to say, as some have said, that L'Estrange's version is a new work. Further, of the five hundred fables in the volume, only two hundred and one—not to speak of the copious 'reflexions'—are professedly Æsop's, the rest being from Phædrus, Babrius, Poggio, Alciatus, La Fontaine, and many less-known authors. L'Estrange was no doubt the sole original authority for some of them. The following is a chapter on the domestic milieu in which Æsop served as slave, from the Life prefixed to the Fables:

Æsop's Invention to bring his Mistress back again to her Husband after she had left him.

The wife of Xanthus was well born and wealthy, but so proud and domineering withal, as if her fortune and her extraction had entituled her to the breeches. She was horribly bold, meddling and expensive, as that sort of women commonly are, easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again; perpetually chattering at her husband, and upon all occasions of controversy threatening him to be gone. It came to this at last, that Xanthus's stock of patience being quite spent, he took up a resolution of going another way to work with her, and of trying a course of severity, since there was nothing to be done with her by kindness. But this experiment, instead of mending the matter, made it worse; for upon harder usage the woman grew desperate, and went away from him in earnest. She was as bad, 'tis true, as bad might well be, and yet Xanthus had a kind of hankering for her still; beside that, there was matter of interest in the case; and a pestilent tongue she had, that the poor husband dreaded above all things under the sun. But the man was willing, however, to make the best of a bad game, and so his wits and his friends were set at work, in the fairest manner that might be, to get her home again. But there was no good to be done in 't, it seems; and Xanthus was so visibly out of humour upon 't, that Æsop in pure pity bethought himself immediately how to comfort him. Come, master (says he), pluck up a good heart, for I have a project in my noddle, that shall bring my mistress to you back again, with as good a will as ever she went from you. What does me Æsop, but away immediately to the market among the butchers, poulterers, fishmongers, confectioners, &c. for the best of everything that was in season. Nay he takes private people in his way too, and chops into the very house of his mistress's relations, as by mistake. This way of proceeding set the whole town a gog to know the meaning of all this bustle; and Æsop innocently told everybody that his master's wife was run away from him, and he had marry'd another; his friends up and down were all invited to come and make merry with him, and this was to be the wedding feast. The news flew like lightning, and happy were they that could carry the first tidings of it to the runaway lady—for everybody knew Æsop to be a servant in that family. It gathered in the rolling, as all other stories do in the telling, especially where women's tongues and passions have the spreading of them. The wife, that was in her nature violent and unsteady, ordered her chariot to be made ready immediately, and away she posts back to her husband; falls upon him with outrages of looks and language; and after the easing of her mind a little; No, Xanthus, says she, do not you flatter yourself with the hopes of enjoying another woman while I am alive. Xanthus look'd upon this as one of Æsop's masterpieces; and for that bout all was well again betwixt master and mistress.

How very far we have got from Æsop will be sufficiently plain from Fables cccxcviii. and cccxcix., even without premising that the 'Reflexion,' or moral, on the first discusses the 'political robbers' of these times, 'cabals of sharpers,' and the 'Committee of Safety;' while that on the second recites an illustrative story 'from the French farce.'

The Conscientious Thieves.

There was a knot of good fellows that borrow'd a small sum of mony of a gentleman upon the king's high-way: when they had taken all they could find, Dam ye for a dog, says one of the gang, you have more mony about you sirrah, some where or other. Lord, brother, says one of his companions, can't ye take the gentleman's mony civilly, but you must swear and call names! As they were about to part, Pray by your favour gentlemen, says the traveller, I have so many miles to go, and not one penny in my pocket to bear my charges; you seem to be men of some honour, and I hope you'll be so good as only to let me have so much of my mony back again, as will carry me to my journeys end. Ay, ay, the Lord forbid else, they cry'd, and so they open'd one of the bags, and bad him please himself. He took them at their word, and presently fetch'd out a handfull, as much as ever he could gripe. Why how now, says one of the blades, ye confounded son of a —, ha' ye no conscience?

The Trepanning Wolf.

There's a story of a man of quality in Ireland, that a little before the troubles there, had wall'd in a piece of ground for a park, and left only one passage into 't by a gate with a portcullis to 't. The Rebellion brake out, and put a stop to his design. The place was horribly pester'd with wolves; and his people having taken one of 'em in a pit-fall, chain'd him up to a tree in the enclosure; and then planted themselves in a lodge over the gate, to see what would come on 't. The wolf in a very short time fell a howling, and was answer'd by all his brethren thereabouts, that were within hearing of it; insomuch that the hubbub was immediately put about from one mountain to another, till a whole herd of 'em were gotten together upon the outcry; and so troup'd away into the park. They were no sooner in the pound, but down goes the portcullis, and away scamper the wolves to the gate, upon the noise of the fall on 't. When they saw that there was no getting out again where they came in, and that upon hunting the whole field over, there was no possibility of making an escape, they fell by consent upon the wolf that drew them in, and tore him all to pieces.

The following is an extract from the Brief History, of which the point is in the original emphasised to the eye not merely by the multiplication of capitals, but by the printing a large proportion of the whole in italics and black-letter :

The Popish Plot.

At the first opening of this plot, almost all people's hearts took fire at it, and nothing was heard but the bellowing of execrations and revenge against the accursed bloody Papists. It was imputed at first, and in the general, to the principles of the religion; and a Roman Catholique and a regicide were made one and the same thing. Nay, it was a saying frequent in some of our great and holy mouths, that they were confident there was not so much as one soul of the whole party, within his majesty's dominions, that was not either an actor in this plot, or a friend to 't. In this heat, they fell to picking up of priests and Jesuits as fast as they could catch 'em, and so went on to consult their oracles the witnesses (with all formalities of sifting and examining) upon the particulars of place, time, manner, persons, &c.; while Westminster Hall and the Court of Requests were kept warm, and ringing still of new men come in, corroborating proofs, and further discoveries, &c. Under this train and method of reasoning, the managers advanced, decently enough, to the finding out of what they themselves had laid and concerted beforehand; and, to give the devil his due, the whole story was but a farce of so many parts, and the noisy informations no more than a lesson that they had much ado to go through with, even with the help of diligent and careful tutors, and of many and many a prompter, to bring them off at a dead lift. But popery was so dreadfull a thing, and the danger of the king's life and of the Protestant religion so astonishing a surprize, that people were almost bound in duty to be inconsiderate and outrageous upon 't; and loyalty itself would have looked a little cold and indifferent if it had not been intemperate; insomuch that zeal, fierceness, and jealousy were never more excusable than upon this occasion. And now, having excellent matter to work upon, and the passions of the people already disposed for violence and tumult, there needed no more than blowing the coal of Oates's narrative, to put all into a flame; and in the meantime, all arts and accidents were improved, as well toward the entertainment of the humour, as to the kindling of it. The people were first hayred [hared, worried, frightened] out of their senses with tales and jealousies, and then made judges of the danger, and consequently of the remedy; which upon the main, and briefly, came to no more than this: The plot was laid all over the three kingdoms; France, Spain, and Portugal taxed their quotas to 't; we were all to be burnt in our beds, and rise with our throats cut; and no way in the world but exclusion and union to help us. The fancy of this exclusion spread immediately, like a gangrene, over the whole body of the monarchy; and no saving the life of his majesty without cutting off every limb of the prerogative: the device of union passed insensibly into a league of conspiracy; and, instead of uniting Protestants against Papists, concluded in an association of subjects against their sovereign, confounding policy with religion.

A poem on The Liberty of the Imprisoned Royalists, supposed to have been written by him when in Newgate in 1645, is ascribed to L'Estrange on no very convincing evidence. There are in it echoes from other Cavaliers, as will be seen from the following stanzas :

Beat on, proud billows! Boreas, blow!

Swell, curled waves, high as Jove's roof!

Your incivility shall shew

That innocence is tempest-proof.

Though surly Nereus frown, my thoughts are calm;

Then strike, Affliction, for thy wounds are balm.

That which the world miscalls a gaol,

A private closet is to me,

Whilst a good conscience is my bail,

And innocence my liberty.

Locks, bars, walls, leanness, though together met,

Make me no prisoner, but an anchorite. . . .

My soul is free as ambient air,

Although my baser parts be mewed;

Whilst loyal thoughts do still repair

To company my solitude;

And though rebellion may my body bind,

My king can only captivate my mind.

Have you not seen the nightingale

A pilgrim cooped into a cage,

And heard her tell her wonted tale,

In that her narrow hermitage?

Even then her charming melody doth prove

That all her bars are trees, her cage a grove.

I am the bird whom they combine

Thus to deprive of liberty;

But though they do my corps confine,

Yet, maugre hate, my soul is free;

And though I'm mewed, yet I can chirp and sing,

Disgrace to rebels, glory to my king!

Walter Charleton, M.D. (1619-1707), born at Shepton Mallet, studied at Oxford, was physician to Charles I. and II., a friend of Hobbes, and senior censor 1698-1706 in the College of Physicians in London. He wrote many works on theology, natural history, natural philosophy, medicine, and antiquities. He was a disciple of Van Helmont, and his medical theories were as speculative as his arguments for the immortality of the soul. In his Chorea Gigantum (1663) he maintained the Danish origin of Stonehenge, in opposition to Inigo Jones, who still more absurdly believed it to be a Roman temple. Charleton held it was a place of assembly, and the scene of the coronation of the Danish kings of England. His Brief Discourse concerning the Different Wits of Men (1675) contains lively and accurate sketches of character, two of which we quote; and, anticipating the phrenologists, attributes the varieties of talent found among men to differences in the form, size, and quality of their brains.

The Ready and Nimble Wit.

Such as are endowed wherewith have a certain extemporary acuteness of conceit, accompanied with a quick delivery of their thoughts, so as they can at pleasure entertain their auditors with facetious passages and fluent discourses even upon slight occasions; but being generally impatient of second thoughts and deliberations, they seem fitter for pleasant colloquies and drollery than for counsel and design; like fly-boats, good only in fair weather and shallow waters, and then too more for pleasure than traffic. If they be, as for the most part they are, narrow in the hold and destitute of ballast sufficient to counterpoise their large sails, they reel with every blast of argument, and are often driven upon the sands of a 'nonplus'; but where favoured with the breath of common applause, they sail smoothly and proudly, and like the City pageants discharge whole volleys of squibs and crackers, and skirmish most furiously. But take them from their familiar and private conversation into grave and severe assemblies, whence all extemporary flashes of wit, all fantastic allusions, all personal reflections are excluded, and there engage them in an encounter with solid wisdom, not in light skirmishes, but a pitched field of long and serious debate concerning any important question, and then you shall soon discover their weakness, and condemn that barrenness of understanding which is incapable of struggling with the difficulties of apodictical knowledge, and the deduction of truth from a long series of reasons. Again, if those very concise sayings and lucky repartees wherein they are so happy, and which at first hearing were entertained with so much of pleasure and admiration, be written down and brought to a strict examination of their pertinency, coherence, and verity, how shallow, how frothy, how forced will they be found! how much will they lose of that applause, which their tickling of the ear and present flight through the imagination had gained! In the greatest part therefore of such men you ought to expect no deep or continued river of wit, but only a few splashes, and those too not altogether free from mud and putrefaction.

The Slow but Sure Wit.

Some heads there are of a certain close and reserved constitution, which makes them at first sight to promise as little of the virtue wherewith they are endowed, as the former appear to be above the imperfections to which they are subject. Somewhat slow they are indeed of both conception and expression; yet no whit the less provided with solid prudence. When they are engaged to speak, their tongue doth not readily interpret the dictates of their mind, so that their language comes as it were dropping from their lips, even where they are encouraged by familiar entreaties, or provoked by the smartness of jests, which sudden and nimble wits have newly darted at them. Costive they are also in invention; so that when they would deliver somewhat solid and remarkable, they are long in seeking what is fit, and as long in determining in what manner and words to utter it. But after a little consideration, they penetrate deeply into the substance of things and marrow of business, and conceive proper and emphatic words by which to express their sentiments. Barren they are not, but a little heavy and retentive. Their gifts lie deep and concealed; but being furnished with notions, not airy and unbratill ones borrowed from the pedantism of the schools, but true and useful—and if they have been manured with good learning and the habit of exercising their pen—often-times they produce many excellent conceptions, worthy to be transmitted to posterity. Having, however, an aspect very like to narrow and dull capacities, at first sight most men take them to be really such, and strangers look upon them with the eyes of neglect and contempt. Hence it comes that excellent parts remaining unknown often want the favour and patronage of great persons, whereby they might be redeemed from obscurity, and raised to employments answerable to their faculties, and crowned with honours proportionate to their merits. The best course therefore for these to overcome that eclipse which prejudice usually brings upon them, is to contend against their own modesty, and either by frequent converse with noble and discerning spirits to enlarge the windows of their minds, and dispel those clouds of reservedness that darken the lustre of their faculties; or by writing on some new and useful subject to lay open their talent, so that the world may be convinced of their intrinsic value.

He wrote some of his things in Latin, translated from Latin into English, and rendered into Latin the Duchess of Northumberland's Life of her husband. Some thirty works are credited to him.

William Chamberlayne (1619–89) practised as a physician at Shaftesbury, but wielded the sword as well as the lancet, for he fought among the royalists at the second battle of Newbury. He complains keenly of the poverty of poets, and of being debarred from the society of the wits of his day. His works consist of Love's Victory, a Tragi-Comedy (1658), of which an altered form was acted in 1678; and Pharonnida, an Heroick Poem (1659). The scene of the first is laid in Sicily; that of Pharonnida chiefly in Greece. Pharonnida is the daughter of the King of the Morea; Argalia, a Christian warrior who had fought at Lepanto. They love at first sight; and jealous relations, rival suitors, Turks, bandits, sieges, abductions, imprisonment, poison, and amazing adventures innumerable fail to prevent the triumph of true love. With no light or witty verses to float him into popularity, and relying solely on his two long (and not seldom tedious) works, Chamberlayne was an unsuccessful poet. His works were almost totally forgotten when Campbell, in his Specimens (1819), by quoting largely from Pharonnida, and pointing out the 'rich breadth and variety of its scenes,' and the power and pathos of its characters and situations, drew attention to the passion, imagery, purity of sentiment, and tenderness of description, which lay, 'like metals in the mine,' in the neglected volume. Southey was an admirer. But Chamberlayne's beauties are marred by infelicity of execution; he had some of the gifts of a poet, but little of the skill of the artist, though parallels have been found in him both to Endymion and to Don Juan. The impossible names and the lack of local colour and vraisemblance irritate a modern reader. The rather awkward heroic couplet, the rather lumbering blank verse, wandered sometimes into a 'wilderness of sweets,' but at other times into tediousness, mannerism, and absurdity. His discontent with his own obscurity and poverty breaks out in a description of a rich boor in his (blank verse) play:

How purblind is the world, that such a monster,
In a few dirty acres swaddled, must
Be mounted, in Opinion's empty scale,
Above the noblest virtues that adorn
Souls that make worth their center, and to that Draw all the lines of action! Worn with age,
The noble soldier sits, whilst in his cell
The scholar stews his catholique brains for food.
The traveller, returned and poor, may go
A second pilgrimage to farmers' doors, or end
His journey in a hospital; few being
So generous to relieve, where vertue doth
Necessitate to crave. Harsh poverty,
That moth which frets the sacred robe of wit,
Thousands of noble spirits blunts, that else
Had spun rich threads of fancy from the brain:
But they are souls too much sublimed to thrive.

(From Act i. sc. 1.)

The leading thought of the splendid opening lines of Dryden's Religio Laici is anticipated in this dream from Pharonnida:

A strong prophetic dream,
Diverting by enigmas nature's stream,
Long hovering through the portals of her mind
On vain fantastic wings, at length did find
The glimmerings of obstructed reason, by
A brighter beam of pure divinity
Led into supernatural light, whose rays
As much transcended reason's, as the day's Dull mortal fires, faith apprehends to be
Beneath the glimmerings of divinity.
Her unimprisoned soul, disrobed of all Terrestrial thoughts (like its original
In heaven, pure and immaculate), a fit
Companion for those bright angels' wit
Which the gods made their messengers, to bear
This sacred truth, seeming transported where,
Fixed in the flaming centre of the world,
The heart o' th' microcosm, about which is hurled
The spangled curtains of the sky, within Whose boundless orbs the circling planets spin
Those threads of time upon whose strength rely
The ponderous burthens of mortality.
An adamant world she sees more pure,
More glorious far than this—framed to endure
The shock of doomsday's darts.

Chamberlayne, like Milton, was fond of describing the charms of morning. For example:

Where every bough
Maintained a feathered chorister to sing
Soft panegyrics, and the rude wings bring
Into a murmuring slumber, whilst the calm
Morn on each leaf did hang her liquid balm,
With an intent, before the next sun's birth,
To drop it in those wounds which the cleft earth
Received from last day's beams.

Of virgin purity he says:

The morning pearls,
Dropt in the lily's spotless bosom, are Less chastely cool, ere the meridian sun
Hath kissed them into heat.

In a grave narrative passage of Pharonnida, he stops to note the beauties of the morning:

The glad birds had sung
A lullaby to night; the lark was fled,
On dropping wings, up from his dewy bed,
To fan them in the rising sunbeams.

When commanded by her father to marry a neighbouring prince, Pharonnida soliloquises (Argalia being happily within earshot) thus:

'Is't a sin to be
Born high, that robs me of my liberty?
Or is't the curse of greatness to behold
Virtue through such false opticks as unfold
No splendour, 'less from equal orbs they shine?
What Heaven made free, ambitious men confine
In regular degrees. Poor Love must dwell
Within no climate but what's parallel
Unto our honored births; the envied fate
Of princes oft these burthens find from state,
When lowly swains, knowing no parent's voice
A negative, make a free happy choice.'
And here she sighed; then with some drops, distilled
From Love's most sovereign elixir, filled
The chrystal fountains of her eyes, which, ere Dropped down, she thus recalls again: 'But ne'er,
Ne'er, my Argalia, shall these fears destroy
My hopes of thee: Heaven! let me but enjoy
So much of all those blessings, which their birth
Can take from frail mortality; and Earth,
Contracting all her curses, cannot make
A storm of danger loud enough to shake
Me to a trembling penitence; a curse,
To make the horror of my suffering worse,
Sent in a father's name, like vengeance fell
From angry Heaven, upon my head may dwell
In an eternal stain—my honoured name
With pale disgrace may languish—busy fame
My reputation spot—affection be Termed uncommanded lust—sharp poverty,
That weed that kills the gentle flower of love,
As the result of all these ills, may prove
My greatest misery—unless to find Myself unpitied. Yet not so unkind
Would I esteem this mercenary band,
As those far more malignant powers that stand,
Armed with dissuasions, to obstruct the way
Fancy directs; but let those souls obey
Their harsh commands, that stand in fear to shed
Repentant tears: I am resolved to tread
Those doubtful paths, through all the shades of fear
That now benights them. Love! with pity hear

Thy suppliant's prayer, and when my clouded eyes
Shall cease to weep, in smiles I'll sacrifice
To thee such offerings, that the utmost date
Of Death's rough hands shall never violate.'

The Pharonnida was edited by Professor Saintsbury in Minor Poets of the Caroline Period (vol. i. 1905). In Campbell's Specimens of the British Poets there are twenty-four pages of extracts; and see two long articles in the Retrospective Review, vol. i. (1820).

Thomas Stanley (1625-78), the editor of Æschylus (1663), and author of a biographical History of Philosophy (4 vols. 1655-62), based mainly on Diogenes Laertius and Aristotle, published in 1651 his fourth volume of verse, in which his earlier pieces were also included. The only son of Sir Thomas Stanley, Knight, of Cumberlow, Hertfordshire, he was educated at Pembroke College, Oxford; spent several years in France; and afterwards lived in the Middle Temple. His poems, original and translated (Guiney edited his Original Lyrics, 1907; Bullen his Anacreon, 1906), display vigorous thought and graceful expression, though the conceits of his age disturb.

The Tomb.

When, cruel fair one, I am slain
By thy disdain,
And, as a trophy of thy scorn,
To some old tomb am borne,
Thy fetters must their power bequeath
To those of death;
Nor can thy flame immortal burn,
Like monumental fires within an urn:
Thus freed from thy proud empire, I shall prove
There is more liberty in death than love.
And when forsaken lovers come
To see my tomb,
Take heed thou mix not with the crowd,
And (as a victor) proud,
To view the spoils thy beauty made,
Press near my shade,
Lest thy too cruel breath or name
Should fan my ashes back into a flame,
And thou, devoured by this revengeful fire,
His sacrifice, who died as thine, expire.
But if cold earth, or marble, must Conceal my dust,
Whilst hid in some dark ruins, I,
Dumb and forgotten, lie,
The pride of all thy victory
Will sleep with me;
And they who should attest thy glory,
Will or forget or not believe this story.
Then to increase thy triumph, let me rest,
Since by thine eye slain, buried in thy breast.

The Loss.

Yet ere I go,
Disdainful Beauty, thou shalt be
So wretched as to know
What joys thou fling'st away with me.
A faith so bright,
As time or Fortune could not rust;
So firm that lovers might
Have read thy story in my dust,

And crowned thy name
With laurel verdant as thy youth
Whilst the shrill voice of Fame
Spread wide thy beauty and my truth.

This thou hast lost;
For all true lovers, when they find
That my just aims were crost,
Will speak thee lighter than the wind.

And none will lay
Any oblation on thy shrine,
But such as would betray
Thy faith to faiths as false as thine.

Yet, if thou choose
On such thy freedom to bestow,
Affection may excuse,
For love from sympathy doth flow.

The Deposition.

Though when I loved thee thou wert fair,
Thou art no longer so:
Those glories, all the pride they wear
Unto opinion owe.
Beauties like stars in borrowed lustre shine,
And 'twas my love that gave thee thine.

The flames that dwelt within thine eye
Do now with mine expire;
Thy brightest graces fade and die
At once with my desire.
Love's fires thus mutual influence return;
Thine cease to shine when mine to burn.

Then, proud Celinda, hope no more
To be implored or wooed;
Since by thy scorn thou dost restore
The wealth my love bestowed;
And thy despised disdain too late shall find
That none are fair but who are kind.

Mrs Katherine Phillips (1631-64), 'the matchless Orinda,' as she was called in her own time, was honoured with the praise of Cowley and Dryden, and Jeremy Taylor addressed to her a famous letter 'on the offices of friendship.' The daughter of a London merchant, she became in 1647 the wife of James Philips of The Priory, Cardigan, whose father had married her own widowed mother, Mrs Fowler; and she divided her time between London and Cardigan, dying of small-pox in the former city. 'Orinda' was the name she chose for herself in a social and literary coterie of Antenors and Palæmons, of Celimenas and Rosanias, English contemporaries of the précieuses of the Hôtel Rambouillet. Most of the verses are addressed to her friends on special occasions; thus, 'To my Lady M. Cavendish chusing the name of Policrite;' there are a number on friendship, love, the soul, resignation, death, and like subjects; some on the politics of the day, and one on 'The Irish Greyhound' in praise of the old wolf-hound. Her poems were enshrined by Professor Saintsbury in his Minor Poets of the Caroline Period (vol. i. 1905).

Against Pleasure.

There's no such thing as pleasure here ;
 'Tis all a perfect cheat,
 Which does but shine and disappear,
 Whose charm is but deceit ;
 The empty bribe of yielding souls,
 Which first betrays, and then controuls.

'Tis true, it looks at distance fair ;
 But if we do approach,
 The fruit of Sodom will impair,
 And perish at a touch ;
 It being than in fancy less,
 And we expect more than possess.

For by our pleasures we are cloyed,
 And so desire is done ;
 Or else, like rivers, they make wide
 The channel where they run ;
 And either way true bliss destroys,
 Making us narrow, or our joys.

We covet pleasure easily,
 But it not so possess ;
 For many things must make it be,
 But one may make it less ;
 Nay, were our state as we could chuse it,
 'Twould be consumed by fear to lose it.

What art thou, then, thou winged air,
 More weak and swift than Fame,
 Whose next successor is Despair,
 And its attendant Shame ?
 The experience-prince then reason had
 Who said of Pleasure, 'It is mad.'

John Aubrey, antiquary and folklorist, was born at Easton Piercy, near Chippenham, Wilts, on 12th March 1626, and was educated at Malmesbury (under Robert Latimer, Hobbes's preceptor), Blandford, and Trinity College, Oxford. He entered the Middle Temple in 1646, but was never called to the Bar ; in 1652 he succeeded to his father's estates in Wiltshire, Herefordshire, and Wales, but was forced through lawsuits to part with the last of them in 1670, and with his very books in 1677. His later years were passed, 'in danger of arrests,' with Hobbes, Ashmole, Lady Long of Draycott in his native county, and other protectors, till in June 1697 he died at Oxford on his way from London to Draycott. His quaint, credulous Miscellanies (1696) was the only work printed in his lifetime ; but he left a large mass of materials. Of these, his Wiltshire and Surrey collections have in part been published ; his 'Minutes of Lives' (Hobbes, Milton, Bacon, &c.), given to Anthony Wood, appeared first in Bliss's Letters written by Eminent Persons (1813), but was first adequately edited by Andrew Clark as Brief Lives, chiefly of Contemporaries (2 vols. 1898). His Remains of Gentilism and Judaism was issued by the Folklore Society in 1880. See an article by Masson in the British Quarterly (1856) ; and 'Some Additions to Aubrey' in Cornhill (Dec. 1921 and Jan. 1922).

Dreams.

When Sir Christopher Wren was at Paris about 1671, he was ill and feverish, had a pain in his reins. He sent for a physitian, who advis'd him to be let blood, thinking he had a pleurisy : but bleeding much disagreeing with his constitution, he would defer it a day longer : that night he dreamt that he was in a place where palm-trees grew (suppose Egypt), and that a woman in a romantick habit reach'd him dates. The next day he sent for dates, which cured him of the pain in his reins.

Mr Winstanly (surveyor of the king's works) hath built a handsome house at Littlebury in Cambridgeshire near Audely-Inn, where are to be seen several ingenious machines ; one whereof is thus : a wooden slipper finely carved lieth on the floor of a chamber about a yard and an half within the door, which the stranger is to take up (it comes up pretty stiff) and up starts a skeleton. J. H., Esq., had been there : and being at West-Lavington with the Earl of Abbingdon, dream'd December the 9th, that he was at Mr Winstanly's house, and took up the slipper, and up rose his mother in mourning : and anon the queen [Mary of Orange] appeared in mourning. He told his dream the next morning to my lord, and his lordship imparted it to me (then there). Tuesday Dec. 11 in the evening, came a messenger post from London to acquaint Mr H. that his mother was dangerously ill : he went to London the next day : his mother lived but about 8 days longer. On Saturday Dec. 15 the queen was taken ill, which turned to the small-pox, of which she died Decem. 28 about two a clock in the morning.

Apparitions.

Sir Walter Long of Draycot (grandfather of Sir James Long) had two wives ; the first a daughter of Sir — Packinton in Worcestershire ; by whom he had a son : his second wife was a daughter of Sir John Thinne of Longleat ; by whom he had several sons and daughters. The second wife did use much artifice to render the son by the first wife (who had not much Promethean fire) odious to his father ; she would get her acquaintance to make him drunk, and then expose him in that condition to his father ; in fine she never left off her attempts, till she had got Sir Walter to disinherit him. She laid the scene for the doing this at Bath at the assizes, where was her brother Sir Egrimond Thinne, an eminent serjeant at law, who drew the writing ; and his clerk was to sit up all night to engross it ; as he was writing, he perceived a shadow on the parchment, from the candle ; he look'd up, and there appear'd a hand, which immediately vanish'd ; he was startled at it, but thought it might be only his fancy, being sleepy ; so he writ on ; by and by a fine white-hand interposed between the writing and the candle (he could discern it was a woman's hand), but vanish'd as before ; I have forgot if it appeared a third time. But with that the clerk threw down his pen, and would engross no more, but goes and tells his master of it, and absolutely refused to do it. But it was done by somebody, and Sir Walter Long was prevailed with to seal and sign it. He lived not long after ; and his body did not go quiet to the grave, it being arrested at the church-porch by the trustees of the first lady. The heir's relations took his part, and commenc'd a suit against Sir Walter (the second son) and compell'd him to accept of a moiety of the estate ; so the eldest son kept South-Wranchester, and Sir Walter the second son Dracot Cernes, &c. This was about the middle of the reign of King James the First.

Anno. 1670, not far from Cyrencester, was an apparition: being demanded, whether a good spirit, or a bad? returned no answer, but disappeared with a curious perfume and most melodious twang. Mr W. Lilly believes it was a farie.

Mr. T. M. an old acquaintance of mine hath assured me, that about a quarter of a year after his first wives death, as he lay in bed awake with his little grand-child, his wife opened the closet-door, and came into the chamber to the bed-side, and looked upon him, and stooped down and kissed him; her lips were warm, he fancied they would have been cold. He was about to have embraced her, but was afraid it might have done him hurt. When she went from him, he asked her when he should see her again? She turned about and smil'd, but said nothing. The closet-door striked, as it uses to do, both at her coming in and going out. He had every night a great coal-fire in his chamber, which gave a light as clear almost as a candle (he was hypocondrical). He marry'd two wives since; the later end of his life was uneasy.

Impulses.

Oliver Cromwel had certainly this afflatus. One that I knew, that was at the battle of Dunbar, told me that Oliver was carried on with a divine impulse: he did laugh so excessively as if he had been drunk; his eyes sparkled with spirits. He obtained a great victory; but the action was said to be contrary to human prudence. The same fit of laughter seiz'd Oliver Cromwel just before the battle of Naseby; as a kinsman of mine, and a great favourite of his, Colonel J. P. then present, testifi'd. Cardinal Mazerine said, that he was a lucky fool.

Mirandum.

Arise Evans had a fungous nose, and said it was reveal'd to him that the king's hand would cure him: and at the first coming of King Charles II. into St James's Park he kiss'd the king's hand, and rubb'd his nose with it; which disturb'd the king, but cured him. Mr Ashmole told me.

John Hales.

He had a noble librarie of bookes, and those judiciously chosen, which cost him . . . li. (quaere Mr Sloper); and which he sold to Cornelius Bee, bookeseller, in Little Britaine (as I take it, for 1000 li.), which was his maintenance after he was ejected out of his fellowship at Eaton College. He had then only reserved some few for his private use, to wind-up his last dayes withall.

The ladie Salter (neer Eaton) was very kind to him after the sequestration; he was very welcome to her ladyship, and spent much of his time there. At Eaton he lodged (after his sequestration) at the next house to the Christopher inne, where I sawe him, a prettie little man, sanguine, of a cheerfull countenance, very gentile, and courteous; I was recievd by him with much humanity: he was in a kind of violet-colour'd cloath gowne, with buttons and loopes (he wore not a black gowne), and was reading Thomas à Kempis; it was within a yeare before he deceased. He loved canarie; but moderately, to refresh his spirits.

He had a bountifull mind. I remember in 1647, a little after the visitation, when Thomas Mariett, esq., Mr William Radford, and Mr Edward Wood (all of Trinity College) had a frolique from Oxon to London, on foot, having never been there before, they happened to take Windsore in their way, made their addresse to this good gentleman, being then fellow. Mr Edward Wood was the spookes-man, remonstrated that they were Oxon scholars: he treated them well, and putt into Mr Wood's hands ten shillings.

He lies buried in the church yard at Eaton, under an altar monument of black marble, erected at the sole charge of Mr . . . Curwyn, with a too long epitaph. He was no kiff or kin to him.

Mr John Hales dyed at Mrs Powney's house, a widow-woman, in Eaton, opposite to the churchyard, adjoyning to the Christopher Inne southwards. 'Tis the howse where I sawe him.

She is a very good woman and of a gratefull spirit. She told me that when she was married, Mr Hales was very bountifull to them in helping them to live in the world. She was very gratefull to him and respectfull to him.

She told me that Mr Hales was the common godfather there, and 'twas pretty to see, as he walked to Windsor, how his godchildren asked him blessing. When he was bursar, he still gave away all his groates for the acquittances to his godchildren; and by that time he came to Windsor bridge, he would have never a groate left.

William Harvey.

He was not tall; but of the lowest stature, round faced, olivaster complexion; little eie, round, very black, full of spirit; his haire was black as a raven, but quite white 20 yeares before he dyed.

I first sawe him at Oxford, 1642, after Edgehill fight, but was then too young to be acquainted with so great a doctor. I remember he came severall times to Trin. Coll. to George Bathurst, B.D., who had a hen to hatch egges in his chamber, which they dayly opened to discerne the progres and way of generation. I had not the honour to be acquainted with him till 1651, being my cosen Montague's physitian and friend. I was at that time bound for Italy (but to my great grieve dissuaded by my mother's importunity). He was very communicative, and willing to instruct any that were modest and respectfull to him. And in order to my journey, gave me [dictated to me] what to see, what company to keepe, what bookes to read, how to manage my studies: in short, he bid me goe to the fountain head, and read Aristotle, Cicero, Avicenna, and did call the neoteriques He wrote a very bad hand, which (with use) I could pretty well read.

I have heard him say, that after his booke of the circulation of the blood came-out, that he fell mightily in his practize, and that 'twas beleevd by the vulgar that he was crack-brained; and all the physitians were against his opinion, and envyed him; many wrote against him, as Dr Primige, Paracisanus, etc. (vide Sir George Ent's booke). With much adoe at last, in about 20 or 30 yeares time, it was recievd in all the universities of the world; and, as Mr Hobbes sayes in his book De Corpore, he is the only man, perhaps, that ever lived to see his owne doctrine established in his life time.

He understood Greek and Latin pretty well, but was no critique, and he wrote very bad Latin. The Circuitus Sanguinis was, as I take it, donne into Latin by Sir George Ent (quaere), as also his booke De Generatione Animalium, but a little book in 12mo against Riolani (I thinke), wherein he makes out his doctrine clearer, was writt by himselfe, and that, as I take it, at Oxford.

His majestie king Charles I. gave him the wardenship of Merton Colledge in Oxford, as a reward for his service, but the times suffered him not to recieve or injoy any benefitt by it.

He was physitian, and a great favorite of the Lord High Marshall of England, Thomas Howard, earle of Arundel and Surrey, with whom he travelled as his physitian in his ambassade to the Emperor . . . at Vienna, Anno Domini 163-. Mr W. Hollar (who was then one of his excellencie's gentlemen) told me that, in his voyage, he would still be making of excursions into the woods, makeing observations of strange trees, and plants, earths, etc., naturalls, and sometimes like to be lost, so that my lord ambassador would be really angry with him, for there was not only danger of thieves, but also of wild beasts.

He was much and often troubled with the gowte, and his way of cure was thus; he would then sitt with his legges bare, if it were frost, on the leads of Cockaine house, putt them into a payle of water, till he was almost dead with cold, and betake himselfe to his stove, and so 'twas gone.

He was hott-headed, and his thoughts working would many times keepe him from sleepe; he told me that then his way was to rise out of his bed and walke about his chamber in his shirt till he was pretty coole, i.e. till he began to have a horror, and then returne to bed, and sleepe very comfortably.

I remember he was wont to drinke coffee; which he and his brother Eliab did, before coffee-houses were in fashion in London.

Anthony Wood, or A WOOD (1632-95), was born at Oxford, studied at Merton College, and being of independent means, devoted himself to heraldry and antiquarian studies, and lived mostly in Oxford. His History of Oxford the delegates of the university press had translated into Latin as Historia et Antiquitates Universitatis Oxoniensis (1674). Wood was ill-satisfied with the translation, and made a new copy of his English MS., which was long after published in 1786-96. His great Athenæ Oxonienses was a history of all the writers and bishops who had been educated in Oxford from 1500 to 1690, together with the Fasti or Annals for the said time (1691-92). Other works were The Ancient and Present State of the City of Oxford (1773) and the ill-natured Modius Salium, a Collection of Pieces of Humour (1751). He was laborious in research, but did not generously acknowledge help received from Aubrey and others. He was peevish in temper, and seemed to welcome spiteful stories. A third volume of the Athenæ was included in the second edition printed by Tonson (1721). The third edition is that by Philip Bliss (1813-20); a projected fourth by him reached only the first volume, containing Wood's Life and Times, an autobiography (1848). This last was edited in 1892-1900 by Mr Andrew Clark for the Oxford Historical Society as vols. i.-v. of a complete edition of Wood's works.

From the 'Life and Times.'

An. Dom. 1632 (Dec. 17).—Anthony Wood or a Wood, son of Tho. Wood or a Wood, bachelaur of arts and of the civil law, was borne in an antient stone-house, opposite to the forefront of Merton coll. in the collegiat parish of S. John Baptist de Merton, situat and being within the city and universitie of Oxford, on munday the seventeenth day of December (S. Lazarus day) at about 4 of the clock in the morning: which stone-house, with a backside and garden adjoyning, was bought by his father of John Lant, master of arts of the univ. of Oxon, 8 December, 6 Jac. I. Dom. 1608, and is held by his family of Merton coll. before mention'd.

An. Dom. 1633.—He was altogether nursed by his mother (of whome shal be mention made under the yeare 1666) and by none else. For as she nursed his 3 elder brothers, so she nursed him (whom she found very quiet) and the two next that followed.

An. Dom. 1637.—He was put to school to learne the Psalter. And about that time playing before the dore of his father's house, neare Merton coll. one of the horses, called Mutton, belonging to Tho. Edgerley, the university carrier, rode over him (as he was going to be watered) and bruis'd his head very much. This caused a great heaviness for some time after in his head, and perhaps a slowness in apprehending with quickness things that he read or heard; of which he was very sensible, when he came to reason.

An. Dom. 1638.—In the beginning of this yeare his eldest brother Thomas Wood (who was borne at Tetsworth in Oxfordshire) became one of the students of Christ Church, by the favour of Dr. Tho. Iles, he being then 14 yeares of age.

An. Dom. 1639.—He was in his Bible, and ready to go into his Accedence.

(Mar. 8).—His yonger brother John Wood died, and was buried the day following in Merton coll. church.

An. Dom. 1640.—He was put to a Latine school in a little house, neare to the church of S. Peter in the Baylie, and opposite to the street, called the North Baylie, which leads from New Inn to the Bocherew. The name of his master he hath forgot, but remembers, that he was master of arts and a preacher, by a good token, that one of the beadles of the universitie did come with his silver staff to conduct him from the said little house (a poore thing God wot) to the church of S. Marie, there to preach a Latin sermon he thinks (for it was on a working or school day) before the universitie.

An. Dom. 1641.—He was translated to New coll. schoole, situated between the West part of the chappell and E. part of the eloyster, by the advice, as he usually conceived, of some of the fellowes of the said coll. who usually frequented his father's house. One John Maylard, fellow of the said coll., was then, or at least lately, the master (afterwards rector of Stanton S. John neare Oxon.), and after him succeeded Joh. Davys, one of the chaplaynes of the said house, whome he well remembers to be a quiet man.

His grandmother Penelopie, the widdow of capt. Rob. Pettie or Le Petite gent. (his mother's father), died with grief at or neare Charlemount in Ireland, the seat of her nephew William viscount Caulfield, occasion'd by the barbarous usuage of her intimate acquaintance (but a bigotted Papist) Sr. Philim O Neale, who acted the part of an arch-traytor and rebell, when the grand rebellion broke out in that kingdome 23 October 1641. . . .

An. Dom. 1642.—Upon the publication of his majestie's proclamation, for the suppressing of the rebellion under the conduct and command of Robert earl of Essex, the members of the universitie of Oxon. began to put themselves in a posture of defence, and especially for another reason, which was, that there was a strong report, that divers companies of soldiers [were] passing thro' the country, as sent from London by the parliament for the securing of Banbury and Warwick. Dr. Pink of New coll. the deputy-vice-chancellour, called before him to the public schooles all the privileged men's armes, to have a view of them: where not onlie privileged men of the universitie and their servants, but also many scholars appeared, bringing with them the furniture of armes of every col. that then had any. Mr. Wood's father had then armour or furniture for one man, viz. a helmet, a back and breast-piece, a pyke and a musquet, and other appurtenances: And the eldest of his men-servants (for he had then three at least) named Thomas Burnham, did appeare in those armes, when the scholars and privileged men trained; and when he could not train, as being taken up with business, the next servant did traine: and much adoe there was to keep Thomas, the eldest son, then a student of Chr. Ch. and a youth of about 18 yeares of age, from putting on the said armour and to traine among the scholars. The said scholars and privileged men did sometimes traine in New coll. quadrangle, in the eye of Dr. Rob. Pink, the dep. vicechancellour, then warden of the said coll. And it being a novel matter, there was no holding of the school-boyes in their school in the cloyster from seeing and following them. And Mr. Wood remembered well, that some of them were so besotted with the training and activitie and gaytie therein of some yong scholars, as being in a longing condition to be of the traine, that they could never be brought to their books againe. It was a great disturbance to the youth of the citie, and Mr. Wood's father foresaw, that if his sons were not removed from Oxon. they would be spoyl'd.

(Oct. 23).—The great fight at Edghill in Warwickshire, called Keynton-battle, between the armies of K. Ch. I. and his parliament was began.

(Oct. 29).—Upon the first newes at Oxon. that the armies were going to fight, Mr. Wood's eldest brother Thomas, before mention'd, left his gowne at the Town's end, ran to Edghill, did his Majestie good service, return'd on horseback well accountred, and afterwards was made an officer in the king's army.

An. Dom. 1653.—After he had spent the Summer at Cassington in a lonish and retir'd condition, he return'd to Oxon., and being advised by some persons, he entertain'd a master of musick to teach him the usual way of playing on the violin, that is, by having every string tuned 5 notes lower than the other going before. The master was Charles Griffith, one of the musitians belonging to the city of Oxon. whom he thought then to be a most excellent artist, but when A. W. improv'd himself in that instrument, he found him not so. He gave him 2s. 6d. entrance, and 10s. quarterly. This person after he had extreamly wondred how he could play so many tunes as he did by fourths, without a director or guide, he then tuned his violin by fifths, and gave him instructions how to proceed, leaving then a lesson with him to practice against his next coming.

The last yeare, after he was entred into the publick library (which he took to be the happiness of his life, and into which he never entred without great veneration) he could do but little in it, because he was entred but a little while before his ague took him. But this yeare being a constant student therein, he became acquainted with the places in the arts library, (for no farther could bachelours of arts then goe,) where the books of English historie and antiquities stand. He lighted upon The Description of Leicestershire, written by Will. Burton: and being exceedingly delighted with the performance, he did this or in the yeare following, take notes thence, and make collections from it, which he had lying by him in his last dayes. He took great delight in reading The Display of Heraldry, written by John Guillim, and in other books of that faculty, written by Joh. Bossewell, John Ferne, &c., and endeavour'd to draw out and trick armes with his pen. And afterwards when he came to full yeares, he perceived it was his natural genie, and could not avoid them. Heraldry, musick and painting did so much crowd upon him, that he could not avoid them; and could never give a reason why he should delight in those studies, more than in others, so prevalent was nature, mix'd with a generosity of mind, and a hatred to all that was servile, sneaking or advantagious for lucre sake. His brother Edw. Wood was much against these studies, and advised him to enter on those that were beneficial, as his mother did. He had then a gentile companion of the same coll. (J. W.) who delighted in vertuous studies as he did, and would walk several times with him in shady recesses and retired walkes, to each others content; but the same J. W. being a gent. of a good descent, and an heir to an estate of 700l. per an. at least, he went afterwards to London, mixed himself with idle company that flatter'd and admired him, and at length debach'd him; which did not a little rouble A. W.

An. Dom. 1658 (Aug. 30).—Munday, a terrible raging wind hapned, which did much hurt. Dennis Bond, a great Olivarian and anti-monarchist, died on that day, and then the Devil took Bond for Oliver's appearance.

(Sept. 3).—Oliver Cromwell the protector died. This I set downe, because some writers tell us, that he was hurried away by the Devill in the wind before mention'd.

(Sept. 6).—Richard Cromwell his son was proclaimed protector at Oxon. at the usual places where kings have been proclaimed. While he was proclaiming before S. Marie's church dore, the mayor, recorder, townclerk, &c., accompanied by col. Unton Croke and his troopers, were pelted with carret and turnip-tops, by yong scholars, and others, who stood at a distance.

Bulstrode Whitelocke (1605–75), the son of a judge, and himself an eminent lawyer, was bred at St John's College, Oxford, and the Middle Temple. His Memorials of English Affairs from the beginning of the reign of Charles I. to the Restoration mirror the times from a point of view opposite to that of Lord Clarendon, though, like Selden and other moderate anti-royalists, he was averse to a civil war. He was chairman of the committee which managed Strafford's prosecution. As a member of Parliament, and one of the commissioners appointed to treat with the king at Oxford, he advocated pacific measures; and being an enemy to arbitrary power both in Church and State, he in the Westminster Assembly refused to admit the divine right of presbytery. Under Cromwell he held several high appointments, and during the government of the Protector's son Richard, acted as one of the keepers of the great seal. At the Restoration he retired to his Wiltshire estate of Chilton. The Memorials were not intended for publication, and, written almost wholly in the form of a diary, are to be regarded rather as a collection of historical materials than as history itself. A mutilated edition of them appeared in 1682, a much more satisfactory one in 1732. In a posthumous volume of Essays, Ecclesiastical and Civil, he strongly advocates religious toleration. His Journal of his embassy in 1653 to Sweden was edited by H. Reeve (1855). See his Memoirs by Professor R. H. Whitelocke (1860).

Thomas Rymer (1641–1713), born at Yafforth Hall, Northallerton, was the son of a Roundhead gentleman hanged at York in 1664. Having studied at Sidney Sussex, Cambridge, and at Gray's Inn, he published translations, critical discussions on poetry, dramas, and works on history, and in 1692 was appointed historiographer royal. He is remembered as compiler of the invaluable collection of historical materials known as the Fœdera, extending from the eleventh century to his own time (vols. i.–xv. in 1704–13; continuation by Sanderson in vols. xvi.–xx. in 1715–35). His principal critical work is The Tragedies of the Last Age Considered (1678), in virtue of which Pope considered him 'one of the best critics we ever had'; Macaulay, 'the worst critic that ever lived.' Dryden, who wrote the 'heads of an answer to Rymer,' treated with great respect 'this excellent critique,' but stated a case for the English poets against the Greek. Rymer's classical prejudices made him view modern English poetry and drama with jaundiced eye. Paradise Lost, 'which some are pleased to call a poem,' pleased him more, however, than Othello, 'a bloody farce without salt or savour.' His own poems are inconsiderable—verses to the memory of Waller, a poem on Queen Mary's arrival, and a few amorous ditties.

Sir William Temple (1628–99), diplomatist and essay-writer, was the son of Sir John Temple, Master of the Rolls in Ireland, but was born in London. He studied at Cambridge under Cudworth as tutor, but being intended for public life, devoted his attention chiefly to French and Spanish, and at nineteen went abroad for some years. He had ere this fallen in love with Dorothy Osborne (1627–95), whose father, Sir Peter, a strong royalist, disliked the match—for Temple's father sat in the Long Parliament. But the lovers were constant in their affection, and their seven years of separation gave occasion for Dorothy's delightful letters. Temple married her in 1655, lived in Ireland, and was returned to the Irish Parliament for Carlow in 1660. On his removal two years afterwards to England, the introductions which he carried to leading statesmen speedily procured him employment in the diplomatic service. He was sent in 1665 on a secret mission to the Bishop of Münster, and on his return he was made a baronet and appointed English resident at the court of Brussels. Temple's great diplomatic success was the negotiation at the Hague in 1668, with the Grand Pensionary De Witt, of the famous Triple Alliance between England, Holland, and Sweden, by which the ambition of Louis XIV. was for a time effectually checked. He took part in the Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle (1668), and as ambassador at the Hague, enjoyed for a year the intimacy of De Witt, and also of his strenuous opponent, the young Prince of Orange, afterwards William III. of England. Recalled in 1669, he retired from public business to his residence at Sheen, near Richmond, and there employed himself in literary occupations and gardening. In 1674, again ambassador to Holland, he contributed to bring about the marriage of the Prince of Orange with the Duke of York's eldest daughter, Mary (1677). Having finally returned to England in 1679, Temple refused the king's offer of a Secretaryship of State. Charles used to hold anxious conferences with Temple on the means of extricating himself from the embarrassments created by a long course of misgovernment; and Sir William advised the appointment of a privy-council of thirty persons, in conformity with whose advice the king should always act. Temple, who was himself for a time one of an inner council of four (with Halifax, Essex, and Sunderland), soon became disgusted with the policy in vogue and the constant intrigues, and in 1681 finally retired from public life. He spent the remainder of his days chiefly at Moor Park, near Farnham, in Surrey, so called by him after the other Moor Park, a seat of the Bedford family near Rickmansworth in Herts—'the sweetest place that I have seen in my life either before or since, at home or abroad.' He has left a description of the Herts garden in a famous essay, quoted below. At Moor Park, Temple had for secretary and humble companion the famous Jonathan Swift, who retained no very agreeable recollection of that period of dependence and obscurity. There also resided one with whom Swift is indissolubly associated—Esther Johnson, immortalised as 'Stella,' the daughter of Temple's housekeeper.

After the Revolution King William sometimes visited Temple and sought his advice about public affairs. Throughout his whole career his conduct was marked by a cautious regard for his personal comfort and reputation, which strongly disposed him to avoid risks of every kind, and to stand aloof from public business where special courage or decision was required; he seems to have had a lively consciousness that neither his abilities nor dispositions fitted him for vigorous action in stormy times; but as an adviser he was enlightened, safe, and sagacious. In character Sir William was estimable and decorous; his temper, naturally haughty, was generally kept in order; and among his foibles, vanity was the most prominent.

The works of Sir William Temple consist chiefly of short miscellaneous pieces. His longest disquisition is Observations upon the United Provinces of the Netherlands, composed during his first retirement at Sheen; and both this and his Essay on the Original and Nature of Government show his gift as an observer and describer. Besides several political tracts, he wrote essays entitled Miscellanea (1680-92), which became famous, on Ancient and Modern Learning, on Gardening, Heroic Virtue, Poetry, Popular Discontents, Health and Long Life, and other miscellaneous subjects. Though his philosophy was not very profound nor his intellectual power great, his Miscellanea contain many sound and acute observations, expressed in an easy and perspicuous style. Dr Johnson said 'Sir William Temple was the first writer who gave cadence to English prose: before his time, they were careless of arrangement, and did not mind whether a sentence ended with an important word or an insignificant word, or with what part of speech it was concluded.' This is hardly fair to Ben Jonson, to Bishop Hall, Cowley, and Jeremy Taylor. But even Dryden, Halifax, and Tillotson are hardly so modern as Temple, who may fairly rank as the forerunner of the eighteenth-century essayist. His Letters are many of them admirable. The three following extracts are from the Miscellanea:

SIR WILLIAM TEMPLE.

From the Picture by Sir Peter Lely in the National Portrait Gallery.

English Gardening and the English Climate.

But after so much ramble into ancient times and remote places, to return home and consider the present way and humour of our gardening in England; which seem to have grown into such vogue, and to have been so mightily improved in three or four and twenty years of his Majesty's reign, that perhaps few countries are before us, either in the elegance of our gardens, or in the number of our plants; and, I believe, none equals us in the variety of fruits, which may be justly called good; and from the earliest cherry and strawberry, to the last apples and pears, may furnish every day of the circling year. For the taste and perfection of what we esteem the best, I may truly say that the French, who have eaten my peaches and grapes at Shene in no very ill year, have generally concluded that the last are as good as any they have eaten in France on this side Fountainbleau; and the first as good as any they have eat in Gascony; I mean those which come from the stone, and are properly called peaches, not those which are hard, and are termed pavies; for these cannot grow in too warm a climate, nor ever be good in a cold; and are better at Madrid than in Gascony itself: Italians have agreed my white figs to be as good as any of that sort in Italy, which is the earlier kind of white fig there; for in the latter kind and the blue we cannot come near the warm climates, no more than in the Frontignac or Muscat grape.

My orange-trees are as large as any I saw when I was young in France, except those of Fountainbleau, or what I have seen since in the Low Countries, except some very old ones of the Prince of Orange's; as laden with flowers as any can well be, as full of fruit as I suffer or desire them, and as well tasted as are commonly brought over, except the best sorts of Sevil and Portugal. And thus much I could not but say, in defence of our climate, which is so much and so generally decried abroad, by those who never saw it; or, if they have been here, have yet perhaps seen no more of it than what belongs to inns, or to taverns and ordinaries; who accuse our country for their own defaults, and speak ill, not only of our gardens and houses, but of our humours, our breeding, our customs and manners of life, by what they have observed of the meaner and baser sort of mankind; and of company among us, because they wanted themselves perhaps either fortune or birth, either quality or merit, to introduce them among the good.

I must needs add one thing more in favour of our climate which I heard the king say, and I thought new and right, and truly like a king of England that loved and esteemed his own country; 'twas in reply to some of the company that were reviling our climate, and extolling those of Italy and Spain, or at least of France. He said he thought that was the best climate where he could be abroad in the air with pleasure, or at least without trouble and inconvenience, the most days of the year and the most hours of the day; and this he thought he could be in England more than in any country he knew of in Europe. And I believe it true, not only of the hot and the cold, but even among our neighbours of France and the Low Countries themselves, where the heats or the colds and changes of the seasons are less treatable than they are with us.

The truth is, our climate wants no heat to produce excellent fruits; and the default of it is only the short seasons of our heats or summers, by which many of the later are left behind and imperfect with us. But all such as are ripe before the end of August are, for aught I know, as good with us as anywhere else. This makes me esteem the true region of gardens in England to be the compass of ten miles about London, where the accidental warmth of air from the fires and steams of so vast a town, makes fruits as well as corn a great deal forwarder than in Hampshire or Wiltshire, though more southward by a full degree.

There are, besides the temper of our climate, two things particular to us that contribute much to the beauty and elegance of our gardens, which are the gravel of our walks, and the fineness and almost perpetual greenness of our turf. The first is not known anywhere else, which leaves all their dry walks in other countries very unpleasant and uneasy. The other cannot be found in France or in Holland, as we have it, the soil not admitting that fineness of blade in Holland, nor the sun that greenness in France, during most of the summer; nor, indeed, is it to be found but in the finest of our soils.

Moor Park Garden.

The perfectest figure of a garden I ever saw, either at home or abroad, was that of Moor-Park in Hertfordshire, when I knew it about thirty years ago. It was made by the Countess of Bedford, esteemed among the greatest wits of her time, and celebrated by Doctor Donne; and with very great care, excellent contrivance, and much cost; but greater sums may be thrown away without effect or honour, if there want sense in proportion to money, or if nature be not followed; which I take to be the great rule in this, and perhaps in every thing else, as far as the conduct not only of our lives, but our governments. And whether the greatest of mortal men should attempt the forcing of nature may best be judged, by observing how seldom God Almighty does it himself, by so few, true, and undisputed miracles as we see or hear of in the world. For my own part, I know not three wiser precepts for the conduct either of princes or private men, than —*Servare modum, finemque tueri,

Naturamque sequi.*

Because I take the garden I have named to have been in all kinds the most beautiful and perfect, at least in the figure and disposition, that I have ever seen, I will describe it for a model to those that meet with such a situation, and are above the regards of common expence. It lies on the side of a hill (upon which the house stands), but not very steep. The length of the house, where the best rooms and of most use or pleasure are, lies upon the breadth of the garden; the great parlour opens into the middle of a terras gravel-walk that lies even with it, and which may be, as I remember, about three hundred paces long, and broad in proportion; the border set with standard laurels, and at large distances, which have the beauty of orange-trees out of flower and fruit: from this walk are three descents by many stone-steps, in the middle and at each end, into a very large parterre. This is divided into quarters by gravel walks, and adorned with two fountains and eight statues in the several quarters; at the end of the terras-walk are two summer-houses, and the sides of the parterre are ranged with two large cloisters, open to the garden, upon arches of stone, and ending with two other summer-houses even with the cloisters, which are paved with stone, and designed for walks of shade, there being none other in the whole parterre. Over these two cloisters are two terrasses covered with lead, and fenced with balusters; and the passage into these airy walks is out of the two summer-houses, at the end of the first terras-walk. The cloister facing the south is covered with vines, and would have been proper for an orange-house, and the other for myrtles, or other more common greens; and had, I doubt not, been cast for that purpose, if this piece of gardening had been then in as much vogue as it is now.

From the middle of the parterre is a descent by many steps flying on each side of a grotto that lies between them (covered with lead, and flat) into the lower garden, which is all fruit-trees ranged about the several quarters of a wilderness which is very shady; the walks here are all green, the grotto embellished with figures of shell-rock-work, fountains, and water-works. If the hill had not ended with the lower garden, and the wall were not bounded by a common way that goes through the park, they might have added a third quarter of all greens; but this want is supplied by a garden on the other side the house, which is all of that sort, very wild, shady, and adorned with rough rock-work and fountains.

This was Moor-Park, when I was acquainted with it, and the sweetest place, I think, that I have seen in my life, either before or since, at home or abroad; what it is now, I can give little account, having passed through several hands that have made great changes in gardens as well as houses; but the remembrance of what it was is too pleasant ever to forget, and therefore I do not believe to have mistaken the figure of it, which may serve for a pattern to the best gardens of our manner, and that are most proper for our country and climate.

On Poetry.

But to spin off this thread, which is already grown too long: what honour and request the ancient poetry has lived in, may not only be observed from the universal reception and use in all nations from China to Peru, from Scythia to Arabia, but from the esteem of the best and the greatest men as well as the vulgar. Among the Hebrews, David and Solomon, the wisest kings, Job and Jeremiah, the holiest men, were the best poets of their nation and language. Among the Greeks, the two most renowned sages and lawgivers were Lycurgus and Solon, whereof the last is known to have excelled in poetry, and the first was so great a lover of it, that to his care and industry we are said (by some authors) to owe the collection and preservation of the loose and scattered pieces of Homer in the order wherein they have since appeared. Alexander is reported neither to have travelled nor slept without those admirable poems always in his company. Phalaris, that was inexorable to all other enemies, relented at the charms of Stesichorus his muse. Among the Romans, the last and great Scipio passed the soft hours of his life in the conversation of Terence, and was thought to have a part in the composition of his comedies. Cæsar was an excellent poet as well as orator, and composed a poem in his voyage from Rome to Spain, relieving the tedious difficulties of his march with the entertainments of his muse. Augustus was not only a patron, but a friend and companion of Virgil and Horace, and was himself both an admirer of poetry, and a pretender too, as far as his genius would reach, or his busy scene allow. 'Tis true, since his age we have few such examples of great princes favouring or affecting poetry, and as few perhaps of great poets deserving it. Whether it be that the fierceness of the Gothic humours or noise of their perpetual wars frightened it away, or that the unequal mixture of the modern languages would not bear it; certain it is that the great heights and excellency both of poetry and music fell with the Roman learning and empire, and have never since recovered the admiration and applauses that before attended them. Yet, such as they are amongst us, they must be confessed to be the softest and sweetest, the most general and most innocent amusements of common time and life. They still find room in the courts of princes and the cottages of shepherds. They serve to revive and animate the dead calm of poor or idle lives, and to allay or divert the violent passions and perturbations of the greatest and the busiest men. And both these effects are of equal use to human life; for the mind of man is like the sea, which is neither agreeable to the beholder nor the voyager in a calm or in a storm, but is so to both when a little agitated by gentle gales; and so the mind, when moved by soft and easy passions and affections. I know very well that many who pretend to be wise by the forms of being grave, are apt to despise both poetry and music as toys and trifles too light for the use or entertainment of serious men. But whoever find themselves wholly insensible to these charms, would I think do well to keep their own counsel, for fear of reproaching their own temper and bringing the goodness of their natures, if not of their understandings, into question: it may be thought at least an ill sign, if not an ill constitution, since some of the fathers went so far as to esteem the love of music a sign of predestination, as a thing divine, and reserved for the felicities of heaven itself. While this world lasts, I doubt not but the pleasure and requests of these two entertainments will do so too: and happy those that content themselves with these, or any other so easy and so innocent; and do not trouble the world or other men, because they cannot be quiet themselves, though no body hurts them!

When all is done, human life is at the greatest and the best but like a froward child, that must be played with and humoured a little to keep it quiet till it falls asleep, and then the care is over.

Temple's Essay upon the Ancient and Modern Learning gave occasion to a very celebrated literary controversy. The question was raised by a work of Charles Perrault (immortal as the author of 'Puss in Boots,' 'Cinderella,' and 'Blue Beard') in which, with the view of flattering the pride of the Grand Monarque, it was affirmed that the writers of antiquity had been excelled by those of modern times. Boileau strenuously opposed the doctrine; and in behalf of the ancients Sir William also took the field. According to Perrault, 'we must have more knowledge than the ancients, because we have the advantage both of theirs and our own; as a dwarf standing upon a giant's shoulders sees more and further than he;' the ancients are really the young of the earth, and we are the true ancients. Temple replies that the ancients derived vast stores of knowledge from their predecessors—the Chinese, Indians, Egyptians, Chaldeans, Persians, Syrians, and Jews; and thence, no doubt, Orpheus, Homer, Lycurgus, Pythagoras, and Plato drew their stores. Temple, whose scholarship was inadequate (he knew no Greek, and the essay was rather a jeu d'esprit than a critical performance), absurdly assumed as facts the veriest fables—as about Orpheus, asking triumphantly, 'What are become of the charms of music, by which men and beasts, fishes, fowls, and serpents, were so frequently enchanted, and their very natures changed; by which the passions of men were raised to the greatest height and violence, and then as suddenly appeased, so that they might be justly said to be turned into lions or lambs, into wolves or into harts, by the powers and charms of this admirable art?' The more ancient sages of Greece were greater men than Hippocrates, Plato, and Xenophon. 'There is nothing new in astronomy,' he says, 'to vie with the ancients, unless it be the Copernican system; nor in physic unless Harvey's circulation of the blood'! But it is disputed whether these discoveries are not derived from ancient fountains; in any case they have 'made no change in the conclusions of astronomy nor in the practice of physic, and so have been of little use to the world, though perhaps of much honour to the authors' (!) In comparing 'the great wits among the moderns' with the authors of antiquity, he mentions no Englishmen except Sir Philip Sidney, Bacon, and Selden, leaving Shakespeare and Milton altogether out of view. After Ariosto, Tasso, and Spenser, he 'knows none of the moderns that have made any achievements in heroic poetry worth recording.' Descartes and Hobbes are 'the only new philosophers that have made entries upon the noble stage of the sciences for fifteen hundred years past.' But Temple's most unlucky blunder was his adducing the Greek Epistles of Phalaris to prove that 'the oldest books we have are still in their kind the best;' these Epistles 'I think to have more grace, more spirit, more force of wit and genius, than any others I have seen, either ancient or modern.' In fairness to Temple, however, it must be added that in the essay on Poetry, published in the same volume, he shows a much more adequate knowledge and appreciation of the moderns, extolling 'the matchless writer of Don Quixote,' and asserting that the English drama, in its development under Shakespeare and his successors, had 'in some kind excelled both the ancient and the modern' achievements in that line. Temple's Essay led to the appearance of a new edition of the Epistles by Charles Boyle, afterwards Earl of Orrery; and so Boyle got into a quarrel with the great critic Bentley. Bentley demonstrated the Epistles to be a forgery, spoke irreverently of Temple, and in his immortal dissertation (1699) overwhelmed Boyle, Aldrich, Atterbury, and other Christ Church doctors with ridicule. Swift came into the field on behalf of his patron with his famous Battle of the Books, and to the end of his life spoke of Bentley with contempt. Many other contemporaries also engaged in the fray, critical opinion being all on one side, though good wit and satire were squandered on the other—and not wholly in vain, for the uncritical view continued to assert itself from time to time. To one of Bentley's allies Temple wrote a reply, which might partly have suggested Swift's account, in Gulliver's Travels, of experimental researches of the projectors at Lagado :

What has been produced for the use, benefit, or pleasure of mankind, by all the airy speculations of those who have passed for the great advancers of knowledge and learning these last fifty years (which is the date of our modern pretenders), I confess I am yet to seek, and should be very glad to find. I have indeed heard of wondrous pretensions and visions of men possessed with notions of the strange advancement of learning and sciences on foot in this age, and the progress they are like to make in the next ; as the universal medicine, which will certainly cure all that have it ; the philosopher's stone, which will be found out by men that care not for riches ; the transfusion of young blood into old men's veins, which will make them as gamesome as the lambs from which 'tis to be derived ; an universal language, which may serve all men's turn when they have forgot their own ; the knowledge of one another's thoughts without the grievous trouble of speaking ; the art of flying, till a man happens to fall down and break his neck ; double-bottomed ships, whereof none can ever be cast away besides the first that was made ; the admirable virtues of that noble and necessary juice called spittle, which will come to be sold, and very cheap, in the apothecaries' shops ; discoveries of new worlds in the planets, and voyages between this and that in the moon, to be made as frequently as between York and London : which such poor mortals as I am think as wild as those of Ariosto, but without half so much wit or so much instruction ; for there these modern sages may know where they may hope in time to find their lost senses, preserved in phials with those of Orlando.

The following is part of one of Dorothy Osborne's letters to her betrothed, written from her father's house of Chicksands, in Bedfordshire, in 1653 :

You ask me how I pass my time here. I can give you a perfect account not only of what I do for the present, but of what I am likely to do this seven years if I stay here so long. I rise in the morning reasonably early, and before I am ready I go round the house till I am weary of that, and then into the garden till it grows too hot for me. About ten o'clock I think of making me ready, and when that's done I go into my father's chamber, from whence to dinner, where my cousin Molle and I sit in great state in a room, and at a table that would hold a great many more. After dinner we sit and talk till Mr B. comes in question, and then I am gone. The heat of the day is spent in reading or working, and about six or seven o'clock I walk out into a common that lies hard by the house, where a great many young wenches keep sheep and cows, and sit in the shade singing of ballads. I go to them and compare their voices and beauties to some ancient shepherdesses that I have read of, and find a vast difference there ; but, trust me, I think these are as innocent as those could be. I talk to them, and find they want nothing to make them the happiest people in the world but the knowledge that they are so. Most commonly, when we are in the midst of our discourse, one looks about her, and spies her cows going into the corn, and then away they all run as if they had wings at their heels. I, that am not so nimble, stay behind ; and when I see them driving home their cattle, I think 'tis time for me to return too. When I have supped, I go into the garden, and so to the side of a small river that runs by it, when I sit down and wish you were with me (you had best say this is not kind neither). In earnest, 'tis a pleasant place, and would be much more so to me if I had your company. I sit there sometimes till I am lost with thinking ; and were it not for some cruel thoughts of the crossness of our fortunes that will not let me sleep there, I should forget that there were such a thing to be done as going to bed.

Since I writ this my company is increased by two, my brother Harry and a fair niece, the eldest of my brother Peyton's children. She is so much a woman that I am almost ashamed to say I am her aunt ; and so pretty, that, if I had any design to gain of servants, I should not like her company ; but I have none, and therefore shall endeavour to keep her here as long as I can persuade her father to spare her, for she will easily consent to it, having so much of my humour (though it be the worst thing in her) as to like a melancholy place and little company. My brother John is not come down again, nor am I certain when he will be here. He went from London into Gloucestershire to my sister who was very ill, and his youngest girl, of which he was very fond, is since dead. But I believe by that time his wife has a little recovered her sickness and loss of her child, he will be coming this way. My father is reasonably well, but keeps his chamber still, and will hardly, I am afraid, ever be so perfectly recovered as to come abroad again.

Temple's collected works fill 4 vols. (1814). See, besides the older Lives by Boyer, Swift, and Temple's sister, Lady Giffard, the elaborate Memoirs by T. P. Courtenay (1836), Macaulay's brilliant Essay thereon, Dr C. Marburg's study (1932), and Smith's edition of Dorothy Osborne's Letters (1928). The best of all criticisms of Temple as an essayist is Lamb's essay on 'The Genteel Style of Writing.'

The Marquis of Halifax (GEORGE SAVILE ; 1633–95) was distinguished as statesman, orator, and political writer. In the contests between the Crown and the Parliament after the restoration of Charles II. he was alternately in high favour with both parties as he supported or opposed the measures of each. He opposed the Test Bill in 1675 ; as a keen critic of the Cabal he secured the king's dislike, but after 1678 became the chiefest favourite at court. To popery he was unfeignedly hostile, and he disliked the Duke of York as the representative of French influence and Catholic hopes, yet it was his skill and power in debate that did most to defeat the bill excluding the Duke from the succession to the throne. For this he was elevated to the dignity of marquis, Keeper of the Privy Seal, and President of the Council. He retained his offices till his opposition to the proposed repeal of the Test and Habeas Corpus Acts caused his dismissal. After the flight of James, Halifax was chosen Speaker of the peers in the convention, and obtained his old office of Privy Seal, but he again lost favour, and joined the ranks of the Opposition. He was a Trimmer, as Lord Macaulay says, from principle, as well as from constitution: 'Every faction in the day of its insolent and vindictive triumph incurred his censure; and every faction when vanquished and persecuted found in him a protector;' and according to the same authority, the Revolution 'bears the character of the great and cautious mind of Halifax.' He figures (favourably) as Jotham in Absalom and Achitophel. His political and miscellaneous tracts deserve to be studied for their political insight and literary merit, and entitle him to a place among English classics. They consist of short treatises, including Advice to a Daughter, The Character of a Trimmer, Anatomy of an Equivalent, Maxims of State, and Letter to a Dissenter. Mackintosh said (hyperbolically) that the Letter to a Dissenter was the finest political tract ever written. The modern character of Halifax's style is no less remarkable than his logic and happy illustration. He ranks as one of the founders of modern English prose, and in his best passages matches the true eloquence of Sir Thomas Browne and Jeremy Taylor. The Character of a Trimmer (1685), interpreting the word in a good sense, was meant to advise Charles II. to throw off the influence of his brother James. The Rough Draft of a New Model at Sea, not published till 1701, fully recognises the importance to England of the sea and of her navy, and contains the sentence: 'To the question, What shall we do to be saved in this world? there is no answer but this: Look to your moat.' Amongst his Maxims of State are: 'He who thinks his place below him will certainly be below his place,' and 'Men love to see themselves in the false looking-glass of other men's failings.' It was Halifax who said that Rochester, when appointed to the post of Lord President, 'had been kicked upstairs.' His first wife was a daughter of Waller's 'Sacharissa'; his daughter was the mother of the famous Earl of Chesterfield. Henry Carey, the poet-musician, was a natural son of Halifax.

Miss Foxcroft has no doubt that the Character of a Trimmer was a retort to a denunciation by L'Estrange (see page 741), in the Observer in December 1684, of 'the humour of a trimmer;' as L'Estrange's burst was a reply to a pamphlet called The Observer proved a Trimmer. L'Estrange rails at a Trimmer as 'a hundred thousand things,' as 'a man of latitude as well in politiques as divinity,' as 'one that for the ease of travellers towards the New Jerusalem proposes the cutting of the broad way and the narrow both into one,' and so on, in a vehement paragraph. As L'Estrange was licenser of the press, Halifax must have made up his mind beforehand to circulate his pamphlet in MS. It was presumably written in December 1684 or January 1685, and was not published till some time in 1688.

The following are extracts (the first being the preface, the last the conclusion) from

'The Character of a Trimmer.'

It must be more than an ordinary provocation that can tempt a man to write in an age overrun with scribblers as Egypt was with flies and locusts. That worse vermin of small authors hath given the world such a surfeit that, instead of desiring to write, a man would be inclined to wish, for his own ease, that he could not read; but there are some things that do so raise our passions that our reason can make no resistance; and when madmen in the two extremes shall agree to make common-sense treason, and join to fix an ill character on the only men in a nation who deserve a good one, I am no longer master of my better resolutions to let the world alone, and must break loose from my more reasonable thoughts to expose those false coiners who would make their copper words pass upon us for good payment.

Amongst all the engines of dissension there hath been none more powerful in all times than the fixing names upon one another of contumely and reproach. And the reason is plain in respect of the people, who, though generally they are incapable of making a syllogism or forming an argument, yet they can pronounce a word; and that serveth their turn to throw it with their dull malice at the head of those they do not like. Such things ever begin in jest, and end in blood; and the same word which at first maketh the company merry, groweth in time to a military signal to cut one another's throats. These mistakes are to be lamented, though not easily to be cured, being suitable enough to the corrupted nature of mankind; but it is hard that men will not only invent ill names, but they will wrest and misinterpret good ones. So afraid some are even of a reconciling sound that they raise another noise to keep it from being heard, lest it should set up and encourage a dangerous sort of men, who prefer peace and agreement before violence and confusion. Were it not for this, why, after we have played the fool with throwing Whig and Tory one at another as boys do snowballs, do we grow angry at a new name which by its true signification might do as much to put us into our wits as the others have done to put us out of them?

This innocent word 'Trimmer' signifieth no more than this, that if men are together in a boat, and one part of the company would weigh it down of one side, another would make it lean as much to the contrary; it happeneth there is a third opinion of those who conceive it would do as well if the boat went even, without endangering the passengers. Now, it is hard to imagine by what figure in language, or by what rule in sense, this cometh to be a fault, and it is much more a wonder it should be thought a heresy. But it so happeneth that the poor Trimmer hath now all the powder spent upon him alone, whilst the Whig is a forgotten or at least a neglected enemy. There is no danger now to the state (if some men may be believed) but from the beast called a Trimmer. Take heed of him: he is the instrument that must destroy Church and State—a strange kind of monster whose deformity is so exposed that, were it a true picture that is made of him, it would be enough to fright children and make women miscarry at the first sight of it. But it may be worth examining whether he is such a beast as he is painted. I am not of that opinion, and am so far from thinking him an infidel either in Church or

State that I am neither afraid to expose the articles of his faith in relation to government, nor to say I prefer them before any other political creed that either our angry divines or our refined statesmen would impose upon us. I have therefore in the following discourse endeavoured to explain the Trimmer's principles and opinions, and then leave it to all discerning and impartial judges whether he can with justice be so arraigned, and whether those who deliberately pervert a good name do not very justly deserve the worst that can be put upon themselves.

Political Agitation not always Hurtful.

Our government is like our climate. There are winds which are sometimes loud and unquiet, and yet with all the trouble they give us, we owe great part of our health to them. They clear the air, which else would be like a standing pool, and instead of a refreshment would be a disease to us. There may be fresh gales of asserted liberty without turning into such storms of hurricane as that the state should run any hazard of being cast away by them. Those strugglings which are natural to all mixed governments, while they are kept from growing into convulsions, do by a natural agitation of the several parts rather support and strengthen than weaken or maim the constitution; and the whole frame, instead of being torn or disjointed, cometh to be the better and closer knit by being thus exercised.

Truth and Moderation.

Our Trimmer adareth the goddess Truth, though in all ages she has been scurvily used, as well as those that worshipped her. . . . She sheweth her greatness in this, that her enemies, even when they are successful, are ashamed to own it; nothing but powerful truth hath the prerogative of triumphing, not only after victory, but in spite of it, and to put conquest itself out of countenance. She may be kept under and suppressed, but her dignity still remaineth with her, even when she is in chains. Falsehood with all her impudence hath not enough to speak ill of her before her face. Such majesty she carrieth about her, that her most prosperous enemies are fain to whisper their treason; all the power upon the earth can never extinguish her; she hath lived in all ages; and, let the mistaken zeal of prevailing authority christen an opposition to it with what name they please, she makes it not only an ugly and unmannerly but a dangerous thing to persist. She has lived very retiredly indeed, nay sometimes so buried that only some few of the discerning part of mankind could have a glimpse of her; with all that, she hath eternity in her; she knoweth not how to die, and from the darkest clouds that shade and cover her, she breaketh from time to time with triumph for her friends and terror to her enemies.

Our Trimmer, therefore, inspired by this divine virtue, thinks fit to conclude with these assertions: That our climate is a trimmer between that part of the world where men are roasted, and the other where they are frozen: that our church is a trimmer between the frenzy of fanatic visions and the lethargic ignorance of popish dreams: that our laws are trimmers, between the excess of unbounded power and the extravagance of liberty not enough restrained: that true virtue hath ever been thought a trimmer, and to have its dwelling between the two extremes: that even God Almighty himself is divided between his two great attributes, his mercy and justice. In such company, our Trimmer is not ashamed of his name, and willingly leaveth to the bold champions of either extreme the honour of contending with no less adversaries than nature, religion, liberty, prudence, humanity, and common-sense.

The works of Halifax were first collected, revised, and edited along with his Letters and a Life by Miss Foxcroft in 1898. Sir W. Raleigh edited the Complete Works in 1912.

Isaac Barrow (1630-77) was the son of a London linen-draper. At the Charterhouse he was more distinguished for pugnacity than for application to his books; but at Felstead, in Essex, his next school, he greatly improved. He studied for the Church at Trinity College, Cambridge, and was elected a fellow in 1649. Perceiving that under the Commonwealth the ascendancy of alien theological and political opinions gave him little chance of preferment, he turned to medicine, anatomy, botany, and chemistry; but ere long he returned to theology, with mathematics and astronomy. In 1655, disappointed in his hopes of the Greek professorship at Cambridge, he went abroad for four years, visiting France, Italy, Smyrna, Constantinople, Venice, Germany, and Holland. On his outward voyage he fought bravely in a brush with Algerine corsairs; at the Turkish capital, where he spent twelve months, he studied with great delight the works of St Chrysostom, originally written in Constantinople. He returned to England in 1659, and in the following year obtained the Greek chair without opposition; and in 1662 he was further made Professor of Geometry at Gresham College in London. Both these appointments he resigned in 1663, on becoming Lucasian Professor of Mathematics at Cambridge. After lecturing for six years, and publishing a profound work on Optics, he resolved to devote himself to theology, and in 1669 resigned his chair to Newton. He was appointed one of the royal chaplains; in 1672 he was nominated to the mastership of Trinity College by the king, and for the two years before his death he was vice-chancellor of the university; and he was buried in Westminster Abbey. His candour, modesty, disinterestedness, and serenity of temper were conspicuous; his manners and aspect were more those of a student than of a man of the world; and he was oddly heedless about dress.

Of his great powers as a mathematician Barrow left evidence in a series of treatises, nearly all in Latin, though afterwards translated; and he wrote Latin verses. But it is by his theological works that he is generally known—expositions of the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, the Decalogue, and the Doctrine of the Sacraments; treatises on the Pope's Supremacy and the Unity of the Church; and sermons prized for depth and copiousness of thought, and nervous though unpolished eloquence. Less academic, more modern and popular than South, Barrow was rather fond of antitheses and rhetorical interrogations, and occasionally permitted himself a very homely vernacular word or a fantastic coinage from Latin. He transcribed his sermons three or four times; they seldom occupied less than an hour and a half in delivery. At a charity sermon before the Lord Mayor and aldermen of London, he spoke for three hours and a half; and when asked, on coming down from the pulpit, whether he was not tired, he replied, 'Yes, indeed, I began to be weary with standing so long.'

Of Apparitions.

I may adjoin to the former sorts of extraordinary actions, some other sorts, the consideration of which (although not so directly and immediately) may serve our main design; those (which the general opinion of mankind hath approved, and manifold testimony hath declared frequently to happen) which concern apparitions from another world, as it were, of beings unusual; concerning spirits haunting persons and places (these discerned by all senses, and by divers kinds of effects); of which the old world (the ancient poets and historians) did speak so much, and of which all ages have afforded several attestations very direct and plain, and having all advantages imaginable to beget credence; concerning visions made unto persons of especial eminency and influence (to priests and prophets); concerning presignifications of future events by dreams; concerning the power of enchantments, implying the co-operation of invisible powers; concerning all sorts of intercourse and confederacy (formal or virtual) with bad spirits: all which things he that shall affirm to be mere fiction and delusion, must thereby with exceeding immodesty and rudeness charge the world with extreme both vanity and malignity; many, if not all, worthy historians, of much inconsiderateness or fraud; most lawgivers, of great silliness and rashness; most judicatories, of high stupidity or cruelty; a vast number of witnesses, of the greatest malice or madness; all which have concurred to assert these matters of fact.

ISAAC BARROW.

From the Portrait by Claude Le Fevre in the National Portrait Gallery.

It is true no question but there have been many vain pretences, many false reports, many unjust accusations, and some undue decisions concerning these matters; that the vulgar sort is apt enough to be abused about them; that even intelligent and considerate men may at a distance in regard to some of them be imposed upon; but, as there would be no false gems obtruded, if there were no true ones found in nature; as no counterfeit coin would appear, were there no true one current; so neither can we well suppose that a confidence in some to feign or a readiness in most to believe stories of this kind could arise or should subsist without some real ground, or without such things having in gross somewhat of truth and reality. However, that the wiser and more refined sort of men, highest in parts and improvements both from study and experience (indeed the flower of every commonwealth; statesmen, lawgivers, judges, and priests), upon so many occasions of great importance, after most deliberate scanning such pretences and reports, should so often suffer themselves to be deluded, to the extreme injury of particular persons concerned, to the common abusing of mankind, to the hazard of their own reputation in point of wisdom and honesty, seems nowise reasonable to conceive. In likelihood rather the whole kind of all these things, were it altogether vain and groundless, would upon so frequent and so mature discussions have appeared to be so, and would consequently long since have been disowned, exploded, and thrust out of the world; for as upon this occasion it is said in Tully, Time wipeth out groundless conceits, but confirms that which is founded in nature and real.

Now if the truth and reality of these things (all or any of them), inferring the existence of powers invisible, at least inferior ones, though much superior to us in all sort of ability, be admitted, it will at least (as removing the chief obstacles of incredulity) confer much to the belief of that supreme Divinity, which our discourse strives to maintain.

I must acknowledge that both these arguments, drawn from testimonies concerning matters of fact (and indeed all other arguments), were invalid and insignificant, could any demonstration or any argument weighty enough be brought to shew the impossibility of such a thing to exist, as we infer to exist from them. But as it is a very easy thing (so whoever is versed in speculation and reasoning about things cannot but find) to prove many things possible to be, which do not actually exist; so it is hard to prove the impossibility of a thing's being; yea there is plainly no other mean of doing this than the manifesting an evident repugnance between being itself and some property assigned to that thing, or between several properties attributed thereto; as if we should suppose a square circle or a round square to exist. But in our case no man can shew such a repugnance; between being and wisdom, power or goodness, there is no inconsistency surely; nor can any man evince one to be between being and coexisting with matter, or penetrating body; between being and insensibility; between being and any other property which we ascribe to God; nor is there any clashing between those properties themselves: it is therefore impossible to shew that God cannot exist; and therefore it is unreasonable to disbelieve the testimonies (so many, so pregnant) that declare him to exist.

Men indeed, who affix themselves to things which their sense offers, may be indisposed to abstract their minds from such things, may be unapt to frame conceptions about any other sort of things; but to think there can be no other things than such as we see and feel, that nothing endued with other properties than such as these objected to our sense have can exist, implies a great dulness of apprehension, a greater shortness of reason and judgment; it is much like the simplicity of a rustic, who, because he never was above three miles from home, cannot imagine the world to reach ten miles farther; and will look upon all that is told him concerning things more distant to be false, and forged to abuse him. I add that these men's incredulity is hence more inexcusable, because the possibility of such a being's existence, the compatibility and concurrence of such properties in one thing, is (as we elsewhere have largely shewed) by a very plain instance declared, even by that being within every man, which in a degree partakes of all those properties.

I shall leave this head of discourse, with this one remark; that they are much mistaken who place a kind of wisdom in being very incredulous, and unwilling to assent to any testimony, how full and clear soever: for this indeed is not wisdom, but the worst kind of folly. It is folly, because it causes ignorance and mistake, with all the consequents of these; and it is very bad, as being accompanied with disingenuity, obstinacy, rudeness, uncharitableness, and the like bad dispositions; from which credulity itself, the other extreme sort of folly, is exempt. Compare we, I say, these two sorts of fools; the credulous fool, who yields his assent hastily upon any slight ground; and the suspicious fool, who never will be stirred by any the strongest reason or clearest testimony; we shall find the latter in most respects the worst of the two; that his folly arises from worse causes, hath worse adjuncts, produceth worse effects. Credulity may spring from an airy complexion, or from a modest opinion of one's self; suspiciousness hath its birth from an earthy temper of body, or from self-conceit in the mind: that carries with it being civil and affable, and apt to correct an error; with this a man is intractable, unwilling to hear, stiff and incorrigible in his ignorance or mistake: that begets speed and alacrity in action; this renders a man heavy and dumpish, slow and tedious in his resolutions and in his proceedings: both include want of judgment; but this pretending to more thereof, becomes thereby more dangerous. Forward rashness, which is the same with that, may sometimes, like an acute disease, undo a man sooner; but stupid dotage, little differing from this, is (like a chronical distemper) commonly more mischievous, and always more hard to cure. In fine, were men in their other affairs or in ordinary converse so diffident to plain testimony as some do seem to be in these matters concerning religion, they would soon feel great inconveniences to proceed thence; their business would stick, their conversation would be distasteful; they would be much more offensive, and no less ridiculous than the most credulous fool in the world. While men therefore so perversely distrustful affect to seem wise, they affect really to be fools; and practise according to the worst sort of folly.

(From Sermon, 'The Being of God proved from Supernatural Effects.')

What kind of Jestings Paul forbids.

But however manifest it is that some kind thereof he doth earnestly forbid: whence, in order to the guidance of our practice, it is needful to distinguish the kinds, severing that which is allowable from that which is unlawful; that so we may be satisfied in the case, and not on the one hand ignorantly transgress our duty, nor on the other trouble ourselves with scruples, others with censures, upon the use of warrantable liberty therein.

And such a resolution seemeth indeed especially needful in this our age (this pleasant and jocular age), which is so infinitely addicted to this sort of speaking, that it scarce doth affect or prize any thing near so much; all reputation appearing now to veil and stoop to that of being a wit: to be learned, to be wise, to be good, are nothing in comparison thereto; even to be noble and rich are inferior things, and afford no such glory. Many at least, to purchase this glory, to be deemed considerable in this faculty, and enrolled among the wits, do not only make shipwreck of conscience, abandon virtue, and forfeit all pretences to wisdom; but neglect their estates and prostitute their honour: so to the private damage of many particular persons, and with no small prejudice to the public, are our times possessed and transported with this humour. To repress the excess and extravagance whereof, nothing in way of discourse can serve better than a plain declaration when and how such a practice is allowable or tolerable; when it is wicked and vain, unworthy of a man endued with reason, and pretending to honesty or honour.

This I shall in some measure endeavour to perform.

But first it may be demanded what the thing we speak of is, or what this facetiousness doth import? To which question I might reply as Democritus did to him that asked the definition of a man, It is that which we all see and know: any one better apprehends what it is by acquaintance, than I can inform him by description. It is indeed a thing so versatile and multiform, appearing in so many shapes, so many postures, so many garbs, so variously apprehended by several eyes and judgments, that it seemeth no less hard to settle a clear and certain notion thereof, than to make a portrait of Proteus, or to define the figure of the fleeting air. Sometimes it lieth in pat allusion to a known story, or in seasonable application of a trivial saying, or in forging an apposite tale: sometimes it playeth in words and phrases, taking advantage from the ambiguity of their sense, or the affinity of their sound: sometimes it is wrapped in a dress of humorous expression: sometimes it lurketh under an odd similitude: sometimes it is lodged in a sly question, in a smart answer, in a quirkish reason, in a shrewd intimation, in cunningly diverting, or cleverly retorting an objection: sometimes it is couched in a bold scheme of speech, in a tart irony, in a lusty hyperbole, in a startling metaphor, in a plausible reconciling of contradictions, or in acute nonsense: sometimes a scenical representation of persons or things, a counterfeit speech, a mimical look or gesture passeth for it; sometimes an affected simplicity, sometimes a presumptuous bluntness giveth it being: sometimes it riseth from a lucky hitting upon what is strange, sometimes from a crafty wresting obvious matter to the purpose: often it consisteth in one knows not what, and springeth up one can hardly tell how. Its ways are unaccountable and inexplicable, being answerable to the numberless roving of fancy and windings of language. It is in short a manner of speaking out of the simple and plain way (such as reason teacheth and proveth things by), which by a pretty surprising uncouthness in conceit or expression doth affect and amuse the fancy, stirring in it some wonder, and breeding some delight thereto. It raiseth admiration, as signifying a nimble sagacity of apprehension, a special felicity of invention, a vivacity of spirit, and reach of wit more than vulgar: it seeming to argue a rare quickness of parts, that one can fetch in remote conceits applicable; a notable skill, that he can dexterously accommodate them to the purpose before him; together with a lively briskness of humour, not apt to damp those sportful flashes of imagination. (Whence in Aristotle such persons are termed ἐπιδελξιοί, dexterous men; and εὐτροποί, men of facile or versatile manners, who can easily turn themselves to all things, or turn all things to themselves.) It also procureth delight, by gratifying curiosity with its rareness or semblance of difficulty (as monsters, not for their beauty, but their rarity; as juggling tricks, not for their use, but their abstruseness, are beheld with pleasure); by diverting the mind from its road of serious thoughts; by instilling gaiety and airiness of spirit; by provoking to such dispositions of spirit in way of emulation or complaisance; and by seasoning matters otherwise distasteful or insipid with an unusual and thence grateful tang.

(From Sermon 'Against Foolish Talking and Jestings'.)

There is an edition of Barrow's Theological Works by Napier, with a Memoir by Whewell (9 vols. 1859).

Robert South, D.D. (1634–1716), the wittiest of English divines, was born a London merchant's son at Hackney, educated for four years under Busby at Westminster, and elected student of Christ Church, together with Locke, in 1651. Three years later he took his bachelor's degree, and wrote a Latin copy of verses congratulating the Protector Cromwell on his peace with the Dutch. In 1658 he received orders from a deprived bishop, and was appointed in 1660 public orator to the university. During his tenure of this office occurred many striking occasions for his eloquence—the installation of Clarendon as chancellor in 1661; the burial of Juxon and the translation of Laud in July 1663; the visit of the king and queen, and the presentation of Monmouth for a degree, in September 1663; the foundation of the Sheldonian Theatre in 1664, and its formal opening in 1669. His vigorous sermons, full of sarcastic mockery of the Puritans, were delightful to the restored royalists. He became domestic chaplain to Clarendon, and further preferment followed quickly. In 1663 he was made prebendary of Westminster, canon of Christ Church in 1670, and rector of Islip in Oxfordshire in 1678. He went as chaplain with Clarendon's son, Laurence Hyde, afterwards Earl of Rochester, on his embassy to congratulate John Sobieski on mounting the throne of Poland (1677), and in December wrote from Danzig his impressions in the long and interesting Account sent to Pocock, the Oxford professor of Hebrew. It is supposed that South might have been a bishop if he would, and there is one story on record of his preaching in 1681 before the king on 'The lot is cast into the lap' (Prov. xvi. 33). Speaking of the strange accidents of fortune, he said, 'And who, that had beheld such a bankrupt, beggarly fellow as Cromwell, first entering the Parliament-house with a threadbare, torn cloak and a greasy hat (and perhaps neither of them paid for), could have suspected that in the space of so few years he should, by the murder of one king and the banishment of another, ascend the throne, be invested in the royal robes, and want nothing of the state of a king but the changing of his hat into a crown?' At these words the king fell into a violent fit of laughter, and turning to Lord Rochester, said, 'Ods fish, Lory, your chaplain must be a bishop, therefore put me in mind of him at the next death.' Unfortunately for the story, this sermon—one of those published by South himself—is inscribed as 'Preached at Westminster Abbey, February 22, 1684–85,' a fortnight after Charles's death. South suppressed his disapproval of James II.'s Declaration of Indulgence, 'acquiesced in' the Revolution, but blazed out with anger against the proposed scheme of Comprehension. In 1693 began his great controversy with Sherlock, Dean of St Paul's, who, in defending the Trinity against the Socinians, had used language capable of a heterodox interpretation. South flung his Animadversions anonymously into the fray, but the bitter irony and fierce sarcasms quickly betrayed his hand. Not content with demolishing Sherlock's learning, he abused his style, his orthography, the errors of the press, and even descended so low as to sneer at him as a henpecked husband. Sherlock published a Defence, to which South rejoined, and still anonymously, in his no less vigorous Tritheism charged upon Dr Sherlock's new notion of the Trinity. The controversy became the talk of the town, until the king himself interposed by an injunction addressed to the archbishops and bishops to the effect that no preacher should advance views on the Trinity other than those contained in Scripture, and agreeable to the three Creeds and the Thirty-nine Articles. One of the last things recorded of South is his activity in making interest on Dr Sacheverell's behalf, and he is said to have refused the see of Rochester and deanery of Westminster on the death of Dr Sprat (1713). He survived till eighty-three, and was buried in Westminster.

South's sermons are masterpieces of clear thought expressed in direct, vigorous English, sometimes rising to splendid eloquence, and often seasoned with a wit and sarcasm altogether unusual in the pulpit, and at times far beyond the limits of propriety. A masculine intellect, a mastery of arrangement and analysis, and an uncompromising strength of conviction and of confidence in his own opinions were qualities enough to make a great preacher, but the one supreme gift of the orator, that of genuine and quickening enthusiasm, was denied him. Still more, even his noblest passages are too often marred by a bitterness and party-spirit which warped his judgment and clouded his intellect with prejudice. 'A learned but ill-natured divine,' as Burnet calls him, he abhorred all mysticism and extravagance, sneered at the new philosophy and the recently founded Royal Society, and carried to a height unusual even among royalists the fatal Stuart theories of passive obedience and the divine right of kings. Still, though South loved to be called the 'preacher of the Old Cavaliers,' he did not spare their vices, while it still remains true that hatred of vice is far less prominent in his preaching than hatred of Nonconformity. Yet South could rise to the height of a great argument, and such sermons as that on 'Man made in the Image of God' give him rank among the greatest masters of English pulpit eloquence. Just as on the one side his power of wrapping up in homely words the bitterest ridicule and invective recalls the stronger hand of Swift, so on the other his positiveness of mind, dialectic skill, and power of passionate indignation remind us of the greater Bossuet. The extracts that follow are all, except the first, from the Sermons.

John Sobieski.

This king is a very well-spoken prince, very easy of access, and extreme civil, having most of the qualities requisite to form a complete gentleman. He is not only well versed in all military affairs, but likewise, through the means of a French education, very opulently stored with all polite and scholastical learning. Besides his own tongue, the Slavonian, he understands the Latin, French, Italian, German, and Turkish languages: he delights much in natural history, and in all the parts of physic; he is wont to reprimand the clergy for not admitting the modern philosophy, such as Le Grand's and Cartesius's, into the universities and schools, and loves to hear people discourse of those matters, and has a particular talent to set people about him very artfully by the ears, that by their disputes he might be directed, as it happened once or twice during this embassy, where he shewed a poignancy of wit on the subject of a dispute held between the Bishop of Posen and Father de la Motte, a Jesuit and his Majesty's confessor, that gave me an extraordinary opinion of his parts.

As for what relates to his Majesty's person, he is a tall and corpulent prince, large-faced, and full eyes, and goes always in the same dress with his subjects, with his hair cut round about his ears like a monk, and wears a fur cap, but extraordinary rich with diamonds and jewels, large whiskers, and no neckcloth. A long robe hangs down to his heels, in the fashion of a coat, and a waistcoat under that, of the same length, tied close about his waist with a girdle. He never wears any gloves; and this long coat is of strong scarlet cloth, lined in the winter with rich fur, but in summer only with silk. Instead of shoes, he always wears, both abroad and at home, Turkey-leather boots with very thin soles, and hollow deep heels, made of a blade of silver bent hoop-wise into the form of a half-moon. He carries always a large scimeter by his side, the sheath equally flat and broad from the handle to the bottom, and curiously set with diamonds.

(From the Account.)

The Will for the Deed.

The third instance in which men used to plead the will instead of the deed, shall be in duties of cost and expense. Let a business of expensive charity be proposed; and then, as I shewed before, that, in matters of labour, the lazy person could find no hands wherewith to work; so neither in this case can the religious miser find any hands wherewith to give. It is wonderful to consider how a command or call to be liberal, either upon a civil or religious account, all of a sudden impoverishes the rich, breaks the merchant, shuts up every private man's exchequer, and makes those men in a minute have nothing at all to give who at the very same instant want nothing to spend. So that instead of relieving the poor, such a command strangely increases their number, and transforms rich men into beggars presently. For let the danger of their prince and country knock at their purses, and call upon them to contribute against a public enemy or calamity, then immediately they have nothing, and their riches upon such occasions—as Solomon expresses it—never fail to make themselves wings, and to fly away. . . .

To descend to matters of daily and common occurrence; what is more usual in conversation than for men to express their unwillingness to do a thing by saying they cannot do it; and for a covetous man, being asked a little money in charity, to answer that he has none? Which, as it is, if true, a sufficient answer to God and man; so, if false, it is intolerable hypocrisy towards both. But do men in good earnest think that God will be put off so? or can they imagine that the law of God will be baffled with a lie clothed in a scoff?

For such pretences are no better, as appears from that notable account given us by the apostle of this windy, insignificant charity of the will, and of the worthlessness of it, not enlivened by deeds (James, ii. 15, 16): 'If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?' Profit, does he say? Why, it profits just as much as fair words command the market, as good wishes buy food and raiment, and pass for current payment in the shops. Come to an old rich professing vulpony [vulpone, fox], and tell him that there is a church to be built, beautified, or endowed in such a place, and that he cannot lay out his money more to God's honour, the public good, and the comfort of his own conscience, than to bestow it liberally upon such an occasion; and in answer to this it is ten to one but you shall be told, 'how much God is for the inward, spiritual worship of the heart; and that the Almighty neither dwells nor delights in temples made with hands, but hears and accepts the prayers of his people in dens and caves, barns and stables; and in the homeliest and meanest cottages, as well as in the stateliest and most magnificent churches.' Thus I say you are like to be answered. In reply to which, I would have all such sly sanctified cheats—who are so often harping on this string—know once for all that that God, who accepts the prayers of his people in dens and caves, barns and stables, when, by his afflicting providence, he has driven them from the appointed places of his solemn worship, so that they cannot have the use of them, will not for all this endure to be served or prayed to by them in such places, nor accept of their barn-worship, nor their hog-sty worship; no, nor yet of their parlour or their chamber worship, where he has given them both wealth and power to build churches. For he that commands us to worship him in the spirit, commands us also to honour him with our substance. And never pretend that thou hast an heart to pray while thou hast no heart to give, since he that serves Mammon with his estate cannot possibly serve God with his heart. For as in the heathen worship of God a sacrifice without an heart was accounted ominous, so, in the Christian worship of him, an heart without a sacrifice is worthless and impertinent. And thus much for men's pretences of the will when they are called upon to give upon a religious account; according to which, a man may be well enough said—as the common word is—to be all heart, and yet the arrantest miser in the world.

But come we now to this rich old pretender to godliness in another case, and tell him that there is such an Ingratitude an Incurable Vice.

As a man tolerably discreet ought by no means to attempt the making of such an one his friend, so neither is he, in the next place, to presume to think that he shall be able so much as to alter or meliorate the humour of an ungrateful person by any acts of kindness, though never so frequent, never so obliging. Philosophy will teach the learned, and experience may teach all, that it is a thing hardly feasible. For, love such a one, and he shall despise you. Commend him, and as occasion serves he shall revile you. Give to him, and he shall but laugh at your easiness. Save his life; but, when you have done, look to your own.

The greatest favours to such an one are but like the motion of a ship upon the waves; they leave no trace, no sign behind them; they neither soften nor win upon him; they neither melt nor endear him, but leave him as hard, as rugged, and as unconcerned as ever. All kindnesses descend upon such a temper as showers of rain or rivers of fresh water falling into the main sea; the sea swallows them all, but is not at all changed or sweetened by them. I may truly say of the mind of an ungrateful person that it is kindness proof. It is impenetrable, unconquerable; unconquerable by that which conquers all things else, even by love itself. Flints may be melted—we see it daily—but an ungrateful heart cannot; no, not by the strongest and the noblest flame. After all your attempts, all your experiments, for anything that man can do, he that is ungrateful will be ungrateful still. And the reason is manifest; for you may remember that I told you that ingratitude sprang from a principle of ill-nature: which being a thing founded in such a certain constitution of blood and spirit, as, being born with a man into the world, and upon that account called nature, shall prevent all remedies that can be applied by education, and leaves such a bias upon the mind as is beforehand with all instruction.

So that you shall seldom or never meet with an ungrateful person but, if you look backward and trace him up to his original, you will find that he was born so; and if you could look forward enough, it is a thousand to one but you will find that he also dies so; for you shall never light upon an ill-natured man who was not also an ill-natured child, and gave several testimonies of his being so to discerning persons, long before the use of his reason. The thread that nature spins is seldom broken off by anything but death. I do not by this limit the operation of God's grace, for that may do wonders: but humanly speaking, and according to the method of the world, and the little correctives supplied by art and discipline, it seldom fails but an ill principle has its course, and nature makes good its blow.

Man before the Fall.

The noblest faculty of man, the understanding, was before the Fall sublime, clear, and aspiring; and, as it were the soul's upper region, lofty and serene, free from the vapours and disturbances of the inferior affections. It was the leading, controlling faculty; all the passions wore the colours of reason; it did not so much persuade as command; it was not consul but dictator. Discourse was then almost as quick as intuition; it was nimble in proposing, firm in concluding; it could sooner determine than now it can dispute. Like the sun, it had both light and agility; it knew no rest but in motion; one, a man of good family, good education, and who has lost all his estate for the king, now ready to rot in prison for debt; come, what will you give towards his release? Why, then answers the will instead of the deed as much the readier speaker of the two: 'The truth is, I always had a respect for such men; I love them with all my heart; and it is a thousand pities that any that had served the king so faithfully should be in such want.' So say I too, and the more shame is it for the whole nation that they should be so. But still, what will you give? Why, then answers the man of mouth-charity again, and tells you that 'you could not come in a worse time; that money is nowadays very scarce with him, and that therefore he can give nothing; but he will be sure to pray for the poor gentleman.' Ah, thou hypocrite! when thy brother has lost all that ever he had, and lies languishing and even gasping under the utmost extremities of poverty and distress, dost thou think thus to lick him whole again only with thy tongue? Just like that old formal hocus who denied a beggar a farthing, and put him off with his blessing.

ROBERT SOUTH.

From the Portrait in the Collect Biography.

no quiet but in activity. It did not so properly apprehend as irradiate the object; not so much find as make things intelligible. It did arbitrate upon the several reports of sense, and all the varieties of imagination; not like a drowsy judge, only hearing, but also directing their verdict. In sum, it was vege, quick, and lively; open as the day, untainted as the morning, full of the innocence and sprightliness of youth; it gave the soul a bright and a full view into all things, and was not only a window, but was itself the prospect. . . .

Study was not then a duty, night-watchings were needless; the light of reason wanted not the assistance of a candle. This is the doom of fallen man, to labour in the fire, to seek truth in profundo, to exhaust his time and impair his health, and perhaps to spin out his days and himself into one pitiful and controverted conclusion. There was then no poring, no struggling with memory, no straining for invention. His faculties were quick and expedite; they answered without knocking, they were ready upon the first summons, there was freedom and firmness in all their operations. I confess 'tis difficult for us, who date our ignorance from our first being, and were still bred up with the same infirmities about us with which we were born, to raise our thoughts and imaginations to those intellectual perfections that attended our nature in the time of innocence; as it is for a peasant bred up in the obscurities of a cottage, to fancy in his mind the unseen splendours of a court. But by rating positives by their privatives, and other arts of reason, by which discourse supplies the want of the reports of sense, we may collect the excellency of the understanding then by the glorious remainders of it now, and guess at the stateliness of the building by the magnificence of its ruins. All those arts, rarities, and inventions which vulgar minds gaze at, the ingenious pursue, and all admire, are but the reliques of an intellect defaced by sin and time. We admire it now only as antiquaries do a piece of old coin, for the stamp it once bore, and not for those vanishing lineaments and disappearing drafts that remain upon it at present. And certainly that must needs have been very glorious the decays of which are so admirable. He that is comely when old and decrepid, surely was very beautiful when he was young. An Aristotle was but the rubbish of an Adam, and Athens but the rudiments of Paradise.

A Good Life the Christian's Logic.

The truths of Christ crucified are the Christian's philosophy, and a good life is the Christian's logic; that great instrumental introductive art that must guide the mind into the former. And where a long course of piety and close communion with God has purged the heart, and rectified the will, and made all things ready for the reception of God's Spirit; knowledge will break in upon such a soul like the sun shining in his full might, with such a victorious light that nothing shall be able to resist it.

If now at length, some should object here, that from what has been delivered it will follow that the most pious men are still the most knowing, which yet seems contrary to common experience and observation: I answer that as to all things directly conducing and necessary to salvation, there is no doubt but they are so; as the meanest common soldier that has fought often in an army has a truer and better knowledge of war than he that has read and writ whole volumes of it, but never was in any battle.

Practical sciences are not to be learnt but in the way of action. It is experience that must give knowledge in the Christian profession, as well as in all others. And the knowledge drawn from experience is quite of another kind from that which flows from speculation or discourse. It is not the opinion but the path of the just that the wisest of men tells us shines more and more unto a perfect day. The obedient and the men of practice are those sons of light that shall outgrow all their doubts and ignorances, that shall ride upon these clouds and triumph over their present imperfections, till persuasion pass into knowledge, and knowledge advance into assurance, and all come at length to be completed in the beatifick vision and a full fruition of those joys which God has in reserve for them, whom by his grace he shall prepare for glory.

Against Lewd Wits.

In the mean time, it cannot but be matter of just indignation to all knowing and good men, to see a company of lewd, shallow-brain'd huffs making atheism and contempt of religion the sole badge and character of wit, gallantry, and true discretion; and then, over their pots and pipes, claiming and engrossing all these wholly to themselves; magisterially censuring the wisdom of all antiquity, scoffing at all piety, and (as it were) new modelling the whole world. When yet such as have had opportunity to sound these braggers throughly, by having sometimes endured the penance of their sottish company, have found them in converse so empty and insipid, in discourse so trifling and contemptible, that it is impossible but that they should give a credit and an honour to whatsoever and whomsoever they speak against: they are indeed such as seem wholly incapable of entertaining any design above the present gratification of their palates, and whose very souls and thoughts rise no higher than their throats; but yet withal of such a clamorous and provoking impiety that they are enough to make the nation like Sodom and Gomorrah in their punishment, as they have already made it too like them in their sins. Certain it is that blasphemy and irreligion have grown to that daring height here of late years that had men in any sober, civilized heathen nation spoke or done half so much in contempt of their false gods and religion, as some in our days and nation, wearing the name of Christians, have spoke and done against God and Christ, they would have been infallibly burnt at a stake, as monsters and public enemies of society.

The truth is, the persons here reflected upon are of such a peculiar stamp of impiety, that they seem to be a set of fellows got together and formed into a kind of diabolical society for the finding out new experiments in vice; and therefore they laugh at the dull, unexperienced, obsolete sinners of former times; and scorning to keep themselves within the common, beaten, broad way to hell, by being vicious only at the low rate of example and imitation, they are for searching out other ways and latitudes, and obliging posterity with unheard-of inventions and discoveries in sin; resolving herein to admit of no other measure of good and evil but the judgment of sensuality, as those who prepare matters to their hands, allow no other measure of the philosophy and truth of things but the sole judgment of sense. And these (forsooth) are our great sages, and those who must pass for the only shrewd, thinking and inquisitive men of the age; and such as by a long, severe, and profound speculation of nature have redeemed themselves from the pedantry of being conscientious and living virtuously, and from such old-fashioned principles and creeds, as tie up the minds of some narrow-spirited, uncomprehensive zealots, who know not the world nor understand that he only is the truly wise man who per fas et nefas gets as much as he can.

But for all this, let atheists and sensualists satisfy themselves as they are able. The former of which will find, that as long as reason keeps her ground, religion neither can nor will lose hers. And for the sensual epicure, he also will find that there is a certain living spark within him which all the drink he can pour in will never be able to quench or put out; nor will his rotten abused body have it in its power to convey any putrefying, consuming, rotting quality to the soul: no, there is no drinking, or swearing, or ranting, or fluxing a soul out of its immortality. But that must and will survive and abide, in spite of death and the grave; and live for ever to convince such wretches to their eternal woe that the so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches, 'God damn 'em!' was commonly the truest word they spoke, though least believed by them while they spoke it.

Canting Prayers and the English Liturgy.

And thus having accounted for the prayers of our Church according to the great rule prescribed in the text, Let thy words be few: let us now, according to the same, consider also the way of praying, so much used and applauded by such as have renounced the communion and liturgy of our Church; and it is but reason that they should bring us something better in the room of what they have so disdainfully cast off. But, on the contrary, are not all their prayers exactly after the heathenish and pharisaical copy? always notable for those two things, length and tautology? Two whole hours for one prayer at a fast used to be reckoned but a moderate dose; and that for the most part fraught with such irreverent, blasphemous expressions, that to repeat them would profane the place I am speaking in; and indeed they seldom carried on the work of such a day (as their phrase was), but they left the Church in need of a new consecration. Add to this, the incoherence and confusion, the endless repetitions, and the unsufferable nonsense that never failed to hold out even with their utmost prolixity; so that in all their long fasts from first to last, from seven in the morning to seven in the evening (which was their measure), the pulpit was always the emptiest thing in the Church: and I never knew such a fast kept by them but their hearers had cause to begin a thanksgiving as soon as they had done. And the truth is, when I consider the matter of their prayers, so full of ramble, and inconsequence, and in every respect so very like the language of a dream; and compare it with their carriage of themselves in prayer, with their eyes for the most part shut, and their arms stretched out in yawning posture, a man that should hear any of them pray, might by a very pardonable error be induced to think that he was all the time hearing one talking in his sleep: besides the strange virtue which their prayers had to procure sleep in others too. So that he who should be present at all their long cant, would shew a greater ability in watching than ever they could pretend to in praying, if he could forbear sleeping, having so strong a provocation to it and so fair an excuse for it. In a word, such were their prayers, both for matter and expression, that could any one truly and exactly write them out, it would be the shrewdest and most effectual way of writing against them that could possibly be thought of.

I should not have thus troubled either you, or my self, by raking into the dirt and dunghill of these men's devotions, upon the account of any thing either done or said by them in the late times of confusion; for as they have the king's, so I wish them God's pardon also, whom I am sure they have offended much more than they have both kings put together. But that which has provoked me thus to rip up and expose to you their nauseous and ridiculous way of addressing to God even upon the most solemn occasions, is that intolerably rude and unprovoked insolence and scurrility with which they are every day reproaching and scoffing at our liturgy and the users of it, and thereby alienating the minds of the people from it, to such a degree that many thousands are drawn by them into a fatal schism; a schism that, unrepented of and continued in, will as infallibly ruin their souls as theft, whoredom, murder, or any other of the most crying, damning sins whatsoever. But leaving this to the justice of the government, to which it belongs to protect us in our spiritual, as well as in our temporal concerns, I shall only say this, that nothing can be more for the honour of our liturgy than to find it despised only by those who have made themselves remarkable to the world for despising the Lord's Prayer as much.

In the mean time, for our selves of the Church of England, who, without pretending to any new lights, think it equally a duty and commendation to be wise, and to be devout only to sobriety, and who judge it no dishonour to God himself to be worshipped according to law and rule. If the directions of Solomon, the precept and example of our Saviour, and lastly, the piety and experience of those excellent men and martyrs, who first composed and afterwards owned our liturgy with their dearest blood, may be looked upon as safe and sufficient guides to us in our public worship of God; then upon the joint authority of all these we may pronounce our liturgy the greatest treasure of rational devotion in the Christian world. And I know no prayer necessary that is not in the liturgy but one, which is this: That God would vouchsafe to continue the liturgy it self in use, honour, and veneration in this Church for ever. And I doubt not but all wise, sober, and good Christians will with equal judgment and affection give it their Amen.

Characteristic sayings are: 'An Aristotle was but the rubbish of an Adam, and Athens but the rudiments of Paradise;' of elderly men and women, "'Time out of mind'" is wrote upon every line of their face;' and of the people in Isaiah xxx. 10, who exclaim: 'Prophecy not unto us right things, but prophecy unto us smooth things; As if they had said, Do but oil the razor for us, and let us alone to cut our own throats.'

South himself published many single sermons, and a collected edition in six volumes in 1692, which went through various editions, and was supplemented by five additional volumes in 1744. In 1717 appeared his Posthumous Works, with a Memoir, also his Opera Posthuma Latina. The foregoing were republished at the Clarendon Press, Oxford, in 7 vols. in 1823 (5 vols. 1842). A useful edition of the sermons was that published by Bohn (2 vols. 1844).

John Evelyn (1620–1706) was born at Wotton near Dorking, studied at Balliol, and was admitted to the Inner Temple; but after ‘studying a little, but dauncing and fooling more,’ joined the king’s army in 1642, only to leave it in three days lest himself and his brothers should be ‘expos’d to ruine, without any advantage to his majestie.’ The Covenant being pressed on him, he travelled for four years in France, Italy, and Holland; married at Paris in 1647 the ambassador’s daughter; and settled in England in 1652 at Sayes Court near Deptford. A gentleman of easy fortune and amiable character, Evelyn was one of the first in this country to treat gardening and planting scientifically; and his grounds at Sayes Court were much admired for the number of foreign plants which he reared in them, and the fine order in which they were kept. The Czar Peter—a ‘right nasty’ inmate—occupied the house after the removal of Evelyn to Wotton; and the old man was mortified by the gross manner in which his house and garden were abused by the Russian potentate and his retinue. It was one of Peter’s amusements to demolish a ‘most glorious and impenetrable holly-hedge,’ by riding through it on a wheelbarrow. A thorough-going but prudent royalist, Evelyn was much about the court after the Restoration; he acted on many committees, was one of the Commissioners of the Privy Seal, and Treasurer of Greenwich Hospital. From the first a conspicuous member of the Royal Society, he remained vigorous in intellect to the last. Active and intelligent, though neither a sage nor a hero, Evelyn wielded a busy pen and wrote on a multitude of subjects—‘architecture, painting, engraving, numismatics, history, politics, morals, education, agriculture, gardening, and commerce.’ He spake also of trees, from the cedar in Lebanon (Of Forest Trees, 1664) even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall (Acetaria, a Discourse of Sallets, 1699); of London fogs (‘the hellish and dismal cloude of sea-coale’); of men’s fashions and women’s (Tyrannus, 1661, and Mundus Muliebris, 1690); and, in The Three Late Famous Impostors (1669), of Sabatai Sevi, the most recent of Jewish Messiahs. His Sylva, or a Discourse of Forest Trees (1664), was written after an appeal to the Royal Society by the Commissioners of the Navy, dreading a scarcity of timber; and this work, aided by the king’s example, stimulated the landholders to plant an immense number of oak-trees, which, a century after, proved of the greatest service to the nation for building ships-of-war. Terra; a Discourse of the Earth, relating to the Culture and Improvement of it, appeared in 1675.

The entertaining Diary (first published in 1818, in 2 vols. 4to), to which Evelyn owes his present fame, covers a period of seventy memorable years, and is a treasury of inestimable value for our knowledge of the time; Scott said he ‘had never seen a mine so rich.’ In its pages Evelyn entered every remarkable event in which he was in any way concerned. He chronicles, without loss of dignity, familiar as well as important circumstances, and everywhere preserves the tone of an educated and reflecting observer. It is amusing to read in this work of great men going after dinner to attend a council of State, or the business of their offices; of an hour’s sermon being thought of moderate length; of ladies painting their faces treated as a novelty, or of their receiving visits from gentlemen whilst dressing, after having just risen out of bed; of the Abigail of a lady of fashion travelling on a pillion behind one of the footmen, and footmen riding with swords. When on his travels, this unromantic traveller found the scenery of the Alps horrid and melancholy: Nature seemed to him to have ‘swept up the rubbish of the earth in the Alps, to form and clear the plains of Lombardy.’ In his notices of the court, Evelyn passes quickly, but with austere dignity, over the scenes of folly and vice displayed in that circle. Thus:

I thence walk’d . . . thro’ St James’s Parke to the garden, when I both saw and heard a very familiar discourse between [the king] and Mrs Nellie, as they call’d an impudent comedian [Nell Gwynn]; she looking out of her garden on a terrace at the top of the wall, and [the king] standing on the greene walke under it. I was heartily sorry at this scene. Thence the king walked to the Dutchess of Cleaveland, another lady of pleasure, and curse of our nation.

The Last Sunday of Charles II.

I can never forget the inexpressible luxury and prophaneness, gaming, and all dissoluteness, and as it were total forgetfulness of God (it being Sunday evening) which this day se’ennight I was witness of, the king sitting and toying with his concubines, Portsmouth, Cleaveland, and Mazarine, &c.; a French boy singing love-songs in that glorious gallery, whilst about 20 of the greatest courtiers and other dissolute persons were at basset round a large table, a bank of at least £2000 in gold before them, upon which two gentlemen who were with me made reflexions with astonishment. Six days after, all was in the dust!

The Great Fire in London.

1666. 2nd Sept. This fatal night about ten began that deplorable fire neere Fish streete in London.

3rd. I had public prayers at home. The fire continuing, after dinner I took coach with my Wife and Sonn and went to the Bank side in Southwark, where we beheld that dismal spectacle, the whole citty in dreadful flames near the water side; all the houses from the Bridge, all Thames streete and upwards towards Cheapside, downe to the Three Cranes, were now consum’d; and so returned exceedingly astonished what would become of the rest.

The fire having continu’d all this night (if I may call that night which was light as day for 10 miles round about, after a dreadful manner) when conspiring with a fierce eastern wind in a very drie season, I went on foote to the same place, and saw the whole south part of ye citty burning from Cheapside to ye Thames, and all along Cornhill (for it kindl’d back against ye wind as well as forward), Tower streete, Fen-church streete, Gracious [Gracechurch] streete, and so along to Bainard's Castle, and was now taking hold of St Paule's Church, to which the scaffolds contributed exceedingly. The conflagration was so universal, and the people so astonish'd, that from the beginning, I know not by what despondency or fate, they hardly stirr'd to quench it, so that there was nothing heard or seene but crying out and lamentation, running about like distracted creatures, without at all attempting to save even their goods, such a strange consternation there was upon them, so as it burned both in breadth and length, the churches, public halls, exchange, hospitals, monuments, and ornaments, leaping after a prodigious manner from house to house and streete to streete, at greate distances one from ye other; for ye heate with a long set of faire and warme weather had even ignited the air, and prepar'd the materials to conceive the fire, which devour'd after an incredible manner which they did for neere two miles in length and one in bredth. The clowds of smoke were dismall, and reach'd upon computation neer 50 miles in length. Thus I left it this afternoone burning, a resemblance of Sodom or the last day. It forcibly called to my mind that passage —non enim hic habemus stabilem civitatem ['for here we have no continuing city']: the ruines resembling the picture of Troy. London was, but is no more! Thus I returned.

JOHN EVELYN.

After an Engraving by Nanteuil.

4th. The burning still rages, and it was now gotten as far as the Inner Temple: all Fleete streete, the Old Bailey, Ludgate Hill, Warwick lane, Newgate, Paul's chaine, Watling streete, now flaming, and most of it reduc'd to ashes; the stones of Paules flew like granados, ye mealting lead running downe the streetes in a streame, and the very pavements glowing with fiery rednesse, so as no horse nor man was able to tread on them, and the demolition had stopp'd all the passages, so that no help could be applied. The eastern wind still more impetuously driving the flames forward. Nothing but ye Almighty power of God was able to stop them, for vaine was ye help of man.

5th. It crossed towards White-hall: but oh, the confusion there was then at that court! It pleased his Majesty to command me among ye rest to looke after the quenching of Fetter lane end, to preserve if possible that part of Holborn, whilst the rest of ye gentlemen tooke their several posts, some at one part, some at another (for now they began to bestir themselves, and not till now, who hitherto had stood as men intoxicated, with their hands acrossed), and began to consider that nothing was likely to put a stop but the blowing up of so many houses, as might make a wider gap than any had yet been made by the ordinary method of pulling them down with engines; this some stout seamen propos'd early enough to have sav'd neere ye whole citty, but this some tenacious and avaritious men, aldermen, &c. would not permitt, because their houses must have ben of the first. It was therefore now commanded to be practic'd, and my concern being particularly for the Hospital of St Bartholomew, neere Smithfield, where I had many wounded and sick men, made me the more diligent to promote it, nor was my care for the Savoy lesse. It now pleas'd God, by abating the wind, and by the industrie of ye people, infusing a new spirit into them, that the fury of it began sensibly to abate about noone, so as it came no further than ye Temple westward, nor than ye entrance of Smithfield north. But continu'd all this day and night so impetuous towards Cripplegate and the tower, as made us all despaire; it also broke out againe in the Temple, but the courage of the multitude persisting, and many houses being blown up, such gaps and desolations were soone made, as with the former three days' consumption the back fire did not so vehemently urge upon the rest as formerly. There was yet no standing neere the burning and glowing ruines by neere a furlong's space. The coale and wood wharves and magazines of oyle, rosin, &c. did infinite mischief, so as the invective which a little before I had dedicated to his Maty, and publish'd, giving warning what might probably be the issue of suffering those shops to be in the citty, was look'd on as a prophecy. The poore inhabitants were dispers'd about St George's Fields, and Moorefields, as far as Highgate, and severall miles in circle, some under tents, some under miserable hutts and hovells, many without a rag or any necessary utensills, houses, furniture, and everything. Here we saw the Thames cover'd with goods floating, all the barges and boates laden with what some had time and courage to save, as, on ye other, ye carts, &c. carrying out to the fields, which for many miles were strew'd with moveables of all sorts, and tents erecting to shelter both people and what goods they could get away. Oh the miserable and calamitous spectacle! such as happily the world had not seene since the foundation of it, nor be outdon till the universal conflagration thereof. All the skie was of a fiery aspect, like the top of a burning oven, and the light seene above 40 miles round about for many nights. God grant mine eyes may never behold the like, who now saw above 10,000 houses all in one flame: the noise, and cracking, and thunder of the impetuous flames, ye shrieking of women and children, the hurry of people, the fall of towers, houses, and churches, was like an hideous storme, and the aire all about so hot and inflam'd, that at last one was not able to approach it, so that they were forc'd to stand still and let ye flames burn on, bed or board, who from delicatenesse, riches, and easy accommodations in stately and well-furnish'd houses, were now reduc'd to extreamest misery and poverty. In this calamitous condition, I return'd with a sad heart to my house, blessing and adoring the mercy of God to me and mine. who in the midst of all this ruine was like Lot, in my little Zoar, safe and sound. . . .

7th. I went this morning on foot from Whitehall as far as London Bridge, thro' the late Fleete streete, Ludgate hill, by St Paules, Cheapside, Exchange, Bishopgate, Aldersgate, and out to Moorefields, thence thro' Cornhill, &c. with extraordinary difficulty, clambering over heaps of yet smoking rubbish, and frequently mistaking where I was. The ground under my feete was so hot that it even burnt the soles of my shoes. In the meantime his Maty got to the Tower by water, to demolish y^e houses about the graff [moat], which being built intirely about it, had they taken fire and attack'd the White Tower where the magazine of powder lay, would undoubtedly not only have beaten down and destroy'd all y^e bridge, but sunke and torne the vessells in y^e river, and render'd y^e demolition beyond all expression for several miles about the country.

At my return, I was infinitely concern'd to find that goodly Church St Paules now a sad ruine, and that beautiful portico (for structure comparable to any in Europe, as not long before repair'd by the late King) now rent in pieces, flakes of vast stone split asunder, and nothing remaining intire but the inscription in the architrave, showing by whom it was built, which had not one letter of it defac'd. It was astonishing to see what immense stones the heate had in a manner calcin'd, so that all y^e ornaments, columns, freezes, and projectures of massie Portland stone flew off, even to y^e very rooffe, where a sheet of lead covering a great space (no less than six akers by measure) was totally mealted; the ruines of the vaulted rooffe falling broken into St Faith's, which being filled with the magazines of bookes belonging to y^e stationers, and carried thither for safety, they were all consum'd, burning for a weeke following. It is also observable that the lead over y^e altar at y^e east end was untouch'd, and among the divers monuments, the body of one bishop remain'd intire. Thus lay in ashes that most venerable church, one of the most antient pieces of early piety in y^e Christian world, besides neere 100 more. The lead, yron worke, bells, plate, &c. mealted; the exquisitely wrought Mercers Chapell, the sumptuous Exchange, y^e august fabriq of Christ Church, all y^e rest of the Companies Halls, sumptuous buildings, arches, enteries all in dust; the fountaines dried up and ruin'd, whilst the very waters remain'd boiling; the voragos of subterranean cellars, wells, and dungeons, formerly warehouses, still burning in stench and dark clouds of smoke, so that in 5 or 6 miles traversing about, I did not see one load of timber unconsum'd, nor many stones but what were calcin'd white as snow. The people who now walk'd about y^e ruines appear'd like men in a dismal desert, or rather in some greate citty laid waste by a cruel enemy; to which was added the stench that came from some poore creatures bodies, beds, and other combustibile goods. Sir Tho. Gressham's statue, tho' fallen from its nich in the Royal Exchange, remain'd intire, when all those of y^e Kings since y^e Conquest were broken to pieces; also the standard in Cornhill, and Q. Elizabeth's effigies, with some armes on Ludgate, continued with but little detriment, whilst the vast yron chaines of the Citty streetes, hinges, barrs, and gates of prisons, were many of them mealted and reduc'd to cinders by y^e vehement heate. I was not able to passe through any of the narrower streetes, but kept the widest; the ground and air, smoake and fiery vapour continu'd so intense, that my haire was almost sing'd, and my feete unsufferably surbated [bruised]. The bye lanes and narrower streetes were quite fill'd up with rubbish, nor could one have knowne where he was, but by y^e ruines of some Church or Hall, that had some remarkable tower or pinnacle remaining. I then went towards Islington and Highgate, where one might have scene 200,000 people of all ranks and degrees dispers'd and lying along by their heapes of what they could save from the fire, deploring their losse, and tho' ready to perish for hunger and destitution, yet not asking one penny for reliefe, which to me appear'd a stranger sight than any I had yet beheld. His Majesty and Council indeede tooke all imaginable care for their reliefe, by proclamation for the country to come in and refresh them with provisions. In y^e midst of all this calamity and confusion, there was, I know not how, an alarme begun that the French and Dutch, with whom we were now in hostility, were not onely landed, but even entering the Citty. There was in truth some days before greate suspicion of those two nations joyning; and now that they had ben the occasion of firing the towne. This report did so terrifie, that on a suddaine there was such an uproare and tumult that they ran from their goods, and taking what weapons they could come at, they could not be stopp'd from falling on some of those nations, whom they casuall met, without sense or reason. The clamour and peril grew so excessive, that it made the whole court amaz'd, and they did with infinite paines and greate difficulty reduce and appease the people, sending troops of soldiers and guards to cause them to retire into y^e fields againe, where they were watch'd all this night. I left them pretty quiet, and came home sufficiently weary and broken. Their spirits thus a little calmed, and the affright abated, they now began to repaire into y^e suburbs about the Citty, where such as had friends or opportunity got shelter for the present, to which his Matys proclamation also invited them.

Still y^e plague continuing in our parish, I could not adventure to our church.

10th. I went againe to y^e ruines, for it was now no longer a Citty.

A Fortunate Courtier not Envied.

Sept. 6 [1680]. I din'd with Sir Stephen Fox, now one of the Lords Commissioners of y^e Treasury. This gentleman came first a poore boy from the quire of Salisbury, then was taken notice of by Bp. Duppa, and afterwards waited on my Lord Percy (brother to Algernon E. of Northumberland), who procur'd for him an inferior place amongst the Clerks of the Kitchen and Greene-Cloth side, where he was found so humble, diligent, industrious, and prudent in his behaviour, that his Maty being in exile, and Mr Fox waiting, both the King and Lords about him frequently employ'd him about their affaires; trusted him both with receiving and paying the little mony they had. Returning with his Maty to England, after greate wants and greate sufferings, his Maty found him so honest and industrious, and withall so capable and ready, that being advanc'd from Clerk of y^e Kitchen to that of y^e Greene-Cloth, he procur'd to be Paymaster to the whole Army; and by his dexterity and punctual dealing he obtained such credit among the bankers, that he was in a short time able to borrow vast sums of them upon any exigence. The continual turning thus of mony, and the souldiers moderate allowance to him for his keeping touch with them, did so enrich him, that he is believed to be worth at least £200,000 honestly gotten and unenvied, which is next to a miracle. With all this he continues as humble and ready to do a courtesie as ever he was. He is generous, and lives very honorably; of a sweete nature, well-spoken, well-bred, and is so highly in his Maty's esteeme, and so usefull, that being long since made a knight, he is also advanced to be one of ye Lords Commissrs of ye Treasurie, and has the reversion of the Cofferer's place after Harry Brounker. He has married his eldest daughter to my Lord Cornwallis, and gave her 12,000 pounds, and restor'd that intangl'd family besides. He match'd his son to Mrs Trollop, who brings with her (besides a great sum) neere, if not altogether £2000 per ann. Sr Stephen's lady (an excellent woman) is sister to Mr Whittle, one of the King's chirurgeons. In a word, never was man more fortunate than Sir Stephen; he is an handsome person, vertuous, and very religious.

Fox was founder of the noble English house to which the Lords Holland and Charles James Fox belonged.

Frost Fair on the Thames.

1683-4. 1st January. The weather continuing intolerably severe, streetes of booths were set upon the Thames; the aire was so very cold and thick, as of many yeares there had not ben the like. The small pox was very mortal. . . .

9th. I went crosse the Thames on the ice, now become so thick as to beare not onely streetes of booths, in which they roasted meate, and had divers shops of wares, quite acrosse as in a towne, but coaches, carts, and horses passed over. So I went from Westminster Stayres to Lambeth, and din'd with the archbishop: where I met my Lord Bruce, Sir Geo. Wheeler, Coll. Cooke, and severall divines. After dinner and discourse with his Grace till evening prayers, Sir Geo. Wheeler and I walked over the ice from Lambeth Stayres to the Horse Ferry.

16th. The Thames was fill'd with people and tents, selling all sorts of wares as in the Citty.

24th. The frost continuing more and more severe, the Thames before London was still planted with boothes in formal streetes, all sorts of trades and shops furnish'd and full of commodities, even to a printing-presse, where the people and ladyes tooke a fancy to have their names printed, and the day and year set down when printed on the Thames: this humour took so universally, that 'twas estimated the printer gained £5 a day for printing a line onely, at sixpence a name, besides what he got by ballads, &c. Coaches plied from Westminster to the Temple, and from several other staires to and fro, as in the streetes, sleds, sliding with skeets, a bull-baiting, horse and coach-races, puppet-plays and interludes, cookes, tipling and other lewd places, so that it seem'd to be a bacchanalian triumph, or carnival on the water, whilst it was a severe judgment on the land, the trees not onely splitting as if lightning-struck, but men and cattle perishing in divers places, and the very seas so lock'd up with ice, that no vessels could stir out or come in. The fowles, fish, and birds, and all our exotiq plants and greenes, universally perishing. Many parkes of deer were destroyed, and all sorts of fuell so deare that there were greate contributions to preserve the poore alive. Nor was this severe weather much less intense in most parts of Europe, even as far as Spaine and the most southern tracts. London, by reason of the excessive coldnesse of the aire hindering the ascent of the smoke, was so filled with the fuliginous steame of the sea-coale, that hardly could one see crosse the streetes, and this filling the lungs with its grosse particles, exceedingly obstructed the breath, so as one could scarcely breath. Here was no water to be had from the pipes and engines, nor could the brewers and divers other tradesmen work, and every moment was full of disastrous accidents.

February 5th. It began to thaw, but froze again. My coach crossed from Lambeth to the Horseferry at Millbank, Westminster. The booths were almost all taken downe; but there was first a map or landskip cut in copper representing all the manner of the camp, and the several actions, sports, and pastimes thereon, in memory of so signal a frost.

Mary Evelyn.

March 7 [1685]. My daughter Mary [in the nineteenth year of her age] was taken with the small-pox, and there was soon found no hope of her recovery. A greate affliction to me, but God's holy will be done.

March 10. She receiv'd the blessed sacrament; after which, disposing herselfe to suffer what God should determine to inflict, she bore the remainder of her sickness with extraordinary patience and piety, and more than ordinary resignation and blessed frame of mind. She died the 14th, to our unspeakable sorrow and affliction; and not to ours onely, but that of all who knew her, who were many of the best quality, greatest and most virtuous persons. The justnesse of her stature, person, comeliness of countenance, gracefullnesse of motion, unaffected tho' more than ordinarily beautifull, were the least of her ornaments, compared with those of her mind. Of early piety, singularly religious, spending a part of every day in private devotion, reading, and other vertuous exercises; she had collected and written out many of the most usefull and judicious periods of the books she read in a kind of common place, as out of Dr Hammond on the New Testament, and most of the best practical treatises. She had read and digested a considerable deale of history and of places [geography]. The French tongue was as familiar to her as English; she understood Italian, and was able to render a laudable account of what she read and observed, to which assisted a most faithful memory and discernment; and she did make very prudent and discrete reflexions upon what she had observ'd of the conversations among which she had at any time ben, which being continually of persons of the best quality, she thereby improved. She had an excellent voice, to which she play'd a thorough-bass on the harpsichord, in both which she arived to that perfection, that of the schollars of those two famous masters Signors Pietro and Bartholome she was esteem'd the best; for the sweetnesse of her voice and management of it added such an agreeablenesse to her countenance, without any constraint or concerne, that when she sung, it was as charming to the eye as to the eare; this I rather note, because it was a universal remarke, and for which so many noble and judicious persons in musiq desired to heare her, the last being at Lord Arundel's of Wardour. What shall I say, or rather not say, of the cheerefullnesse and agreeableness of her humour? Condescending to the meanest servant in the family, or others, she still kept up respect, without the least pride. She would often read to them, examine, instruct, and pray with them if they were sick, so as she was exceedingly beloved of every body. . . . She never played at cards without extreme importunity. No one could read prose or verse better or with more judgment; and, as she read, so she writ, not only most correct orthography, with that maturitie of judgment and exactnesse of the periods, choice of expressions, and familiarity of stile, that some letters of hers have astonish'd me and others. . . . Nothing was so delightful to her as to go into my study, where she would willingly have spent whole dayes, for, as I said, she had read abundance of history, and all the best poets; even Terence, Plautus, Homer, Virgil, Horace, Ovid; all the best romances and modern poems; she could compose happily, and put in pretty symbols, as in the Mundus Muliebris, wherein is an enumeration of the immense variety of the modes and ornaments belonging to the sex; but all these are vain trifles to the virtues that adorn'd her soule; she was sincerely religious, most dutifull to her parents, whom she lov'd with an affection temper'd with great esteeme, so as we were easy and free, and never were so well pleas'd as when she was with us, nor needed we other conversation. She was kind to her sisters, and was still improving them by her constant course of piety. O deare, sweete, and desirable child, how shall I part with all this goodness and virtue without the bitterness of sorrow and reluctance of a tender parent! Thy affection, duty, and love to me was that of a friend as well as a child. Nor lesse deare to thy mother, whose example and tender care of thee was unparallel'd; nor was thy returne to her lesse conspicuous. Oh, how she mourns thy loss! how desolate hast thou left us! to the grave shall we both carry thy memory!

From 'Tyrannus, or the Mode.'

'Twas a witty expression of Malvezzi, I vestimenti negli animali sono molto sicuri segni della loro natura; negli huomini del lor cervello—garments, says he, in animals are infallible signes of their nature; in men, of their understanding. Though I would not judge of the monk by the hood he wears, or celebrate the humour of Julian's court, where the philosophic mantle made all his officers appear like so many conjurors, 'tis worth the observing yet, that the people of Rome left off the toga, an ancient and noble garment, with their power, and that the vicissitude of their habite was little better than a presage of that of their fortune; for the military saga differencing them from their slaves, was no small indication of the declining of their courage, which shortly follow'd. And I am of opinion that when once wee shall see the Venetian senat quit the gravity of their vests, the state itself will not long subsist without some considerable alteration. It is not a trivial remark (which I have somewhere met with) that when a nation is able to impose and give laws to the habit of another (as the late Tartars did to China) it has, like that of language, proved the forerunner of their conquests there. . . . I am of opinion that the Swiss had not been now a nation but for keeping to their prodigious breeches. . . .

But, be it excusable in the French to alter and impose the mode on others, for the reasons deduced; 'tis no less a weakness and a shame in the rest of the world, who have no dependency on them, to admit them, at least to that degree of levity as to turn into all their shapes without discrimination; so as when the freak takes our Monsieurs to appear like so many farces or Jack-Puddings on the stage, all the world should alter shape, and play the pantomims with them.

Methinks a French taylor with his ell in his hand looks the enchantress Circe over the companions of Ulysses, and changes them into as many formes. One while we are made to be loose in our clothes, . . . and by and by appear like so many malefactors sew'd up in sacks, as of old they were wont to treat a parricide, with a dog, an ape, and a serpent. Now, we are all twist, and at a distance look like a pair of tongs, and anon stuff'd out behind like a Dutchman. This gallant goes so pinch'd in the wast, as if he were prepar'd for the question of the fiery plate in Turkey; and that so loose in the middle, as if he would turn insect, or drop in two; now, the short wasts and skirts in Pye-court is the mode; then the wide hose, or a man in coats again; monstrum geminum, de viro famina, mox de famina vir. Methinks we should learn to handle distaffe too: Hercules did so when he courted Omphale; and those who sacrificed to Ceres put on the petty-coat with much confidence. . . .

It was a fine silken thing which I spied walking th' other day through Westminster Hall, that had as much ribbon about him as would have plundered six shops, and set up twenty country pedlers. All his body was drest like a May-pole, or a Tom-a-Bedlam's cap. A fregat newly rigged kept not half such a clatter in a storme as this puppet's streamers did when the wind was in his shrouds; the motion was wonderfull to behold, and the well-chosen colours were red, orange, blew, of well gum'd satin, which argued a happy fancy; but so was our gallant overcharged. . . . [that] whether he did wear this garment, or as a porter bear it only, was not easily to be resolved. . . .

For my part, I profess that I delight in a cheerfull gaiety, affect and cultivate variety. The universe itself were not beautifull to me without it: but as that is in constant and uniforme succession in the natural, where men do not disturb it, so would I have it also in the artificial. If the kings of Mexico chang'd four times a day, it was but an upper vest, which they were us'd to honour some meritorious servant with. Let men change their habits as oft as they please, so the change be for the better. I would have a summer habit, and a winter; for the spring and for the autumn. Something I would indulge to youth; something to age and humour. . . . What have we to do with these foreign butterflies? In God's name, let the change be our own, not borrow'd of others; for why should I dance after a Monsieur's flajolet only, that have a set of English viols for my concert? We need no French inventions for the stage, or for the back; we have better materials for clothes, they better taylors. I hope to see the day when all this shall be reform'd, and when all the world shall receive their standard from our most illustrious Prince and his grandees, . . . and that it shall be as presumptuous for any foreign nation to impose upon our court, as it is indeed ridiculous it should and its greatest diminution.

Bray issued his Memoirs in 1818 (2 vols.). Wheatley added a Life (4 vols., 1879; 1906). Austin Dobson edited the Diary in 3 vols. in 1906 ('Globe,' 1 vol. 1908). Gollancz edited Evelyn's Life of Mrs Godolphin (1904); Keynes his Memoirs for my Grandson (1927). See studies by H. M. Smith (1920) and Lord Ponsonby (1934).

Samuel Pepys

was born 23rd February 1633, the son of a London tailor belonging to an old family in the eastern counties. He was born almost certainly in London, but possibly at Brampton near Huntingdon, where his father's family had a small property; he went to school at Huntingdon before entering St Paul's School. Thence he passed in 1651 to Magdalene College, Cambridge. In 1655, very soon after leaving college, he married Elizabeth St Michel, a beautiful but portionless girl of fifteen, daughter of a refugee Huguenot who lived the precarious life of a projector. Sir Edward Montagu (afterwards Earl of Sandwich), whose mother was a Pepys, gave a helping hand to the imprudent couple, and allowed them to live in his house. Probably Montagu, his father's cousin, had ere this been Samuel's patron: to Montagu, at all events, his start in life was entirely due. He was secretary to Montagu when in command of the fleet that brought Charles

II. back to England. His appointment to the clerkship of the Acts of the Navy in 1660 was an obvious piece of nepotism, for he knew nothing about naval matters; but he soon became master of the work of his office, and both now and subsequently as Secretary to the Admiralty, he was an industrious, energetic, and distinguished naval official. At the Revolution his career was closed, but until the end of his life he was still looked upon as the Nestor of navy affairs, to be consulted upon matters of particular importance. His longest expedition from home was when he accompanied the commander sent to Tangier to demolish the forts and bring home the garrison. Pepys's life was prosperous; he lived well, kept a carriage, but steadily made money. He was twice Master of the Trinity House, was Master of the Clothworkers Company, twice sat for a short time in Parliament, and was even President of the Royal Society (1684-86). But he was not without his troubles. At the Popish Plot in 1679 he was committed to the Tower, and in 1690 he was placed in Gatehouse at Westminster for a few days; and at his death the Crown was indebted to him to the extent of £28,000, a sum which was never paid. He died on the 26th of May 1703. His library, bequeathed to Magdalene College, Cambridge, still remains in the exact condition in which he left it.

It is not as an official that the fame of Pepys still lives, nor as the author of important Memoires relating to the state of the Royal Navy (1690)—his only acknowledged publication—but as the writer of a Diary which is unique in the literature of the world. This work has thrown the most unexpected light upon the history and manners of his day, while at the same time it presents a most remarkable psychological study. Never before had man written down his inmost feelings with so little disguise. The events of the day, the gaieties of the court, his views on men and things, are not recorded with so much particularity as the steps in his own upward progress to credit, influence, wealth; his occupations, amusements, household economies, and even domestic squabbles. His most trifling thoughts and sudden impulses, his vanities, his sillinesses, his numerous and considerable lapses from propriety in various directions—many of them such as even he himself regarded as distinctly discreditable—are set down with a frankness, fullness, and particularity that almost pass comprehension, even when we know that the catalogue was never meant for publicity, and did in fact escape the knowledge of the world for more than two hundred years. His record of ten years' experiences was enshrined in the shorthand Pepys doubtless used in his office; and the deciphering of it (by means of Pepys's own longhand transcript of a story in it) occupied John Smith, rector of Baldock in Herts, for some twelve or fourteen hours a day from 1819 till 1822. The book was first published by Lord Braybrooke, with extensive omissions, in 1825. Mr Mynors Bright added many passages in his edition of 1875; but the Diary had never been published in practical entirety till 1893-96, when Mr Wheatley's great edition appeared. And even he had to omit some quite unprintable anekdota—such as Pepys was wont even in his shorthand MS. to partly disguise in French, Latin, Greek, or Spanish. The Diary was begun on New Year's Day 1659-60, and discontinued 31st May 1669, when his eyesight began to fail.

SAMUEL PEPYS.

From the Portrait by Hayls in the National Portrait Gallery.

Why any sane man should have executed such a self-portraiture remains a mystery. Very many of the peccadilloes recorded, even the most innocent of them, are exactly such as the average man is unwilling to plead guilty to at the bar of conscience, or if he secretly admits them, is eminently anxious to forget (and forgive) for ever. Clearly there is here a vast quantity of materials wholly beside the purpose, even if Pepys had himself designed to construct a regular autobiography. The broken straws in a turbid current, the trifles that are now held to be significant and interesting elements in the development of a soul (even of a fifth-rate one), were not then valued for biographical purposes. Augustine's Confessions were a spiritual exercise, a religious penance; even Rousseau's, a century after Pepys, were a literary tour de force meant to challenge the attention of all France and astonish the world. In the contents of Pepys's six private MS. volumes of secret notes, memoranda, and confessions, whatever purpose he meant them to serve, we have enough and to spare of interest, historical, social, and psychological. For the psychological attraction, though the most problematical, is not predominant. Pepys is an acute and observant authority on authentic history at first hand, especially of that kind of history which, though not included in the dignified annals of the time, is yet of essential importance in its own way, and of perennial interest. It deals largely with facts which, if not weighty in themselves or in their influence on the course of events, are yet wonderfully valuable for giving an insight into contemporary life, and for exhibiting to us a realistic picture of Pepys's times. The charm of Pepys's own character-studies does not depend mainly on its showing the development of a soul. It is often said that a sincere and detailed record of the growth of any mind, however commonplace, would be profoundly interesting. Interesting as psychology perhaps, not necessarily as literature. But Pepys's mind was by no means commonplace, though it had very many commonplace bits in it. And in that department of his Diary he gives us exactly the kind of thing which as gossip has always enormously interested mankind. Usually gossip, whether about neighbours or eminent persons, is meagre in detail and of dubious authority. Pepys has indefeasible fascination for his readers in that he furnishes a vast supply of what may be called gossip about himself, more highly detailed and fully authenticated than the most imaginative general rumour ever put in currency, and at least as highly seasoned.

By his remorseless and superfluous confessions, Pepys unquestionably did himself serious injustice in the minds of those who came to know him through these long unseen and unread note-books of his. Amidst so much high eating and deep drinking, such junketings, theatre-goings, and musical parties, it is difficult to remember that the writer transacted laborious and responsible work systematically and regularly. The small vanities and multiform frailties, the childish ambitions and indiscreet and frequent amorous ebullitions, suggest a feeble, an absurd creature, a gadabout, a man without character. Undoubtedly his character was far from perfect; but it must have had much good, sound stuff in it. This correspondent of Isaac Newton, of Christopher Wren, and of Hans Sloane was trusted by his superiors, liked by his inferiors in office, and is still remembered with respect at the Admiralty. He loved emoluments, perquisites, and gifts, but in a corrupt age was not himself corrupt—was a determined foe to corruption in others, and a resolute, active, and patriotic reformer of abuses. He had a lively interest in music and literature, and considerable culture in both arts, though his judgment in literature was not at all times sound; he was a virtuoso, a collector, and in the science of the time a very intelligent dilettante. He was shrewd, sagacious, persistent throughout, and in many crises of life he acted a very manful part. In spite of his vanity and garrulousness, and the copiousness of his amazing self-revelation, he has not been fair to himself in his Diary; his most sterling moods are hardly illuminated, his foibles and more serious failings stand out in too strong light. One of the charms of the Diary is that it is so spontaneous, natural, and sincere; the style, always unstudied and often slipshod, lacks all literary merit except its perfect naturalness, its obvious closeness to the lively chatter of the man amongst his intimates in Good King Charles's golden days.

At the commencement of his Diary his fortunes were at a low ebb; but after his voyage with Montagu in June 1660, he records that on casting up his accounts he found that he was worth £100, 'for which,' he piously adds, 'I bless Almighty God, it being more than I hoped for so soon, being, I believe, not clearly worth £25 when I came to sea, besides my house and goods.' The emoluments and perquisites of his office soon added to his riches, and the Clerk of the Acts gradually soared into that region of fashion and gaiety which he had contemplated with wonder and admiration from a distance. On the 10th of July he put on his first silk suit; and the subsequent additions to his wardrobe—camlet cloaks with gold and silver buttons, and the like magnificence—are all carefully noted. His wife (whom he is never tired of praising) also shares in this finery, and her first grand appearance is thus recorded:

Mrs Pepys in a New Dress.

August 18th, 1660.—This morning I took my wife towards Westminster by water, and landed her at Whitefriars with £5 to buy her a petticoat, and I to the Privy Seal. By and by comes my wife to tell me that my father has persuaded her to buy a most fine cloth of 26s. a yard, and a rich lace, that the petticoat will come to £5, at which I was somewhat troubled, but she doing it very innocently, I could not be angry. I did give her more money and sent her away, and I and Creed and Captain Hayward (who is now unkindly put out of the Plymouth to make way for Captain Allen to go to Constantinople, which I know will trouble my Lord) went and dined at the Leg in King Street, when Captain Ferrers, my Lord's cornet, comes to us, who after dinner took me and Creed to the Cockpitt play, the first that I have had time to see since my coming from sea, The Loyall Subject, where one Kinaston, a boy, acted the Duke's sister, but made the loveliest lady that ever I saw in my life, only her voice was not very good. After the play done, we three went to drink, and by Captain Ferrers' means Kinaston, and another that acted Archas the General, came and drank with us. . . .

19th (Lord's Day).— . . . This morning Sir W. Batten, Pen, and myself, went to church to the churchwardens, to demand a pew, which at present could not be given us, but we are resolved to have one built. So we staid, and heard Mr Mills, a very good minister. Home to dinner, where my wife had on her new petticoat that she bought yesterday, which indeed is a very fine cloth and a fine lace; but that being of a light colour, and the lace all silver, it makes no great show.

In the Park.

July 14th, 1663.—Hearing that the King and Queen are rode abroad with the Ladies of Honour to the Park, and seeing a great crowd of gallants staying here to see their return, I also staid, walking up and down. . . . By and by the King and Queen, who looked in this dress (a white laced waistcoat and a crimson short petticoat, and her hair dressed à la négligence) mighty pretty; and the King rode hand in hand with her. Here was also my Lady Castlemaine rode among the rest of the ladies; but the king took, methought, no notice of her; nor when they 'light, did anybody press (as she seemed to expect, and staid for it) to take her down, but was taken down by her own gentleman. She looked mighty out of humour, and had a yellow plume in her hat (which all took notice of), and yet is very handsome, but very melancholy; nor did anybody speak to her, or she so much as smile or speak to anybody. I followed them up into Whitehall, and into the Queen's presence, where all the ladies walked, talking and fiddling with their hats and feathers, and changing and trying one another's by one another's heads, and laughing. But it was the finest sight to me, considering their great beautys and dress, that ever I did see in all my life. But, above all, Mrs Stewart [afterwards Duchess of Richmond] in this dress, with her hat cocked and a red plume, with her sweet eye, little Roman nose, and excellent taille, is now the greatest beauty I ever saw, I think, in my life; and, if ever woman can, do exceed my Lady Castlemaine, at least in this dress: nor do I wonder if the king changes, which I verily believe is the reason of his coldness to my Lady Castlemaine.

Mr Pepys sets up a Carriage.

November 5th, 1668.—Thence with Mr Povy, spent all the afternoon going up and down among the coachmakers in Cow Lane, and did see several, and at last did pitch upon a little chariott, whose body was framed, but not covered, at the widow's that made Mr Lowther's fine coach; and we are mightily pleased with it, it being light, and will be very genteel and sober: to be covered with leather, and yet will hold four. Being much satisfied with this, I carried him to White Hall. And so by coach home, where give my wife a good account of my day's work, and so to the office, and there late, and so to bed.

30th.—My wife, after dinner, went the first time abroad [in] her coach, calling on Roger Pepys, and visiting Mrs Creed, and my cozen Turner, while I at home all the afternoon and evening, very busy and doing much work, to my great content. . . . Thus ended this month with very good content, that hath been the most sad to my heart and the most expensive to my purse on things of pleasure, having furnished my wife's closet and the best chamber, and a coach and horses, that ever I yet knew in the world; and do put me into the greatest condition of outward state that ever I was in, or hoped ever to be, or desired; and this at a time when we do daily expect great changes in this Office; and by all reports we must all of us turn out.

December 2nd.— . . . And so back home and abroad with my wife, the first time that ever I rode in my own coach, which do make my heart rejoice, and praise God, and pray him to bless it to me and continue it. So she and I to the King's play-house, and there saw The Usurper; a pretty good play, in all but what is designed to resemble Cromwell and Hugh Peters, which is mighty silly. The play done, we to Whitehall; where my wife staid while I up to the Duchesse's and Queen's side, to speak with the Duke of York: and here saw all the ladies, and heard the silly discourse of the King, with his people about him, telling a story of my Lord Rochester's. . . .

April 11th, 1669.—Thence to the Park, my wife and I; and here Sir W. Coventry did first see me and my wife in a coach of our own; and so did also this night the Duke of York, who did eye my wife mightily. But I begin to doubt that my being so much seen in my own coach at this time may be observed to my prejudice; but I must venture it now. . . .

May 1st.—Up betimes. Called up by my tailor, and there first put on a summer suit this year; but it was not my fine one of flowered tabby vest, and coloured camelott tunique, because it was too fine with the gold lace at the bands, that I was afraid to be seen in it; but put on the stuff suit I made the last year, which is now repaired; and so did go to the Office in it, and sat all the morning, the day looking as if it would be fowle. At noon, home to dinner, and there find my wife extraordinary fine, with her flowered tabby gown that she made two years ago, now laced exceeding pretty; and indeed was fine all over; and mighty earnest to go, though the day was very lowering; and she would have me put on my fine suit, which I did. And so anon we went alone through the town with our new liveries of serge, and the horses' manes and tails tied with red ribbons, and the standards there gilt with varnish, and all clean, and green reines, that people did mightily look upon us; and, the truth is, I did not see any coach more pretty, though more gay, than ours, all the day. But we set out, out of humour—I because Betty, whom I expected, was not come to go with us; and my wife that I would sit on the same seat with her, which she likes not, being so fine: and she then expected to meet Sheres, which we did in the Pell Mell, and, against my will, I was forced to take him into the coach, but was sullen all day almost, and little complaisant: the day also being displeasing, though the Park full of coaches, but dusty, and windy, and cold, and now and then a little dribbling rain; and, what made it worst, there were so many hackney-coaches as spoiled the sight of the gentlemen's; and so we had little pleasure. But here was W. Batelier and his sister in a borrowed coach by themselves, and I took them and we to the lodge; and at the door did give them a syllabub, and other things, cost me 12s. and pretty merry. And so back to the coaches, and there till the evening, and then home.

Pepys on 'Hudibras.'

December 26th, 1662.—Up, my wife to the making of Christmas pies all day, doing now pretty well again, and I abroad to several places about some businesses, among others bought a bake-pan in Newgate Market, and sent it home, it cost me 16s. So to Dr Williams, but he is out of town, then to the Wardrobe. Hither come Mr Battersby; and we falling into discourse of a new book of drollery in use, called Hudibras, I would needs go find it out, and met with it at the Temple: cost me 2s. 6d. But when I come to read it, it is so silly an abuse of the Presbyter Knight going to the warrs, that I am ashamed of it; and by and by meeting at Mr Townsend's at dinner, I sold it to him for 18d. . . .

February 6th.— . . . Thence to Lincoln's Inn Fields; and it being too soon to go to dinner, I walked up and down, and looked upon the outside of the new theatre now a-building in Covent Garden, which will be very fine. And so to a bookseller's in the Strand, and there bought Hudibras again, it being certainly some ill-humour to be so against that which all the world cries up to be the example of wit; for which I am resolved once more to read him, and see whether I can find it or no. . . .

November 28th.— . . . And thence abroad to Paul's Church-yard, and there looked upon the second part of Hudibras, which I buy not, but borrow to read, to see if it be as good as the first, which the world cry so mightily up, though it hath not a good liking in me, though I had tried by twice or three times reading to bring myself to think it witty. Back again and home to my office. . . .

Pepys at the Theatre.

March 2nd, 1667.—After dinner, with my wife, to the King's house to see The Mayden Queene, a new play of Dryden's mightily commended for the regularity of it, and the strain and wit; and the truth is there is a comical part done by Nell [Gwynn], which is Florimell, that I never can hope ever to see the like done again, by man or woman. The King and Duke of York were at the play. But so great performance of a comical part was never, I believe, in the world before as Nell do this, both as a mad girle, then most and best of all, when she comes in like a young gallant; and hath the motions and carriage of a spark the most that ever I saw any man have. It makes me, I confess, admire her. Thence home and to the office, where busy a while, and then home to read the lives of Henry 5th and 6th in Speede, and so to bed.

October 5th.— . . . And so to the King's house; and there, going in, met with Knepp, and she took us up into the tiring-rooms: and to the women's shift, where Nell was dressing herself, and was all unready, and is very pretty, prettier than I thought. And so walked all up and down the house above, and then below into the scene-room, and here sat down, and she gave us fruit: and there I read the questions to Knepp, while she answered me, through all her part of Flora's Figary's [Rhodes's play of Flora's Vagaries], which was acted to-day. But, Lord! to see how they were both painted would make a man mad, and did make me loath them; and what base company of men comes among them, and how lewdly they talk! and how poor the men are in clothes, and yet what a show they make on the stage by candle-light, is very observable. But to see how Nell cursed for having so few people in the pit, was pretty; the other house carrying away all the people at the new play, and is said, now-a-days, to have generally most company, as being better players. By and by into the pit, and there saw the play, which is pretty good. . . .

December 28th.—Up, and to the office, where busy all the morning, at noon home, and there to dinner with my clerks and Mr Pelling, and had a very good dinner, among others a haunch of venison boiled, and merry we were, and I rose soon from dinner, and with my wife and girle to the King's house, and there saw The Mad Couple, which is but an ordinary play; but only Nell's and Hart's mad parts are most excellent done, but especially hers: which makes it a miracle to me to think how ill she do any serious part, as the other day, just like a fool or changeling; and in a mad part do beyond imitation almost. It pleased us mightily to see the natural affection of a poor woman, the mother of one of the children, brought on the stage: the child crying, she by force got upon the stage, and took up her child, and carried it away off the stage from Hart. Many fine faces here to-day. Thence home, and then to the office late, and then home to supper and to bed.

February 27, 1667-8.—All the morning at the office, and at noon home to dinner, and thence with my wife and Deb to the King's house, to see The Virgin Martyr [by Massinger and Dekker], the first time it hath been acted a great while: and it is mighty pleasant; not that the play is worth much, but it is finely acted by Becke Marshall. But that which did please me beyond anything in the whole world was the wind-musique when the angel comes down, which is so sweet that it ravished me, and indeed, in a word, did wrap up my soul so that it made me really sick, just as I have formerly been when in love with my wife; that neither then, nor all the evening going home, and at home, I was able to think of anything, but remained all night transported, so as I could not believe that ever any musick hath that real command over the soul of a man as this did upon me: and makes me resolve to practise wind-musique, and to make my wife do the like.

Pepys at Church.

May 26th, 1667 (Lord's Day).—Up sooner than usual on Sundays, and to walk, it being exceedingly hot all night (so as this night I begun to leave off my waistcoat this year) and this morning, and so to walk in the garden till toward church time, when my wife and I to church, where several strangers of good condition come to our pew. After dinner, I by water alone to Westminster, where . . . did go towards the parish church . . . and then much against my will staid out the whole church in pain . . . but I did entertain myself with my perspective glass up and down the church, by which I had the great pleasure of seeing and gazing at a great many very fine women; and what with that, and sleeping, I passed away the time till sermon was done. . . . I away to my boat, and up with it as far as Barne Elmes, reading of Mr Evelyn's late new book against Solitude [On Employment, against Sir George Mackenzie Upon Solitude], in which I do not find much excess of good matter, though it be pretty for a bye discourse. I walked the length of the Elmes, and with great pleasure saw some gallant ladies and people come with their bottles, and baskets, and chairs, and forms, to sup under the trees by the waterside, which was mighty pleasant. I to boat again and to my book, and having done that I took another book, Mr Boyle's Of Colours, and there read, where I laughed, finding many fine things worthy observation, and so landed at the Old Swan, and so home, where I find my poor father newly come out of an unexpected fit of his pain, that they feared he would have died.

His Great Speech in the House of Commons.

March 5th, 1668.—With these thoughts I lay troubling myself till six o'clock, restless, and at last getting my wife to talk to me to comfort me, which she at last did, and made me resolve to quit my hands of the office, and endure the trouble of it no longer than till I can clear myself of it. So with great trouble, yet with some ease from this discourse with my wife, I up and to my office, whither come my clerks, and so I did huddle the best I could some more notes for my discourse to-day, and by nine o'clock was ready, and did go down to the Old Swan, and there by boat, with T. H[ater] and W. H[ewer] with me, to Westminster, where I found myself come time enough, and my brethren all ready. But I full of thoughts and trouble touching the issue of this day; and to comfort myself, did go to the Dog, and drink half a pint of mulled sack, and in the Hall [Westminster] did drink a dram of brandy at Mrs Hewlett's; and with the warmth of this did find myself in better order as to courage, truly. So we all up to the lobby; and between eleven or twelve o'clock were called in, with the mace before us, into the House, where a mighty full House; and we stood at the bar, namely, Brouncker, Sir J. Minnes, Sir T. Harvey, and myself, W. Pen being in the House, as a member. I perceive the whole House was full of expectation of our defence what it would be, and with great prejudice. After the Speaker had told us the dissatisfaction of the House, and read the Report of the Committee, I began our defence most acceptably and smoothly, and continued at it without any hesitation or losse, but with full scope, and all my reason free about me, as if it had been at my own table, from that time till past three in the afternoon; and so ended, without any interruption from the Speaker; but we withdrew.

And there all my fellow-officers, and all the world that was within hearing, did congratulate me, and cry up my speech as the best thing they ever heard; and my fellow-officers overjoyed in it. . . . After the play, to my wife, whom W. Hewer had told of my success, and she overjoyed; and, after talking a while, I betimes to bed, having had no quiet rest a good while.

6th.—Up betimes, and with Sir D. Gawden to Sir W. Coventry's chamber; where the first word he said to me was: 'Good-morrow, Mr Pepys, that must be Speaker of the Parliament-house:' and did protest I had got honour for ever in Parliament. He said that his brother, that sat by him, admires me; and another gentleman said that I could not get less than £1000 a year, if I would put on a gown and plead at the Chancery-bar; but what pleases me most, he tells me that the Solicitor-general did protest that he thought I spoke the best of any man in England. After several talks with him alone touching his own businesses, he carried me to Whitehall, and there parted; and I to the Duke of York's lodgings, and find him going to the Park, it being a very fine morning, and I after him; and, as soon as he saw me, he told me, with great satisfaction, that I had converted a great many yesterday, and did, with great praise of me, go on with the discourse with me. And by and by overtaking the King, the King and Duke of York come to me both; and he [the King] said: 'Mr Pepys, I am very glad of your success yesterday;' and fell to talk of my well speaking; and many of the Lords there. My Lord Barkeley did cry me up for what they had heard of it; and others, Parliament-men there about the King, did say that they never heard such a speech in their lives delivered in that manner. Progers, of the Bedchamber, swore to me afterwards before Brouncker, in the afternoon, that he did tell the King that he thought I might teach the Solicitor-general. Everybody that saw me almost come to me, as Joseph Williamson and others, with such eulogys as cannot be expressed. From thence I went to Westminster Hall, where I met Mr G. Montagu, who come to me and kissed me, and told me that he had often heretofore kissed my hands, but now he would kiss my lips: protesting that I was another Cicero, and said, all the world said the same of me.

See Memoirs of Samuel Pepys, edited by Lord Braybrooke (2 vols. 1825); Diary and Correspondence, by Mynors Bright (6 vols. 1875-79); Life, Journals, and Correspondence, by Rev. John Smith (2 vols. 1841); the complete edition of the Diary (8 vols. 1893-96, besides 2 vols. containing index and Pepysiana; 1923) by Wheatley; and the reprint (1906) of his Memoirs of the Royal Navy, ed. by Tanner. Studies of Pepys include Wheatley's (1880); Sir F. Bridge's Pepys, Lover of Music (1903); monographs by P. Lubbock (1909), E. H. Moorhouse (1909; 1922), G. Bradford (1924), Tanner, who edited his Private Correspondence (1926-29), Ponsonby (1928), Drinkwater (1930), and Bryant (1933 et seq.).

Charles Cotton (1630-87)—a name best known from its piscatorial association with that of good old Izaak Walton—was a cheerful, witty, accomplished man, and a versatile, pithy, and brilliant writer, who only wanted wealth and prudence to have made him one of the leading characters of his day. (For his addition of a 'Second Part' to the Compleat Angler, see Vol. I. pp. 613, 616.) Born at Beresford in north-east Staffordshire, he married in 1656 a sister of Colonel Hutchinson, and two years later inherited from his father estates in Stafford and Derby shires, watered by the river Dove, so famous in the annals of trout-fishing. The property was much encumbered, and the poet soon added to its burdens. As a means of pecuniary relief, as well as recreation, Cotton translated books from the French and Italian, including Montaigne's Essays. His Montaigne, easy and familiar in style, is certainly liker the garrulous and witty old Gascon's conversational diction than the more stately Elizabethan periods of his predecessor Florio. In his fortieth year, Cotton obtained a captain's commission in the army, and afterwards made a fortunate second marriage with the Countess-Dowager of Ardglass, who possessed a jointure of £1500 a year. But Cotton never got out of his difficulties; the lady's fortune was secured from his mismanagement, and the poet died insolvent. His happy, careless disposition seems to have enabled him to study, angle, and delight his friends amidst all his embarrassments. He published several burlesques and travesties, some of them grossly indecent; but he wrote also many verses full of genuine poetry. One of his humorous pieces, A Voyage to Ireland in Burlesque, seems to have anticipated, as Campbell said, the manner of Anstey in the New Bath Guide. Both in prose and verse his style was simple and almost conversational, yet pithy and graceful. Scarronides, 'that villainous specimen of burlesque verse,' describes itself as 'the first book of Virgil Travestie,' and is on somewhat the same lines as Scarron's Virgile Travesti; it is witty certainly, but in deplorable taste. And so is Burlesque upon Burlesque, or the Scoffer Scoft, parodies of Lucian's dialogues in 'English Fustian,' as Cotton himself describes it.

The New Year.

Hark, the cock crows, and yon bright star
Tells us the day himself's not far;
And see where, breaking from the night,
He gilds the western hills with light.
With him old Janus does appear,
Peeping into the future year,
With such a look as seems to say
The prospect is not good that way.
Thus do we rise ill sights to see,
And 'gainst ourselves to prophesie,
When the prophetic fear of things
A more tormenting mischief brings,
More full of soul-tormenting gall
Than direst mischiefs can befall.
But stay! but stay! methinks my sight,
Better informed by clearer light,
Discerns sereneness in that brow,
That all contracted seemed but now.
His reversed face may shew distaste,
And frown upon the ills are past;
But that which this way looks is clear,
And smiles upon the new-born year.
He looks, too, from a place so high,
The year lies open to his eye;
And all the moments open are
To the exact discoverer.
Yet more and more he smiles upon
The happy revolution.

Why should we then suspect or fear
The influences of a year?
So smiles upon us the first morn,
And speaks us good as soon as born.
Pox on't! the last was ill enough,
This cannot but make better proof;
Or at the worst, as we brushed through
The last, why so we may this too;
And then the next in reason shou'd
Be superexcellently good:
For the worst ills, we daily see,
Have no more perpetuity
Than the best fortunes that do fall;
Which also brings us wherewithall
Longer their being to support,
Than those do of the other sort:
And who has one good year in three,
And yet repines at destiny,
Appears ingrateful in the case,
And merits not the good he has.
Then let us welcome the new guest
With lusty brimmers of the best:
Mirth always should good-fortune meet,
And renders e'en disaster sweet;
And though the Princess turn her back,
Let us but line ourselves with sack,
We better shall by far hold out
Till the next year she face about.

The Princess is Fortune.

A Welsh Guide.

The sun in the morning disclosed his light,
With complexion as ruddy as mine overnight;
And o'er th' eastern mountains peeping up's head,
The casement being open, espied me in bed;
With his rays he so tickled my lids, I awaked,
And was half ashamed, for I found myself naked;
But up I soon start, and was dressed in a trice,
And called for a draught of ale, sugar, and spice;
Which having turned off, I then call to pay,
And packing my nawls, whipt to horse, and away.
A guide I had got who demanded great vails,
For conducting me over the mountains of Wales:
Twenty good shillings, which sure very large is;
Yet that would not serve, but I must bear his charges;
And yet for all that, rode astride on a beast,
The worst that e'er went on three legs, I protest;
It certainly was the most ugly of jades;
His hips and his rump made a right ace of spades;
His sides were two ladders, well spur-galled withal;
His neck was a helve, and his head was a mall;
For his colour, my pains and your trouble I'll spare,
For the creature was wholly denuded of hair;
And except for two things as bare as my nail,
A tuft of a mane, and a sprig of a tail. . . .
Now such as the beast was, even such was the rider,
With a head like a nutmeg, and legs like a spider;
A voice like a cricket, a look like a rat,
The brains of a goose, and the heart of a cat;
Ev'n such was my guide and his beast; let them pass,
The one for a horse, and the other an ass.

(From the Voyage to Ireland.)

Cotton's translation of Montaigne's Essays (1685) was edited by W. C. Hazlitt (1877, 1902). J. R. Tutin issued selections of his poems (1903), and J. Beresford edited his shorter poems (1923). See the Life and Poetry of Charles Cotton, by C. G. Semblower (Univ. of Penn. 1911).

Thomas Traherne (1636?-1674), son of a Hereford shoemaker, became a Commoner of Brasenose College, Oxford, in 1652, and graduated M.A. in 1661, B.D. in 1669. Private chaplain to Sir Orlando Bridgman, Lord Keeper of the Seals (1667), he retired to Teddington in 1672 with his patron, died a few months after him, and was buried under the reading-desk of the church on 10th October 1674. Two theological books, Roman Forgeries (1673) and Christian Ethics (1675), and an anonymous series of thanksgivings, A Serious and Pathetical Contemplation of the Mercies of God (1699), gave no hint of genius; not until Bertram Dobell identified and published from MSS. The Poetical Works of Thomas Traherne (1903) and Centuries of Meditations (1908) was it realised that, hidden for two centuries, there had at last been brought to light not only a poet worthy to rank with Herbert, Crashaw, and Vaughan, but a (perhaps) still greater master of English prose. In 1910 H. I. Bell edited Traherne's Poems of Felicity; these (including thirty-eight not found in Dobell's collection) he discovered among the Burney MSS. in the British Museum, apparently prepared for the press (just before or after Traherne's death) by the poet's brother Philip, but never published.

If Dobell, not inexcusably, pitched his praise of Traherne as a poet overhigh, Dr Grosart had done Vaughan no injustice in ascribing to him the verses since proved to be Traherne's. The proper place of this lovable divine is unquestionably among the older mystics and sacred poets of his century, but his recollections of childhood inevitably suggest affinities with Blake and Wordsworth. In Centuries of Meditations are parallel passages to certain of his verses, and these have convinced many critics that Traherne's true medium was prose. Imperfect technique, diffuseness, faulty rimes, stop-gap 'dos' and 'dids,' and catalogues often mar the fine rapture of the poet, and, says H. I. Bell, 'we get the impression rather of imaginative thought turned into verse than of a naturally poetic inspiration finding its inevitable expression.' Traherne's prose, with its rhythmic flow and natural splendour, invites comparison on the one hand with the Old Testament, on the other with the vers libre of Walt Whitman.

Meditations.

The corn was orient and immortal wheat which never should be reaped nor was ever sown. I thought it had stood from everlasting to everlasting. The dust and stones of the street were as precious as gold: the gates were at first the end of the world. The green trees when I saw them first through one of the gates transported and ravished me; their sweetness and unusual beauty made my heart to leap, and almost mad with ecstasy, they were such strange and wonderful things. The Men! O what venerable and reverend creatures did the aged seem! Immortal Cherubims! And young men glittering and sparkling angels, and maids strange seraphic pieces of life and beauty! Boys and girls tumbling in the street were moving jewels: I knew not that they were born or should die. But all things abided eternally as they were in their proper places. Eternity was manifest in the Light of the Day, and something infinite behind everything appeared, which talked with my expectation and moved my desire. The City seemed to stand in Eden or to be built in Heaven. The streets were mine, the temple was mine, the people were mine, their clothes and gold and silver were mine, as much as their sparkling eyes, fair skins, and ruddy faces. The skies were mine, and so were the sun and moon and stars, and all the world was mine; and I the only spectator and enjoyer of it.

Once I remember (I think I was about four years old) when I thus reasoned with myself. Sitting in a little obscure room in my father's poor house: If there be a God certainly He must be Infinite in Goodness, and that I was prompted to, by a real whispering instinct of nature. And if He be Infinite in Goodness, and a perfect Being in Wisdom and Love, certainly He must do most glorious things and give us infinite riches; how comes it to pass, therefore, that I am so poor? Of so scanty and narrow a fortune, enjoying few and obscure comforts? I thought I could not believe Him a God to me unless all His power were employed to glorify me. I knew not then my Soul or Body, nor did I think of the Heavens and the Earth, the Rivers and the Stars, the Sun or the Seas: all those were lost and absent from me. But when I found them made out of nothing for me, then I had a God indeed whom I could praise and rejoice in.

The Salutation.

These little limbs,
These eyes and hands which here I find,
These rosy cheeks wherewith my life begins,
Where have ye been? behind
What curtain were ye from me hid so long,
Where was, in what abyss, my speaking tongue?

When silent I
So many thousand, thousand years
Beneath the dust did in a chaos lie,
How could I smiles or tears,
Or lips or hands or eyes or ears perceive?
Welcome ye treasures which I now receive.

I that so long
Was nothing from eternity,
Did little think such joys as ear or tongue
To celebrate or see:
Such sounds to hear, such hands to feel, such feet,
Beneath the skies on such a ground to meet.

New burnisht joys!
Which yellow gold and pearls excel!
Such sacred treasures are the limbs in boys,
In which a soul doth dwell;
Their organised joints and azure veins
More wealth include than all the world contains.

From dust I rise,
And out of nothing now awake,
These brighter regions which salute mine eyes,
A gift from God I take.
The earth, the seas, the light, the day, the skies,
The sun and stars are mine; if those I prize.

Long time before
I in my mother's womb was born,
A God preparing did this glorious store,
The world for me adorn.
Into this Eden so divine and fair,
So wide and bright, I come His son and heir.

A stranger here
Strange things doth meet, strange glories see ;
Strange treasures lodg'd in this fair world appear,
Strange all and new to me ;
But that they mine should be, who nothing was,
That strangest is of all, yet brought to pass.

The Rapture.

Sweet Infancy !
O fire of heaven ! O sacred Light !
How fair and bright !
How great am I,
Whom all the world doth magnify !

O Heavenly joy !
O great and sacred blessedness
Which I possess !
So great a joy
Who did into my arms convey !

From God above
Being sent, the Heavens me enflame :
To praise his Name
The stars do move !
The burning sun doth shew His love.

O how divine
Am I ! To all this sacred wealth,
This life and health,
Who raised ? Who mine
Did make the same ? What hand divine !

Thanksgiving.

Such is the glory of Thy exquisite presence, that it is at once wholly in millions of persons—
Wholly in them all, like the sun in a mirror, in a thousand thousand mirrors, that maketh by its beams the Heavens also to be present there ;
And me like a mirror the entire possessor of all Thy glories.
Most really, O Lord, are they all within me, because Thou art really dwelling there.
Even thou, my Sun, Who with all Thy Kingdom art dwelling there.

(From A Serious and Pathetical Contemplation.)

Thinking them Vaughan's, Grosart purchased two anonymous MSS. volumes picked up on a bookstall in 1896-97 by Wm. T. Brooke. After Grosart's death Bertram Dobell acquired and identified these and a third MS. volume (containing Traherne's private prayers and devotions). Except the last, the above extracts are taken, by kind permission, from Dobell's editions of Traherne's Poems (1903) and Centuries of Meditations (1908). Traherne's Poetical Works were edited by Gladys Wade in 1932. See also Bell's edition of Poems of Felicity (1910), and Miss Willett's Essay (1919).

The Earl of Roscommon (WENTWORTH DILLON ; c. 1633-85), nephew and godson of the famous Earl of Strafford, was born in Ireland while his uncle was Lord-Deputy there. During the Civil War he studied at Caen and travelled in France, Germany, and Italy ; and returning soon after the Restoration, was reinstated in his large Irish possessions, and received appointments in the household of the Duke of York. Roscommon, though addicted to gambling, cultivated literature, and produced an Essay on Translated Verse (1684), translations from Horace's Art of Poetry, from Virgil, Lucan, and Guarini, prologues and epilogues to plays, verses 'On the Death of a Lady's Dog,' and an address by the ghost of the old House of Commons to the new one. The Essay on Translated Verse inculcates in frigid couplets the rational principles of translation previously laid down by Cowley and Denham ; he commends the sixth book of Paradise Lost, published a few years before, for its sublimity. Dryden heaped on Roscommon the most lavish praise ; and Pope, who with some truth said that

In all Charles's days
Roscommon only boasts unspotted bays, declared that 'every author's merit was his own.' Posterity has not confirmed the last judgment ; Roscommon explicitly condemned indecency in verse as bad taste and lack of sense, and is much less immoral than most of his contemporaries, but, like Denham, is elegant and sensible, cold and unimpassioned.

From the 'Essay on Translated Verse.'

Take then a subject proper to expound,
But moral, great, and worth a poet's voice ;
For men of sense despise a trivial choice :
And such applause it must expect to meet,
As would some painter busy in a street
To copy bulls and bears, and every sign
That calls the staring sots to nasty wine.
Yet 'tis not all to have a subject good ;
It must delight us when 'tis understood.
He that brings fulsome objects to my view
(As many old have done, and many new)
With nauseous images my fancy fills,
And all goes down like oxymel of squills.
Instruct the listening world how Maro sings
Of useful subjects and of lofty things.
These will such true, such bright ideas raise,
As merit gratitude, as well as praise.
But foul descriptions are offensive still,
Either for being like or being ill.
For who without a qualm hath ever looked
On holy garbage, though by Homer cooked ?
Whose railing heroes, and whose wounded gods,
Make some suspect he snores as well as nods.
But I offend ; Virgil begins to frown,
And Horace looks with indignation down :
My blushing Muse with conscious fear retires,
And whom they like implicitly admires.

Virgil

On sure foundations let your fabric rise,
And with attractive majesty surprise ;
Not by affected meretricious arts,
But strict harmonious symmetry of parts ;
Which through the whole insensibly must pass
With vital heat, to animate the mass :
A pure, an active, an auspicious flame,
And bright as heaven, from whence the blessing came.

But few, few spirits pre-ordained by fate,
 The race of gods, have reached that envied height.
 No rebel Titans' sacrilegious crime,
 By heaping hills on hills, can hither climb:
 The grisly ferryman of hell denied
 Æneas entrance, till he knew his guide.
 How justly then will impious mortals fall,
 Whose pride would soar to heaven without a call!
 Pride, of all others the most dangerous fault,
 Proceeds from want of sense, or want of thought. . . .
 I pity from my soul unhappy men,
 Compelled by want to prostitute the pen;
 Who must, like lawyers, either starve or plead,
 And follow, right or wrong, where guineas lead!
 But you, Pompilian, wealthy pampered heirs,
 Who to your country owe your swords and cares;
 Let no vain hope your easy mind seduce,
 For rich ill poets are without excuse;
 'Tis very dangerous tampering with the Muse;
 The profit's small, and you have much to lose;
 For though true wit adorns your birth or place,
 Degenerate lines degrade the attained race.
 No poet any passion can excite,
 But what they feel transport them when they write.

Part of his Version of the 'Dies Iræ.'

That day of wrath, that dreadful day,
 Shall the whole world in ashes lay,
 As David and the Sibyls say.

What horror will invade the mind,
 When the strict Judge, who would be kind,
 Shall have few venial faults to find!

The last loud trumpet's wondrous sound
 Shall through the rending tombs rebound,
 And wake the nations under ground.

Nature and Death shall, with surprise,
 Behold the pale offender rise,
 And view the Judge with conscious eyes.

Then shall, with universal dread,
 The sacred mystic book be read,
 To try the living and the dead.

The Judge ascends his awful throne;
 He makes each secret sin be known,
 And all with shame confess their own.

O then, what interest shall I make
 To save my last important stake,
 When the most just have cause to quake?

Sir Charles Sedley (c. 1639–1701) was one of the brightest satellites of the court of Charles II. —as witty and gallant as Rochester, hardly less notorious for dissipation of all kinds, and with something of the same gift as a writer. He was the son of a Kentish baronet, Sir John Sedley (or Sidley) of Aylesford. The Restoration drew him to London, and he became such a favourite for his taste and accomplishments that Charles is said to have asked him if he had not obtained from Nature a patent to be Apollo's viceroy. His estate, his time, and whatever character he had were squandered at court; but latterly the poet largely redeemed himself, attended Parliament, and promoted or at least acquiesced in the Revolution. James had made Sedley's daughter his mistress, and created her Countess of Dorchester. 'I hate ingratitude,' said the witty Sedley; 'as the king has made my daughter a countess, I will endeavour to make his daughter a queen'—this is one form of the anecdote. Sir Charles wrote plays, occasional poems, and songs, which were all extravagantly praised by his contemporaries. Buckingham eulogised the 'witchcraft' of Sedley, and Rochester spoke of his 'gentle prevailing art.' Dryden called him the Tibullus of his age: 'Lisideius' in 'The Essay of Dramatic Poesy' is a sort of anagram of his name Latinised (Sidleius). His plays are sometimes in prose, in couplets, or a combination of the two, sometimes in blank verse; the best, Bellamira, is founded on Terence, as Molière is the original of The Mulberry Garden. His political pamphlets, speeches, and essays are in excellent prose. His songs are light and graceful, felicitous in diction, and at times sound a truer note of passion than is usual with the court-poets. See study (1927) by V. de Sola Pinto, who edited the Works (1928).

His best-known song, 'Phyllis is my only joy,' owes something of its continued popularity to the melody to which it is set; another is—

Get you gone, you will undo me;
 If you love me, don't pursue me.

To Celia.

Not, Celia, that I juster am,
 Or better than the rest;
 For I would change each hour like them
 Were not my heart at rest.

But I am tied to very thee,
 By every thought I have;
 Thy face I only care to see,
 Thy heart I only crave.

All that in woman is adored
 In thy dear self I find;
 For the whole sex can but afford
 The handsome and the kind.

Why then should I seek further store
 And still make love anew;
 When change itself can give no more,
 'Tis easy to be true.

To Chloris.

Ah! Chloris, that I now could sit
 As unconcerned as when
 Your infant beauty could beget
 No pleasure, nor no pain.

When I the dawn used to admire,
 And praised the coming day,
 I little thought the growing fire
 Must take my rest away.

Your charms in harmless childhood lay
 Like metals in the mine;
 Age from no face took more away,
 Than youth concealed in thine.

But as your charms insensibly
To their perfection prest,
Fond love as unperceived did fly,
And in my bosom rest.

My passion with your beauty grew,
And Cupid at my heart,
Still as his mother favoured you,
Threw a new flaming dart.

Each gloried in their wanton part:
To make a lover, he Employed the utmost of his art;
To make a beauty, she.

Though now I slowly bend to love,
Uncertain of my fate,
If your fair self my chains approve,
I shall my freedom hate.

Lovers, like dying men, may well
At first disordered be,
Since none alive can truly tell
What fortune they must see.

Love like the Sea.

Love still has something of the sea,
From whence his mother rose;
No time his slaves from doubt can free,
Nor give their thoughts repose.

They are becalmed in clearest days,
And in rough weather tost;
They wither under cold delays,
Or are in tempests lost.

One while they seem to touch the port,
Then straight into the main
Some angry wind, in cruel sport,
The vessel drives again.

At first disdain and pride they fear,
Which if they chance to 'scape,
Rivals and falsehood soon appear
In a more dreadful shape.

By such degrees to joy they come,
And are so long withstood;
So slowly they receive the sum,
It hardly does them good.

'Tis cruel to prolong a pain;
And to defer a joy,
Believe me, gentle Celimene,
Offends the winged boy.

A hundred thousand oaths your fears
Perhaps would not remove;
And if I gazed a thousand years,
I could no deeper love.

To Phillis.

Phillis, men say that all my vows
Are to thy fortune paid;
Alas! my heart he little knows,
Who thinks my love a trade.

Were I of all these woods the lord,
One berry from thy hand
More solid pleasure would afford
Than all my large command.

My humble love has learned to live
On what the nicest maid
Without a conscious blush can give Beneath the myrtle shade.

Of costly food it hath no need,
And nothing will devour;
But like the harmless bee can feed,
And not impair the flower.

A spotless innocence like thine
May such a flame allow;
Yet thy fair name for ever shine
As doth thy beauty now.

I heard thee wish my lambs might stray
Safe from the fox's power,
Though every one become his prey,
I'm richer than before!

The Earl of Rochester (JOHN WILMOT; 1647-80) is known principally from his having, to use Johnson's words, 'blazed out his youth and his health in lavish voluptuousness,' and died from physical exhaustion and decay at the age of thirty-three. Born at Ditchley in Oxfordshire, and educated at Burford school and Wadham College, Oxford, he travelled in France and Italy, and on his return repaired to court, where his elegant person and lively wit soon made him a prominent figure. In 1665 he was at sea with the Earl of Sandwich and Sir Edward Spragge, and distinguished himself for bravery, in the heat of an engagement carrying a message in an open boat amidst a storm of shot. This manliness of character must have forsaken him in England, if he really betrayed cowardice in street-quarrels, and refused to fight with the Duke of Buckingham.

JOHN WILMOT, EARL OF ROCHESTER.

From the Portrait by W. Wissing in the National Portrait Gallery.

Handsome, accomplished, witty, and with a remarkable charm of manner, he became a prime favourite of the king, though he often quarrelled with him. In Charles's profligate court, Rochester was the most profligate; his intrigues, his low amours and disguises, his erecting a stage and playing the mountebank on Tower-hill, were notorious; he himself affirmed to Bishop Burnet that 'for five years together he was continually drunk.' Yet his domestic letters show him in a different light—'tender, playful, and alive to all the affections of a husband, a father, and a son.' When his health was ruined and death approached, the brilliant, reckless profligate repented; Bishop Burnet, who was his spiritual guide on his death-bed, believed his repentance was sincere and unreserved. He was probably one of those whose vices are less the effect of an inborn tendency than of external corrupting circumstances; 'nothing in his life became him like the leaving it.'

Some of his wittiest verses are the most objectionable. Of the rest, among the best Johnson ranked an imitation of Horace, the verses to Lord Mulgrave, a satire against mankind, and the poem Upon Nothing, which is an ingenious series of paradoxes, conceits, and puns on nothing and something (see page 786).

Nothing! thou elder brother ev'n to shade,
Thou hadst a being ere the world was made,
And, well fixt, art alone of ending not afraid.

E'er time and place were, time and place were not
When primitive nothing something straight begot
Then all proceeded from the great united—What.

Something the gen'ral attribute of all
Sever'd from thee, its sole original
Into thy boundless self must undistinguish'd fall. . . .

French truth, Dutch prowess, British policy,
Hibernian learning, Scotch civility,
Spaniards' dispatch, Danes' wit are mainly seen in thee
—that is, in nothing; and the great man's gratitude to his best friend, king's promises, and vows, towards thee they bend,

Flow swiftly into thee, and in thee ever end.

The Satyr against Mankind (adapted from Boileau) begins:

Were I, who to my cost already am
One of those strange, prodigious creatures, man,
Spirit-free to chuse for my own share
What sort of flesh and blood I pleas'd to wear,
I'd be a monkey, dog, or bear,
Or any thing but that vain animal
Who is so proud of being rational.

And after showing the worthlessness of reason—

And 'tis this very reason I despise,
This supernatural gift that makes a mite
Think he's the image of the Infinite—holds it proved that

For all his pride and his philosophy
'Tis evident beasts are in their degree
As wise at least and better far than he.

Horace Walpole said: 'Lord Rochester's poems have more obscenity than wit, more wit than poetry, more poetry than politeness.' But many of them are eminently witty; a few of the lyrics are full of true poetry, or touch a high poetical level. Some of the smoothest and most rhythmical are obviously artificial; here and there is a note of convincing passion. The satires are vivid but gross. The courtier did not spare his master's vices or his master's mistresses: 'A merry monarch, scandalous and poor,' is a royal character summed up in a line.

Here lies our sovereign lord the King,
Whose word no man relies on,
Who never said a foolish thing,
Nor ever did a wise one—is a well-authenticated epitaph-epigram, and is by no means Rochester's frankest testimony to his patron's eccentricities.

Before his death Rochester expressed the wish that his indecent verses should be suppressed; but that very year these and many that he never wrote were published—ostensibly at Antwerp, really at London. Some of the worst poems attributed to him are really not his: his loose life encouraged the attribution to him of all manner of licentious rhymes. The grossest editions were the most frequently reprinted; the edition of 1691, issued by his friends, contained nothing very startling, but was less popular. His tragedy of Valentinian was but a poor adaptation of Beaumont and Fletcher's.

Love and Murder.

While on those lovely looks I gaze,
To see a wretch pursuing,
In raptures of a bles'd amaze,
His pleasing happy ruin;
'Tis not for pity that I move;
His fate is too aspiring
Whose heart, broke with a load of love,
Dies wishing and admiring.

But if this murder you'd forego,
Your slave from death removing,
Let me your art of charming know,
Or learn you mine of loving.
But whether life or death betide,
In love 'tis equal measure;
The victor lives with empty pride,
The vanquish'd die with pleasure.

Constancy.

I cannot change as others do,
Though you unjustly scorn;
Since that poor swain that sighs for you
For you alone was born.
No, Phillis, no; your heart to move
A surer way I'll try;
And, to revenge my slighted love,
Will still love on, will still love on, and die.

When, kill'd with grief, Amintas lies,
 And you to mind shall call
 The sighs that now unpity'd rise,
 The tears that vainly fall;
 That welcome hour that ends his smart
 Will then begin your pain,
 For such a faithful tender heart
 Can never break, can never break in vain.

Inseparable.

My dear mistress has a heart
 Soft as those kind looks she gave me,
 When with love's resistless art
 And her eyes she did enslave me.
 But her constancy's so weak,
 She's so wild and apt to wander,
 That my jealous heart would break,
 Should we live one day asunder.
 Melting joys about her move,
 Killing pleasures, wounding blisses;
 She can dress her eyes in love,
 And her lips can warm with kisses.
 Angels listen when she speaks;
 She's my delight, all mankind's wonder;
 But my jealous heart would break,
 Should we live one day asunder.

In such verses as

The time that is to come is not:
 How can it then be mine?
 The present moment's all my lot,
 And that, as fast as it is got,
 Phillis, is only thine—

we have a specimen of his Epicurean philosophising.

When wearied with a world of woe
 To thy safe bosom I retire,
 Where love and peace and truth does flow,
 May I contented there expire—

breathes deep and undying devotion, but is less characteristic than the bacchanalian—

Love a woman! You're an ass,
 'Tis a most insipid passion,
 To chuse out for your happiness,
 The silliest part of God's creation.

[The following charming lyric, often ascribed to Rochester, and praised by eminent literary critics as typically his, is really from Quarles's Divine Emblems (see Vol. I. p. 566).

To his Mistress.

Why dost thou shade thy lovely face? O why
 Does that eclipsing hand of thine deny
 The sunshine of the sun's enlightening eye?

Without thy light what light remains in me?
 Thou art my life; my way, my light's in thee;
 I live, I move, and by thy beams I see.

Thou art my life; if thou but turn away
 I die a thousand deaths. Thou art my way;
 Without thee, love, I travel not, but stray.

My light thou art; without thy glorious sight
 My eyes are darkened with eternal night.
 My love, thou art my way, my life, my light.

Thou art my way; I wander if thou fly.
 Thou art my light; if hid, how blind am I!
 Thou art my life; if thou withdraw'st, I die.

My eyes are dark and blind, I cannot see;
 To whom or whither should my darkness flee
 But to that light? and who's that light but thee?

If I have lost my path, dear lover, say
 Shall I still wander in a doubtful way?
 Love, shall a lamb of Israel's sheepfold stray?

My path is lost, my wandering steps do stray;
 I cannot go, nor can I safely stay;
 Whom should I seek but thee, my path, my way?

And yet thou turn'st away thy face and fly'st me!
 And yet I sue for grace and thou deny'st me!
 Speak, art thou angry, love, or only try'st me?

Thou art the pilgrim's path, the blind man's eye,
 The dead man's life. On thee my hopes rely;
 If I but them remove, I surely die.

Dissolve thy sunbeams, close thy wings and stay.
 See, see how I am blind and dead, and stray,
 Oh thou that art my life, my light, my way!

Then work thy will! If passion bid me flee,
 My reason shall obey, my wings shall be Stretched out no further than from me to thee!]

Burnet's Some Passages of the Life and Death of John, Earl of Rochester (1680), was republished in Wordsworth's Ecclesiastical Biography. Tutin issued Selections from Suckling, Sedley, and Rochester in 1906, and Hayward edited Rochester's Works (1926). See also Rochester and other Literary Rakes (1902), Swinburne's Studies (1894), and Dobrée's Rochester (1926).

The Earl of Dorset (CHARLES SACKVILLE; 1638–1706) wrote little, but had it in him to have written much more notable things; and being a liberal patron of poets, he was a highly popular man of fashion. His manners and his morals were like those of his friends Sir Charles Sedley and the rest. In the first Dutch war, 1665, as Lord Buckhurst, he went as a volunteer under the Duke of York, and was said to have written the song, 'To all you ladies'—'one of the prettiest that ever was made,' according to Prior—the night before the naval engagement in which the Dutch admiral Opdam was blown up with all his crew. To have written such a lively, lengthy, easy-flowing song at sea, just before a great battle, was surely something to brag of! But when Pepys's Diary was published, it was found that the song (in which, it should be added, there is a strong dash of a witty, antithetical, burlesquing strain, as in Goldsmith's Mad Dog, quite beyond the nature of a true lyric) existed six clear months before the great sea-fight; Prior's story was an embellishment. The courtier-sailor may have touched up the song just—or soon—before the battle. Created Earl of Middlesex in 1675, he succeeded his father two years later, and was a lord of the bedchamber to Charles II., chamberlain of the household to William and Mary. When Dorset, as chamberlain, was obliged to take the king's pension from Dryden, he allowed him an equivalent out of his own estate. He inroduced Butler's Hudibras to the notice of the court, was consulted by Waller, and idolised by Dryden. Yet his works are few, trifling, and mostly indecent; a few satires and songs make up the catalogue. Smart and graceful though they are, Prior was absurd when he wrote of them, 'There is a lustre in his verses like that of the sun in Claude Lorraine's landscapes.' Three of the songs are given below. The refrain of the last is repeated at each verse.

Dorinda.

Dorinda's sparkling wit and eyes,
United, cast too fierce a light,
Which blazes high, but quickly dies;
Pains not the heart, but hurts the sight.

Love is a calmer, gentler joy;
Smooth are his looks, and soft his pace;
Her Cupid is a blackguard boy,
That runs his link full in your face.

Love its own Reward.

May the ambitious ever find
Success in crowds and noise,
While gentle love does fill my mind
With silent, real joys.

May knaves and fools grow rich and great,
And the world think 'em wise;
While I lie dying at her feet,
And all the world despise. . . .

To the Ladies at Home.

To all you ladies now at land,
We men at sea indite;
But first would have you understand
How hard it is to write;
The Muses now, and Neptune too,
We must implore to write to you.
With a fa la, la, la, la.

For though the Muses should prove kind,
And fill our empty brain;
Yet if rough Neptune rouse the wind,
To wave the azure main,
Our paper, pen, and ink, and we,
Roll up and down our ships at sea.

Then if we write not by each post,
Think not we are unkind;
Nor yet conclude our ships are lost
By Dutchmen or by wind:
Our tears we'll send a speedier way—
The tide shall bring them twice a day.

The king with wonder and surprise
Will swear the seas grow bold,
Because the tides will higher rise
Than e'er they used of old:
But let him know it is our tears
Bring floods of grief to Whitehall-stairs.

Should foggy Opdam chance to know
Our sad and dismal story,
The Dutch would scorn so weak a foe,
And quit their fort at Goree;
For what resistance can they find
From men who've left their hearts behind?

Let wind and weather do its worst,
Be you to us but kind;
Let Dutchmen vapour, Spaniards curse,
No sorrow we shall find:
'Tis then no matter how things go,
Or who's our friend, or who's our foe.

To pass our tedious hours away,
We throw a merry main;
Or else at serious ombre play;
But why should we in vain
Each other's ruin thus pursue?
We were undone when we left you.

But now our fears tempestuous grow,
And cast our hopes away;
Whilst you, regardless of our woe,
Sit careless at a play:
Perhaps permit some happier man
To kiss your hand, or flirt your fan.

When any mournful tune you hear,
That dies in every note,
As if it sighed with each man's care
For being so remote:
Think then how often love we've made
To you, when all those tunes were played.

In justice you can not refuse
To think of our distress,
When we for hopes of honour lose
Our certain happiness;
All those designs are but to prove Ourselves more worthy of your love.

And now we've told you all our loves,
And likewise all our fears,
In hopes this declaration moves
Some pity for our tears;
Let's hear of no inconstancy,
We have too much of that at sea.
With a fa la, la, la, la.

Thomas D'Urfey (1653-1723), dramatist and song-writer, had usually his name Anglicised and familiarised into Tom Durfey. Born at Exeter of Huguenot ancestry (as gracefully alluded to by the 'facetious' Tom Brown; see Vol. II. p. 78), he was a nephew of Honoré d'Urfé (1568-1625), author of the famous romance of Astrée. He early became a busy playwright, his comedies especially being popular. Among these were The Fond Husband (1676), Madame Fickle (1677), and Sir Burnaby Whig (1681). In 1683 he published his New Collection of Songs and Poems, which was followed by a long series of songs, republished, along with some by other authors, as Wit and Mirth, or Pills to Purge Melancholy (6 vols. 1719-20; reprinted 1872). Not a few are set to Scottish and Northern tunes; some of them are written in an impossible Scottish dialect (see page 788). Several were afterwards attributed to Scottish authors; in particular (as has been said at page 732), the famous song:

The night her blackest sable wore,
And gloomy were the skies;
And glittering stars there were no more Than those in Stella's eyes;

each complete stanza of which ends with 'She'd rise and let me in,' 'That e'er she let me in,' &c., was Scotticised and claimed for Francis Sempill. His songs, amorous (beyond the bounds of decency, not a few of them), bacchanalian, and political, were enormously popular, many of them being set to music by Purcell, Blew, and Farmer, who were friends of his. Addison, a man of very different temper, invited the readers of the Guardian to a benefit for the decayed author's behoof, and praised Tom as a diverting companion, a cheerful, honest, good-natured man, who, by making the world merry, had put it under a debt of gratitude. And Steele (also in the Guardian) upbraided that same world for its thanklessness to one 'who was so large a contributor to this treatise, and to whose humorous productions so many rural squires in the remotest part of this island are obliged for the dignity and state which corpulency gives them.' The following song, reprinted in the Pills, is far from his most 'divertive' or tuneful lyrics, but has a literary interest as being a reply to Collier's impeachment of the contemporary stage. Tom did not, like Congreve, plead guilty. The full title is A Song sung in my play of 'the Campaigners,' extremely divertive, just after Mr — C——'s vile Satyr upon Poets and the Stage. Set to a tune of Mr Henry Purcell's:

New reformation begins thro' the nation,
And our grumbling sages, that hope for good wages
Direct us the way:
Sons of the muses, then cloak your abuses,
And least you shou'd trample on pious example,
Observe and obey.
Time frenzy curers, and stubborn Nonjurors,
For want of diversion, now scourge the leud times:
They've hinted, they've printed, our vein it profane is,
And worst of all crimes;
Dull clod pated railers, smiths, cobblers and colliers,
Have damn'd all our rhimes.

Under the notion of zeal for devotion,
The humour has fir'd 'em, or rather inspir'd 'em,
To tutor the age:
But if in season you'd know the true reason;
The hopes of preferment is what make the vermin
Now rail at the stage.
Cuckolds and canters, with scruples and banter,
The old forty-one peal against poetry ring:
But let State revolvers, and treason absolvers,
Excuse me if I sing:
The rebel that chuses to cry down the muses,
Wou'd cry down the king.

Thomas Flatman (1635-88), born in London, passed through Winchester to New College, Oxford, and became a great miniaturist and a minor poet. Painting miniatures was his profession; in rhyming, he protests, 'my utmost End was merely for Diversion of myself and a few Friends whom I very well love.' He 'always took a peculiar delight in the Pindarique strain,' for reasons—rather arbitrary than artistic—which he details in the sprightly preface to his poems. Many of his contemporaries treated him as a great poet; Rochester jeered at him as a poor imitator of Cowley; and what his and Izaak Walton's brilliant friend Charles Cotton praised (in verse) as 'charming numbers,' 'full of sinewy strength as well as wit,' were later neglected and forgotten. Some of his shorter poems are much more interesting than his more ambitious 'Pindarique odes' and elegies on dukes, earls, 'matchless Orindas,' and kings. 'A Thought of Death' obviously influenced Pope's 'Dying Christian'; 'Death: a Song,' is suggestive rather than melodious; some of the love-poems are graceful, and so are the translations from Horace. 'An Appeal to Cats in the matter of love-making' is facetious and sounds modern:

Ye cats that at midnight spit love at each other,
Who best feel the pangs of a passionate lover,
I appeal to your scratches and your tattered furr
If the business of love be no more than to purr.

A burlesque romance, Don Juan Lamberto, 'by Montilion,' was generally regarded as his. He collected his Poems and Songs in 1674. Saintsbury champions him in Minor Caroline Poets (vol. iii. 1921). There is a Life by F. A. Child (Penn. 1922).

Hymn for the Morning.

Awake my soul! Awake mine eyes!
Awake my drowsie faculties;
Awake and see the new born light
Spring from the darksome womb of night.
Look up and see; th' unwearied Sun
Already has his race begun:
The pretty lark is mounted high,
And sings her matins in the sky.
Arise my soul! and thou my voice
In songs of praise, early rejoyce!
O great Creator, heavenly king,
Thy praises let me ever sing.
Thy power has made, thy goodness kept
This fenceless body while I slept,
Yet one day more hast given me
From all the powers of darkness free:
O keep my heart from sin secure,
My life unblameable and pure,
That when the last of all my days is come,
Chearful and fearless I may wait my doom.

A Thought of Death.

When on my sick bed I languish,
Full of sorrow, full of anguish,
Fainting, gasping, trembling, crying,
Panting, groaning, speechless, dying,
My soul just now about to take her flight
Into the regions of eternal night;

Oh tell me you

That have been long below,

What shall I do?

What shall I think, when cruel Death appears,

That may extenuate my fears?

Methinks I hear some gentle spirit say,

Be not fearful, come away!

Think with thy self that now thou shalt be free.

And find thy long expected liberty;

Better thou mayst, but worse thou can'st not be
Than in this vale of tears and misery.
Like Cæsar, with assurance then come on,
And unamaz'd attempt the laurel crown,
That lies on th' other side Death's Rubicon.

The Surrender.

I yield, I yield! Divine Althæa, see
How prostrate at thy feet I bow,
Fondly in love with my captivity,
So weak am I, so mighty thou.
Not long ago I could defie,
Arm'd with wine and company,
Beauty's whole artillery:
Quite vanquish'd now by thy miraculous charms,
Here, fair Althæa, take my arms,
For sure he cannot be of human race,
That can resist so bright, so sweet a face.

Richard Flecknoe, poet and dramatist, was perhaps an Irishman, perhaps the nephew of a distinguished Jesuit of the English Mission, William Flecknoe or Flexney (b. 1575) of Oxford. Richard was educated at various foreign Jesuit colleges, became a Jesuit, and was ordained priest. He soon left the Society; was during the Civil War driven as a Catholic to go abroad; but after some ten years travels in the Low Countries, Rome, Constantinople, Portugal, and Brazil (1640-50), came to London, mingled in the wars of the wits, and became a writer for the press. In Fleckno an English Priest at Rome, Andrew Marvell gives an amusing account of his visit to the long, lean, half-starved priest-poet, in his narrow garret up three pair of stairs in Rome. Flecknoe, who seems to have died about 1678, produced some volumes of religious verse and prose, several plays, a number of odes and occasional verses, Enigmaticall Characters, Heroick Portraits, Epigrams, all of which are long forgotten. His name is now remembered only as that of the stalking-horse over whom Dryden applied the merciless lash of his satire to Shadwell—that savage Mac Flecknoe which served as part-model to Pope's more famous Dunciad. Flecknoe, who—

In prose and verse was owned without dispute
Through all the realms of nonsense absolute, seeks a successor, and fixes on Shadwell as the one of his sons on whom most appropriately his mantle might be laid. How far he owes his oblivion—an oblivion so complete that in several large and well-equipped libraries you shall with difficulty find one single odd specimen of all his twenty separate publications—to the inherent defects of his work and how far to Dryden's offended amour propre may be doubted. And it is also open to doubt if Dryden thought him such an utter dullard and fool as he pretends. It should be remembered—to Flecknoe's credit—that more than thirty years before Jeremy Collier's famous impeachment of the stage, Flecknoe, himself a playwright, made a pithy and vehement onslaught, in prose and verse, on the grossness and indecency of some contemporary plays. And Dryden, whom Flecknoe in one of his epigrams had praised as

The Muses' darling and delight,
Than whom none ever flew so high a flight, was notoriously one of the worst offenders against decency in his comedies: An Evening's Love (1668) was condemned on this score not merely by Evelyn but by Pepys! Southey shrewdly guessed that this was probably a main reason for Dryden's dislike. And Southey justly says that Flecknoe was 'by no means the despicable writer Dryden suggests'—adding, 'if the little volume of epigrams which I possess may be considered a sample.' He further shows his limited acquaintance with Flecknoe by inferring from one of the epigrams that he must have been in Brazil, and regretting he did not write a book of travels. Now, as is well known, Flecknoe did in 1656 publish his Relation of Ten Years Travel in Europe, Asia, Affrique, and America. Southey not unjustly suggests that Flecknoe imitated D'Avenant, and finds fault with him for introducing conversational and unduly familiar expressions. 'Far from despicable' is faint praise. Flecknoe was not a great poet, but some of his verses are pretty, his thoughts felicitous, and his conceits not so strained as those of many contemporaries. It seems hard that he should not merely have been driven from a modest place in the temple of Fame, but made a minus quantity in the scale of intelligence and a byword to boot, by a spiteful sneer of 'glorious John's.'

Among the works were a Hierothalamium or the Heavenly Nuptials of our Blessed Saviour with a Pious Soule; The Affections of a Pious Soule unto our Saviour Christ; Love's Dominion, a Dramatick Piece; The Marriage of Oceanus and Britannia; The Idea of his Highness Oliver, late Lord Protector; Erminia or the Fair and Virtuous Lady; The Damoiselles à la Mode; Sir William D'Avenant's Voyage to the other World. Of his plays, only Love's Dominion, 'written as a pattern for the reformed stage,' was acted in London, but (as might be guessed) it was not successful.

To the fair Daughter of as fair a Mother.

What you'll be in Time we know
By the stock on which you grow,
As by Roses we may see
What in time the Buds will be:
So in Flowers and so in Trees,
So in everything that is;
Like its like does still produce,
As 'tis Nature's constant use.
Grow still then till you discover
All the beauties of your Mother;
Nothing but fair and sweet can be
From so sweet and fair a Tree.

To Sir K(enelm) D[igby] in Italy, with a Memorial.

I must beg of you, Sir, nay what is more
('Tis a disease so infectious to be poor!)
Must beg you'd beg for me; which whilst I do,
What is't but even to make you beggar too?

But poverty being as honourable now
 As 'twas when Cincinnatus held the plough;
Senators Sow'd and Reap'd, and who had been
 In Car of Triumph fetcht the harvest in:
 Whilst mightiest Peers do want, nay what is worse,
 Even greatest Princes live on others purse
 And very Kings themselves are beggars made,
 No shame for any, Sir, to be o' th' Trade.

Flecknoe anticipates Burns writing thus pointedly

Of an Unworthy Nobleman.

See yonder thing that looks as if he'd cry
I am a Lord, a mile ere he comes nigh?
 And thinks to carry it by being proud
 Or looking high and big, and talking loud.
 But mark him well, you'll hardly finde enough
 In the whole man to make a Laquey of;
 And for his words, you'll hardly pick from thence
 So much of man as comes to common sence.
 Such things as he have nothing else of worth,
 But place and title for to set them forth
 Just like a Dwarf drest up in Gyant's cloaths,
 Bigger he'd seem the lesser still he shows;
 Or like small Statues on huge Bases set
 Their highth but onely makes them [seem] less great.

He ingeniously apostrophises the smallpox as

One of those Devils that by power Divine,
 Cast out of men once, went to the heard of Swine,
 And giving them the Pox art come agen
 To play the Devil, as thou didst, with men;

and says of a 'malitious person:'

She lov'd not the world and 'twas less to be pittied
 Since the world lov'd not her, and so they were fitted.

On your scurrilous and obscene Dramatick Poets.

Shame and disgrace o' th' Actors and the Age
 Poet more fit for th' Brothel than the Stage!
 Who makes thy Muse a Strumpet, and she thee
Bawd to her lust, and so you will agree.
Bawdry however washt is foul enough,
 But thou dost write such foul unwashed stuff,
 Thou onely seems to have taken all the pain
 To write for Whitstones-parke or Lewknors-lane:
 And Water-poets we have had before,
 But never Kennel ones till thee before.
 What Divel made thee write? for sure there's none
 Coud write so bad without the help of one,
 Which till't be exorcised and quite cast out,
 Th' art onely fit to write for the common rout,
 And with thy impudent lines and scurrilous stile
 To make Fools laugh and wise men blush the while.

Whetstone's Park, between Lincoln's Inn Fields and Holborn, was notorious for its immorality; and Lewknor's Lane, off Drury Lane, was an even more unholy rendezvous.

If Dryden supposed he was even remotely alluded to in this, or supposed that the cap fitted, he might well conceive a profound disdain for Flecknoe's person, character, and abilities.

One of the pieces quoted by Southey (in Omniana), and from him probably by Lamb (prefixed to his essay on a Quaker's meeting), is from Flecknoe's play of Love's Dominion, and called Invocation to Silence.

Sacred Silence, thou that art
 Floud-gate of the deeper heart;
 Off-spring of a heavenly kinde;
 Frost o' th' mouth, and that o' th' minde;
 Admiration's readiest Tongue;
 Leave thy Desert Shades among Reverend Hermits hallowed cells
 Where retyr'd devotion dwells;
 With thy Enthusiasmes come,
 Ceaze this Nymph, and strike her dumb.

Noble Love.

It is the counterpoise that mindes
 To fair and vertuous things inclines;
 It is the gust we have and sence
 Of every noble excellence;
 It is the pulse by which we know
 Whether our souls have life or no;
 And such a soft and gentle fire
 As kindles and inflames desire;
 Until it all like Incence burns
 And unto melting sweetness turns.

In these fifth and sixth lines surely noble love is described by a noble metaphor nobly worded.

In a little pastoral we have, neatly put, the very plot of Henryson's famous Robin and Makyne:

A Rural Dialogue.

Chorus. Once a nymph and shepherd meeting,
 Never past there such a greeting,
 Nor was heard 'twixt such a pair
 Plainer dealing than was there.
 He pay'd women, and she men;
 He slights her, she him again.
 Words with words were overthwarted,
 Thus they meet and greet and parted.

Shepherd. He who never takes a wife
 Lives a most contented life.

Nymph. She the whole contentment loses
 Who a husband ever chooses.

Sh. I of women know too much
 Ere to care for any such.

Ny. I of men too much do know
 To care [whether you do or no].

Sh. Since you are resolv'd, farewell;
 Look you lead not Apes in Hell.

Ny. Better lead apes thither, then than Thither to be led by men.

Sh. They to Paradise would bear ye,
 Be but rul'd by what they bid ye.

Ny. To Fools Paradise, 'tis true,
 Would they but be rul'd by you.

Chorus. Thus they parted as they met;
 Hard to say who best did get
 Or of love was least affraid.
 When being parted either said:

Ambo. Love, what fools thou makst of men
 When th' are in thy power; but when
 From thy power they once are free,
 Love, what a Fool men make of thee!

In 1822 a writer in the Retrospective Review discovered Flecknoe, and, on the strength of the Enigmaticall Characters and the Epigrams, sought to modify the harsh censure universally accepted, to show that Flecknoe was 'not the contemptible scribbler he has been generally represented,' while cautiously repudiating the wish to 'canonise dullness.' He quoted freely from the only two small volumes at his command, including one smart and lively description from the Characters:

A Make-bate.

She is a tattling gossip that goes a fishing or groping for secrets, and tickles you under the gills, till she catches hold of you; only the politick eel escapes her hand, and wrigles himself out again: she tells you others' secrets only to hook yours out of you, and baits men as they do fishes one with another still. She is as industrious as a bee in flying about and sucking every flower; only she has the spider's quality of making poison instead of honey of it. For she has all her species of arithmetic, multiplication, addition, and detraction too, only at numeration she is always out, making everything more or less than 'tis indeed. . . . In fine you have divers serpents so venomous as they infect and poison with their very breaths; but none have breaths more infectious nor poisonous than she, who would set man and wife at dis-sension the first day of their marriage, and children and parents the last day of their lives; nor will innocence ever be safe nor conversation innocent till such as she be banished human society; the bane of all societies where they come; and if I could afford them being anywhere with Ariosto's discord, it should be only amongst my enemies: meantime 'tis my prayer, God bless my friends from them.

It seems odd, but so it is, that critics who pooh-pooh Dryden's own plays, and while admiring the ability deny the poetry of his verse, should without inquiry or hesitation subscribe to his most damning critical judgments on dramatists and poets. And it should be remembered that in the poem which has overwhelmed Flecknoe and Mac Flecknoe, Dryden treats with the same contempt both Heywood and Shirley, as well as Ogilby and Shadwell. Among the forgotten rubbish of the past,

Much Heywood, Shirley, Ogleby there lay,
But loads of Shadwell almost choked the way.

Now, Charles Lamb praises Heywood as a 'prose Shakespeare,' and calls Shirley the 'last of a great race, all of whom spoke nearly the same language;' and more modern critics recognise 'the simplicity and directness of Heywood's pathos,' and the 'charming poetry' and 'pleasing and musical songs' scattered through his plays. It seems now agreed that Shirley, condemned by Dryden, was a 'dramatic poet of rare original power,' whose plays are 'adorned and elevated by the spirit of poetry.' Without assuming that Flecknoe was either poet or dramatist of this rank, we may hold that the reversal of Dryden's estimate of two such men as Heywood and Shirley justify us in reconsidering the verdict, still currently taken as final, on Flecknoe (see pages 431 and 484; and for Ogilby, page 823).

Langbaine, the author of the Account of the English Dramatic Poets, had a fierce and long-maintained feud with Dryden. But it was not on that account presumably that he says of Flecknoe's Characters that 'they were written with all the advantages and helps that the noblest company, divertisements and accommodation could afford to quicken the wit, heighten the fancy, and delight the mind whose main design is to honour nobility, praise virtue, tax vice, laugh at folly, and pity ignorance.'

Flecknoe anticipated Rochester in writing a poem On Nothing, which Flecknoe dedicated to some one who had already produced a poem on that interesting subject. Flecknoe's pastoral may have suggested Rochester's cynical Dialogue between Strephon and Daphne, also two unloving lovers, and in the very same rhythms, beginning:

Prithee now, fond Fool, give over
Since my Heart is gone before.
To what purpose should I stay?
Love commands another way.

It should be recorded to Flecknoe's credit that in D'Avenant's Voyage to the other World he shows more intelligent respect for Shakespeare than Dryden or most of his contemporaries; for Shakespeare amongst the shades is aggrieved at D'Avenant's 'so mangling and spoiling of his plays.'

Gillow's Biographical Dictionary of the English Catholics (vol. ii. 1885) has facts about Flecknoe not given in the Dictionary of National Biography. There is no ground for calling him an Irishman.

John Tatham was a minor dramatist of whose personal history little is known save that he seems to have succeeded Taylor, the water-poet, as laureate of the Lord Mayor's Show in 1653, the pageants in this connection having been regularly produced by him from 1657 to 1664. The dates of his birth and death are not known: he printed a pastoral play, Love Crowns the End, in 1632; a dozen pageants—several of them bearing the same name, London's Triumphs or London's Glory, another The Royal Oak—are extant; but his chief dramatic productions are The Distracted State (written in 1641); The Scots Figgaries, or a Knot of Knaves (1651); and The Rump, or the Mirrour of the Late Times (1661). Tatham was a vehement Cavalier who hated all Puritans, but especially loathed and abhorred the Scots, whom he represents also as base and contemptible. To this end apparently he invented for the Scots characters he introduces a marvellous jargon, which he may have believed to resemble the vernacular Scottish as spoken by his contemporaries. A good many of the words are actually genuine Scots or very near it; some are exaggerated but not wholly unfair phonetic spellings of some Scottish pronunciations of English words, Aberdonian and Border tones being quite impartially and impossibly compounded; many of the most conspicuous and characteristic Scots words or sounds have not been noted; and much of this preposterous lingo is mere perverted English, with no kind of resemblance to anything spoken or heard in any part of Scotland at any period in the history of the world. In The Distracted State 'a Scotch mountebank' jabbars some screeds of this gibberish in bargaining to poison a king for a trifling consideration. In The Scots Figgaries half-a-dozen pages at a time are printed, continuously and unbrokenly, in this factitious dialect—for whose edification or amusement it is hard to say; for if spoken as printed it must have been, like so many 'Scotch' jokes still made in England, almost as incomprehensible to Englishmen as to Scotsmen. In The Rump the jargon is more sparingly used, mainly by 'Lord Wareston,' a caricature of Johnston of Warriston. Yet this monstrous fiction seems not merely to have been accepted by Tatham's contemporaries as actual Scots, but to have been rather extensively imitated. There is something of the kind in the numerous songs supposed to be Scottish that appear in The Westminster Drollery and D'Urfey's Pills to Purge Melancholy; and Lacy's Sauny the Scot, in the play so called (1686), though happily he talks less than Tatham's Scottish rogues and fools, is for a Scotsman quite as puzzling. In this artificial jargon, for example, the English no and go and so are represented by nea and gea and sea (for nae, gae, sae); tang is supposed to be Scots for tongue; awd and cawd for old and cold. Stomach is weem or weomb (wame being good Scots); one finger is spelt not ae or ane finger, but ean finger; more is meer, and beams stands for bairns. It should be remembered that in Middle English ee had the sound of the modern ā, and that ea had still quite regularly the sound it still keeps in great, break, steak; that in 1720 and later tea rhymed with pay and obey. A short specimen from Tatham's Scots Figgaries has at least some linguistic interest. The first act is mainly a dialogue between two base Scotsmen who, to their good fortune, have found their way into England, and begins thus:

Jocky. A sirs! thes eyr hes a mickle geod savour. I ha crept thus firr intol th' kingdom like an erivigg intoll a mons lug, and sall as herdly be got oout. Ise sa seff here as a sparrow under a penthoowse. Let the Sheriff o Cumberland gee hang himsell ins own gartropts, Ise ferr enough off him, ans fellow officer th' hangman noow. I, a Scot theff may pass for a trow mon here. Aw, the empty weomb and thin hide I full oft bore in Scotland, an the geod fare I get here! Be me saw, Ise twa yards gron about sin I cam fro Scotland, the Deelee split me gif I com at thee mere, Scotland. Ise eene noow ny the bonny court, wur meny a Scot lad is gron fro a maggot ta a bran goose; marry, Ise in a geod pleight. Weele, Scotland, weele, tow gaffst me a mouth, but Anglond mon find me met; tis a geod soile, geod feith, an gif aw my contremen wod plant here, th'od thrive better thon in thair non. [Enter Billy.] In the foule Deel's name, wha's yon? A sud be me contremen by's scratin an scrubbin; a leokes like Scotland it sell, bar an naked; a carries noought bet tha walth o Can about him, filth and virmin.

Billy. Aw Scotlond, Scotlond, wa worth tha tim I cam oout o thee. Ise like the wandering Jew ha worn my hooves sa thin as pauper, an can get ne shod for um. Anglond has geod sooft grond, bet tha peple ha mickle hard hearts. Aw Billy, Billy, th'adst better ha tane tha stripe for stelling in Scotlond (bet thot 'tis sin ta rob the spettle) an ha thriv'd by 't, than ta come ta be hangd here or stervd; tis keen justace a mon sud dee sick a deeth for macking use o his hands; I ha ne oder mamber woorth ought.

Eyr, air; crept would in Scots be creepit or cruppen; ferr and ferr, far; earwig is in Scots gellock, gollock, &c.; Ise, I am; gartropts may be garters (Sc. gairten), garth (i.e. girth) ropes, or cart-ropes; I, ay; saw, soul (Sc. saul); wur, where (Sc. whaur); meny (Sc. mony); maggot (Sc. maruk); contremen, both countryman and countrymen (Sc. kintraman, kintramen); Can, Cain; hooves and shod are not Scots, nor are met for meat, stelling for stealing, pauper for paper, mamber for member, woorth for worth; sooft, soft (Sc. saft); spettle is spital, for hospital.

Tatham's Dramatic Works were republished in 1879 in Pater-son's 'Dramatists of the Restoration.'

Roger Boyle (1621–79), soldier, statesman, and dramatist, was third son of the Earl of Cork, and in childhood was made Baron Broghill. Educated at Trinity College, Dublin, he in the Civil War first took the royalist side, but after the death of the king came under the personal influence of Cromwell, and distinguished himself in the Irish campaign. He became one of Cromwell's special council, and a member of his House of Lords. On Cromwell's death he tried to support Richard, but foreseeing that his cause was hopeless, crossed to Ireland, and secured it for the king. Four months after the Restoration he was made Earl of Orrery. He is noteworthy as having introduced rhymed tragedies, having six tragedies and two comedies to his account (several of them fairly successful). Besides, he produced some poems, a romance entitled Parthenissa (1654), and a Treatise of the Art of War (1677); and he enjoyed the friendship of D'Avenant, Dryden, and Cowley.

Sir Robert Howard (1626–98), sixth son of the first Earl of Berkshire, fought on the royalist side, was imprisoned under the Commonwealth, but after the Restoration held many public posts (including that of auditor of the Exchequer), besides being knighted. As a member of the House of Commons he was a strong Whig. He wrote half-a-dozen tragedies and comedies, of which The Committee, a comedy, was the best and long held the stage. Very bad was the dramatic blank-verse in which he wrote expressly to confute his brother-in-law Dryden's contention in favour of rhymed plays. He had collaborated with Dryden in the play of The Indian Queen.

John Wilson (1627?–96), playwright, was born in London, was educated at Exeter College and Lincoln's Inn, and about 1681 was appointed Recorder of Londonderry. A devoted loyalist throughout, he followed James after the siege, and died in London. Besides Jonsonian comedies (The Cheats and The Projectors), he wrote a tragedy and a blank-verse tragedy.

The Duke of Buckingham (GEORGE VILLIERS; 1628-87), intriguing statesman and wit, was the son of the first duke, and after his father's assassination was brought up with Charles I.'s children. On the outbreak of the Civil War he hurried from Cambridge to the royalist camp, and lost, recovered, and once more lost his estates. He attended Charles II. to Scotland, and after the battle of Worcester escaped in disguise to the Continent. There he was regarded with much suspicion by Clarendon and the king's other advisers, who could not make out whether he was a Papist or a Presbyterian, admitted his cleverness, but thought him wanting in judgment and character. Estranged from the king, and returning secretly to England, he married, in 1657, the daughter of Lord Fairfax, to whom his forfeited estates had been assigned. The Restoration gave them back to their owner and brought Buckingham to court, where for twenty-five years he was the wildest and wickedest roué of them all. In 1667 he killed in a duel the Earl of Shrewsbury, whose countess, his paramour, looked on, disguised as a page. When sated with pleasure, he would turn for a change to ambition, and four times his mad freaks lodged him in the Tower. He was mainly instrumental in Clarendon's downfall; was a member of the infamous 'Cabal'; and on its break-up in 1673 passed over, like Shaftesbury, to the popular side. But crippled with debt, he retired, after Charles's death in 1685, to his manor of Helmsley, in Yorkshire, and amused himself with the chase. He died on 16th April 1687 at Kirby-Moorside, miserably enough, if not, as Pope put it, 'in the worst inn's worst room.' Buckingham, though best remembered as the 'Zimri' of Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel, a portraiture of merciless fidelity—

A man so various that he seemed to be
Not one, but all mankind's epitome—

was the friend of Cowley from his youth up, of Etherege and Wycherley; a patron of writers, he was also an accomplished author in various kinds. He wrote pamphlets on political and ecclesiastical questions, occasional poems, lampoons, several comedies (two being adaptations of Beaumont and Fletcher), and even a treatise in defence of religion. Though the Duke was a spendthrift of body, time, and estate, a libertine in life, and without political morals, his Discourse on the Reasonableness of Religion seems sincere enough to disprove current suggestions that he was an atheist; his last lamentable letter from his death-bed—'forsaken by all my acquaintances, despised by my country, and, I fear, forsaken by my God'—is rather repentant than despairing in tone.

The wittiest of the plays, The Rehearsal (1671), a satiric comedy or burlesque still read and edited, was a deliberate onslaught on the heroic drama that had come into vogue, and was specifically a travesty of several of Dryden's tragedies of this type. It was a carefully considered publication, and seems, though not performed till 1671, to have been written before 1665. The Restoration dramatists, beginning with D'Avenant, contravened the rules of French taste, and in deference to English popular taste made their plays 'heroic' and sensational. Buckingham also detested rhyming plays. In The Rehearsal as first written D'Avenant was the Bayes satirised, and some of the points retained in the acted version apply only to him. But the play was adapted to take off the foibles of Dryden, poet-laureate when it actually came on the stage; and the nickname 'Bayes' (i.e. 'laureate') stuck to Dryden, though originally meant for Dryden's predecessor in the laureateship. Ultimately this clever burlesque, which served as model to Fielding for his Tom Thumb and to Sheridan for his Critic, is believed to have satirised and caricatured seventeen plays, of which six are Dryden's; a key to the points was published in 1705. Evelyn speaks of it as a 'ridiculous farce and rhapsody, buffooning all plays.' It created a prodigious sensation, created a model for such things, and raised controversies, personal and literary, that lasted into another generation. In his chef d'œuvre Buckingham is said to have had the assistance of Martin Clifford, afterwards Master of the Charterhouse; of his own chaplain, Sprat, afterwards Bishop of Rochester; and also of Butler, author of Hudibras; but there is no reason to doubt that the work was in substance mainly his own. The plan is that Bayes, the author-manager, is made to submit his new piece to the criticism of a town amateur and a country gentleman, and receives their comments and suggestions with no very good grace.

From 'The Rehearsal.'

Johnson. Honest Frank! I am glad to see thee with all my heart: how long hast thou been in town?

Smith. Faith, not above an hour: and, if I had not met you here, I had gone to look you out; for I long to talk with you freely of all the strange new things we have heard in the country.

Johns. And, by my troth, I have long'd as much to laugh with you at all the impertinent, dull, fantastical things we are tired out with here.

Smith. Dull and fantastical! that's an excellent composition. Pray, what are our men of business doing?

Johns. I ne'er inquire after 'em. Thou knowest my humour lies another way. I love to please myself as much, and to trouble others as little as I can; and therefore do naturally avoid the company of those solemn fops, who, being incapable of reason and insensible of wit and pleasure, are always looking grave and troubling one another, in hopes to be thought men of business.

Smith. Indeed, I have ever observed that your grave lookers are the dullest of men.

Johns. Ay, and of birds and beasts too: your gravest bird is an owl, and your gravest beast is an ass.

Smith. Well: but how dost thou pass thy time?

Johns. Why, as I used to do; eat, drink as well as I can, have a friend to chat with in the afternoon, and sometimes see a play; where there are such things, Frank, such hideous, monstrous things, that it has almost made me forswear the stage, and resolve to apply myself to the solid nonsense of your men of business, as the more ingenious pastime.

Smith. I have heard, indeed, you have had lately many new plays; and our country wits commend 'em.

Johns. Ay, so do some of our city wits too; but they are of the new kind of wits.

Smith. New kind! what kind is that?

Johns. Why, your virtuosi; your civil persons, your drolls; fellows that scorn to imitate nature, but are given altogether to elevate and surprise.

Smith. Elevate and surprise! prithee, make me understand the meaning of that.

Johns. Nay, by my troth, that's a hard matter: I don't understand that myself. 'Tis a phrase they have got among them, to express their no-meaning by. I'll tell you, as near as I can, what it is. Let me see; 'tis fighting, loving, sleeping, rhyming, dying, dancing, singing, crying; and everything, but thinking and sense.

Bayes [entering]. Your most obsequious, and most observant, very servant, sir.

Johns. Odso, this is an author. I'll go fetch him to you.

Smith. No, prithee let him alone.

Johns. Nay, by the Lord, I'll have him. [Goes after him.] Here he is; I have caught him. Pray, sir, now for my sake, will you do a favour to this friend of mine?

Bayes. Sir, it is not within my small capacity to do favours, but receive 'em; especially from a person that does wear the honourable title you are pleased to impose, sir, upon this—sweet sir, your servant.

Smith. Your humble servant, sir.

Johns. But wilt thou do me a favour, now?

Bayes. Ay, sir, what is't?

Johns. Why, to tell him the meaning of thy last play.

Bayes. How, sir, the meaning? Do you mean the plot?

Johns. Ay, ay; anything.

Bayes. Faith, sir, the intrigo's now quite out of my head; but I have a new one in my pocket that I may say is a virgin; it has never yet been blown upon. I must tell you one thing: 'tis all new wit, and, though I say it, a better than my last; and you know well enough how that took. In fine, it shall read, and write, and act, and plot, and show, ay, and pit, box, and gallery, egad, with any play in Europe. This morning is its last rehearsal, in their habits, and all that, as it is to be acted; and if you and your friend will do it but the honour to see it in its virgin attire, though, perhaps, it may blush, I shall not be ashamed to discover its nakedness unto you. I think it is in this pocket.

Johns. Sir, I confess I am not able to answer you in this new way; but if you please to lead, I shall be glad to follow you, and I hope my friend will do so too.

Smith. Sir, I have no business so considerable as should keep me from your company.

Bayes. Yes, here it is. No, cry you mercy: this is my book of Drama Commonplaces, the mother of many other plays.

Johns. Drama Commonplaces! pray what's that?

Bayes. Why, sir, some certain helps that we men of art have found it convenient to make use of.

Smith. How, sir, helps for wit?

Bayes. Ay, sir, that's my position. And I do here aver that no man yet the sun e'er shone upon has parts sufficient to furnish out a stage, except it were by the help of these my rules.

Johns. What are those rules, I pray?

Bayes. Why, sir, my first rule is the rule of transversion, or Regula Duplex; changing verse into prose, or prose into verse, alternative as you please.

Smith. Well; but how is this done by a rule, sir?

Bayes. Why thus, sir; nothing so easy when understood. I take a book in my hand, either at home or elsewhere, for that's all one; if there be any wit in't, as there is no book but has some, I transverse it; that is, if it be prose, put it into verse (but that takes up some time), and if it be verse, put it into prose.

Johns. Methinks, Mr Bayes, that putting verse into prose should be called transprosing.

Bayes. By my troth, sir, 'tis a very good notion; and hereafter it shall be so.

Smith. Well, sir, and what d'ye do with it then?

Bayes. Make it my own. 'Tis so changed that no man can know it. My next rule is the rule of record, by way of table-book. Pray observe.

Johns. We hear you, sir; go on.

Bayes. As thus. I come into a coffee-house, or some other place where witty men resort, I make as if I minded nothing; do you mark? but as soon as any one speaks, pop I slap it down, and make that too my own.

Johns. But, Mr Bayes, are you not sometimes in danger of their making you restore, by force, what you have gotten thus by art?

Bayes. No, sir; the world's unmindful: they never take notice of these things.

Smith. But pray, Mr Bayes, among all your other rules, have you no one rule for invention?

Bayes. Yes, sir, that's my third rule that I have here in my pocket.

Smith. What rule can that be, I wonder?

Bayes. Why, sir, when I have anything to invent, I never trouble my head about it, as other men do; but presently turn over this book, and there I have, at one view, all that Persius, Montaigne, Seneca's Tragedies, Horace, Juvenal, Claudian, Pliny, Plutarch's Lives, and the rest, have ever thought upon this subject: and so, in a trice, by leaving out a few words, or putting in others of my own, the business is done.

Johns. Indeed, Mr Bayes, this is as sure and compendious a way of wit as ever I heard of.

Bayes. Sir, if you make the least scruples of the efficacy of these my rules, do but come to the playhouse, and you shall judge of 'em by the effects.

(From Act i. sc. 1.)

In the piece as rehearsed a battle is fought between foot and great hobby-horses. At last Drawcansir comes in and kills all on both sides. While the battle is fighting, Bayes is telling them when to shout, and shouts with them.

Drawcansir. Others may boast a single man to kill;
But I the blood of thousands daily spill.

Let petty kings the names of parties know:

Where'er I come, I slay both friend and foe.

The swiftest horsemen my swift rage controls,

And from their bodies drives their trembling souls.

If they had wings, and to the gods could fly,

I would pursue and beat 'em through the sky;

And make proud Jove, with all his thunder, see

This single arm more dreadful is than he.

Bayes. There's a brave fellow for you now, sirs. You may talk of your Hectors, and Achilles's, and I know not who; but I defy all your histories, and your romances too, to show me one such conqueror as this Drawcansir.

Johns. I swear I think you may.

Smith. But, Mr Bayes, how shall all these dead men go off? for I see none alive to help 'em.

Bayes. Go off! why, as they came on, upon their legs: how should they go off? Why, do you think the people here don't know they are not dead? He is mighty ignorant, poor man: your friend here is very silly, Mr Johnson; egad, he is. Ha, ha, ha! Come, sir, I'll show you how they shall go off. Rise, rise, sirs, and go about your business. There's go off for you now; ha, ha, ha! Mr Ivory, a word. Gentlemen, I'll be with you presently.

Johns. Will you so? Then we'll be gone.

Smith. Ay, prithee let's go, that we may preserve our hearing. One battle more will take mine quite away.

Bayes [entering with Players]. Where are the gentlemen?

1st Player. They are gone, sir.

Bayes. Gone! 'sdeath, this act is best of all. I'll go fetch 'em again.

1st Player. What shall we do, now he is gone away?

2nd Player. Why, so much the better; then let's go to dinner.

3rd Player. Stay, here's a foul piece of paper. Let's see what 'tis.

4th Player. Ay, ay, come, let's hear it.

3rd Player [Reads the argument of the fifth act]. 'Cloris, at length, being sensible of Prince Prettyman's passion' . . .—This will never do: 'tis just like the rest. Come, let's be gone.

Most of the Players. Ay, plague on 't, let's go away.

Bayes [entering]. A plague on 'em both for me! they have made me sweat, to run after 'em. A couple of senseless rascals, that had rather go to dinner than see this play out, with a plague to 'em. What comfort has a man to write for such dull rogues! Come, Mr—a—where are you, sir? Come away, quick, quick.

Stage-keeper. Sir: they are gone to dinner.

Bayes. Yes, I know the gentlemen are gone; but I ask for the players.

Stage-keeper. Why, an't please your worship, sir, the players are gone to dinner too.

Bayes. How! are the players gone to dinner? 'tis impossible: the players gone to dinner! egad, if they are, I'll make 'em know what it is to injure a person that does them the honour to write for 'em, and all that. A company of proud, conceited, humorous, cross-grain'd persons, and all that. Egad, I'll make 'em the most contemptible, despicable, inconsiderable persons, and all that, in the whole world, for this trick. Egad, I'll be revenged on 'em; I'll sell this play to the other house.

Stage-keeper. Nay, good sir, don't take away the book; you'll disappoint the company that comes to see it acted here this afternoon.

Bayes. That's all one, I must reserve this comfort to myself, my play and I shall go together; we will not part, indeed, sir.

Stage-keeper. But what will the town say, sir?

Bayes. The town! why, what care I for the town? Egad, the town has us'd me as scurvily as the players have done: but I'll be reveng'd on them too; for I'll lampoon 'em all. And since they will not admit of my plays, they shall know what a satirist I am. And so farewell to this stage, egad, for ever. (From Act v. sc. 1.)

Tom Brown collected Buckingham's Miscellaneous Works in 1704-5, and they were repeatedly re-edited and reprinted. See the Life of Buckingham by his faithful follower, Brian Fairfax, reprinted in Arber's edition of The Rehearsal (1868); the Life by Lady Burghclere (1903); Summers's edition of The Rehearsal (1914); and the Quarterly Review for January 1898, which gives some account of an unpublished Commonplace-book.

John Oldham (1653-83), son of a Nonconformist minister at Shipton-Moyne in Gloucestershire, studied at St Edmund Hall, Oxford; was for three years usher in Croydon Free School; and became subsequently a private tutor. His early death (from smallpox) drew eloquent tributes from Waller and from Dryden, from Tate, Flatman, Tom Durfey, and Tom Brown. Pope, who was indebted to him for some hints, regretted his 'indelucacy,' and thought his 'strong rage' too like Billingsgate. He made clever paraphrases from the classical satirists, adapted to contemporary London conditions, and skilful translations from Greek, Latin, and French poets (including some of the least modest things of Petronius, Ovid, and Voiture), as well as of passages of Scripture; wrote four violent satires against the Jesuits, and an ironical one against virtue; satires on a false woman, on a printer, on the calamities of authors; and produced a number of occasional lyrics, many of them 'Pindarics.' The most elaborate was a 'Pindaric' in memory of a college friend, one of whose forty-two stanzas runs thus:

Thy soul within such silent pomp did keep,
As if humanity were lull'd asleep;
So gentle was thy pilgrimage beneath,
Time's unheard feet scarce make less noise,
Or the soft journey which a planet goes;
Life seem'd all calm as its last breath,
A still tranquillity so husht thy breast,
As if some halcyon were its guest,
And there had built her nest;
It hardly now enjoys a greater rest.
As that smooth sea which wears the name of peace
Still with one even face appears,
And feels no tides to change it from its place,
No waves to alter the fair form it bears;
As that unspotted sky,
Where Nile does want of rain supply,
Is free from clouds, from storm is ever free:
So thy unvary'd mind was always one,
And with such clear serenity still shone,
As caus'd thy little world to seem all temp'rate zone.

The satire in which 'Spenser is brought in dissuading the author from poetry' gives a poor account of contemporary poets:

So many now and bad the scribblers be,
'Tis scandal to be of their company. . . .
The fools are troubled with the flux of brains,
And each on paper squirts his filthy sense. . . .
A leash of sonnets and of dull lampoon
Set up an author, who forthwith is grown
A man of parts, of rhiming, and renown:
Even that vile wretch who in lewd verse each year
Describes the pageants and my good Lord-May'r,
Whose works must serve the next election day
For making squibs and under pies to lay,
Yet counts himself of the inspired train,
And dares in thought the sacred name profane.

John Dryden

—one of the very few English writers who have been accepted as the greatest men of letters of their time, and the only one perhaps who holds a position of equal importance in verse, in prose, and (for his time) in drama—was born probably, if not certainly, on the 9th of August 1631, in the rectory of Aldwinkle All Saints, Northamptonshire. (It was in the rectory of Aldwinkle St Peter's that Fuller was born; see page 596.) His father was Erasmus, the third son of Sir Erasmus Dryden, Bart., of Canons Ashby, in the same county, but on the opposite or western side of it, near Towcester, while Aldwinkle is on the eastern side, in the Nen valley, between Thrapston and Oundle. To this latter district belonged the family of the poet's mother, Mary Pickering, daughter of a clergyman and granddaughter of Sir Gilbert Pickering, Bart. A small estate at Blakesley, in the Canons Ashby neighbourhood, descended to Dryden from his father; but he never resided there, and his frequent visits in later life were always to his mother's relations in the Nen valley. The Dryden family themselves (who up to, and in some cases after, the poet's time usually spelt the name with an i) were of northern (probably Border) origin, and were not seated in Northants till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when Canons Ashby came to them by marriage with the heiress of the Copes. It, with the baronetcy, would have come to the poet himself had he lived long enough; and both actually came to one of his sons. (The present Drydens of Canons Ashby are descended from the 7th Baronet's niece and heiress, whose husband took the name and in 1795 was created a baronet.)

We know very little of Dryden's youth, but it seems to have been passed at Tichmarsh, the headquarters of the Pickerings. Nor do we know when he went to Westminster, where he was a king's scholar, and where, before he left it for Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1650, he wrote his first published poem, a highly 'metaphysical' epicede on his schoolfellow, Henry Lord Hastings, who had died of smallpox. Its schoolboy exaggeration of the fashionable style of the time is exactly what we see in the early work of some, if not of all, great poets. Dryden held a Westminster scholarship at Trinity, and took his B.A. in the beginning of 1654. But he did not proceed from his scholarship to be Fellow, nor did he take his Master's, though he is said to have resided for the full, or nearly the full, seven years which qualified for that degree. We know really nothing of his college career except that he knew Pepys there; that he contributed soon after he went up another poem, commendatory this time to the book of a living friend, John Hodgesdon's Sion and Parnassus; and that in July of his second year he was discomfited, and sentenced to confess his crime in hall for disobedience to the vice-master and contumacy. His father died six months after he took his B.A., and Dryden succeeded to two-thirds of the little Blakesley property (the other third not falling in till nearly twenty years later at his mother's death). The whole of this was valued then at about £60 a year. Dryden's share would probably be equal to about £150 per annum now, and he had therefore enough to live on, but no more. This is not quite superfluous in considering the character of his work.

JOHN DRYDEN.

From the Portrait by Sir G. Kneller in the National Portrait Gallery.

He seems to have come to London about the middle of 1657, and as all his relations (more particularly his cousin, the Sir Gilbert Pickering of the day) were not only Parliament men but Cromwellians, he may have expected some of those State pickings on which, as we know from his friend Pepys, all men who had any kind of interest then counted. But the rapid changes of events would have disappointed him if nothing else had; though, in some times and circumstances, far worse poems than his Heroic Stanzas on the death of Oliver Cromwell have made a man's fortune. But there was not in Dryden the making of a regular place-man. He was too shy, to begin with; probably too much of a man of letters by taste and predestination, in the second place; and (though he has been accused of want of high-mindedness) almost certainly too fastidious, in the third. He had not the slightest objection to flatter—hardly anybody in that day and long afterwards had. But those who have taken the trouble to know Dryden thoroughly cannot imagine him either calmly embezzling, as most public servants then did, or unblushingly bargaining (as Pepys, who did not embezzle, bargained) with contractors and suitors and understrappers for palm-grease and 'pots of wine.'

Fortunately, however, literature was once more becoming something of a refuge for the destitute; and Dryden, though of no imperative or precocious literary tendencies, was, as was soon to be seen, endowed with a multifarious craftsmanship such as hardly any other writer has ever possessed. His enemies later accused him of doing hack-work for the booksellers, especially Herringman, who certainly published most of his early pieces. Anyhow, soon after the return of Charles, he produced palinodes to the Heroic Stanzas (which, however, are themselves rather pro-Cromwellian than anti-royalist) in Astræa Redux, the Poem on the Coronation, and one to Clarendon—all couched in a splendid massive heroic couplet which owed very little to any forerunner. And when the taste of everybody, from the king to the rabble, for the newly revived drama had shown itself, he set to work manfully to achieve success in this no less profitable than popular kind. He was not at first very successful, but after a time his plays added very largely to his income. Their literary value will best be considered together and later. But for a period they drew him away from poetry proper, his last effort in poetry of any consequence for nearly fifteen years being the fine Annus Mirabilis (1666), in which he celebrated the Fire of London and the Dutch War.

Although his relations do not appear to have done much for his worldly prosperity, it must have been partly due to his connection that—as it seems pretty early—he had access to various sides of 'the great world.' He was an early member of the Royal Society, which was fashionable as well as scientific; he must soon after the Restoration have made acquaintance with Sir Robert Howard, son of the royalist Earl of Berkshire; and now, on 1st December 1663, he married Lady Elizabeth, Sir Robert's sister. The usual books contain aspersions on this lady's character and temper, and expressions adverse to the happiness of the marriage, which, it may be well to say bluntly, rest upon no positive evidence whatsoever.

For some sixteen or seventeen years after his marriage Dryden's life was one of hardly chequered good fortune, and was chiefly passed in London, though he spent the Plague-time and a little longer (1665–66) at Charlton, his father-in-law's seat in Wiltshire; and there composed not merely Annus Mirabilis, but the masterly Essay of Dramatic Poesy, which is a landmark alike in English criticism and English prose style. As his family increased so did his means. He held for some years a lucrative share in the King's Playhouse, was made (1670) poet-laureate in succession to D'Avenant, and historiographer-royal in succession to Howell, with a joint salary of £200, and later had additional pensions and small appointments. These, with his own little means, may have at one time given him the value of some £2000 a year of modern money. He knew many distinguished persons from the king downwards. He had for a time no great share of literary quarrels—it appears that the famous squib of the Rehearsal (see infra) in 1671, as it certainly did not in the least affect the public taste for the heroic style of play, so it affected his own composure very little. Only towards the close of the period he had the unpleasant experience of being waylaid and cudgelled by bravoës hired (as it was believed, though never proved) by the malignant and cowardly Rochester, who had been a friend and patron of Dryden, but had taken a spite against him as more closely attached to Rochester's enemy, Mulgrave. Lady Elizabeth bore him three sons, two of whom were sent to their father's own old school (the third went to the Charterhouse), and of whom both parents appear to have been exceedingly fond. But it was somewhat later than this that Dryden settled in the well-known house in Gerrard Street, Soho, where he died; his longest residence during this time appears to have been in Fetter Lane. He knew Milton personally, and had a great admiration for him; while Milton, though denying him 'poetry' (of course in the classical sense of 'invention'), seems to have thought about as well of him as the difference of the two in politics, religion, morals, and poetical theory (not to mention the elder poet's arrogant and ungracious temper) could let us expect.

The frenzy of the Popish Plot, and the welter of conspiracy and partisanship into which it threw the nation, had the most important effects upon Dryden's life and literary career. At first it seemed rather doubtful what part he might take. He had had (or had been thought to have) some connections with Shaftesbury; he brought out, as late as 1681, The Spanish Friar as 'a Protestant play.' But it must be remembered that for some time the king himself either did not dare or did not choose to take any strong part against the plotmongers, and that it was only when they made a dead-set at his brother's succession, and almost directly threatened his own crown, that he threw away the scabbard. Charles has been traditionally said to have given Dryden hints both for Absalom and Achitophel itself and for The Medal. He was quite clever enough; but though extreme originality was not Dryden's forte, he was himself more than capable of seizing the obvious handles presented. The results at any rate were, on the one hand, the production—in the original Absalom and Achitophel, in Dryden's contribution to its Second Part, in The Medal, and in the episodic or retaliatory lampoon of MacFlecknoe addressed to Shadwell—of such a series of political satires as the world had never seen. Dryden's long practice in verse, and especially in the casuistical declamation of the heroic play (see infra), had supplied him with weapons of unparalleled sharpness and power; his temperament, neither phlegmatic nor sentimental, gave him exactly the cool command of vigorous method which the satirist requires. On the other hand, the series identified him irrevocably with the Tory party, and drew upon him all the fury and all the venom of the Whigs.

A more remarkable change (for he had been a royalist for twenty years, and there is no evidence that he had ever been at heart a Republican) seems about the same time to have come over Dryden's mind. Hitherto he had been, at least in expression, by no means precise either in morals or religion. That curious depravation in both, which Pepys exhibits to us more especially in himself and in Lord Sandwich, had no doubt taken place in Dryden likewise; and while great part of his dramatic work exhibits (to put it in the most favourable way) complete complaisance to the least respectable desires of the frequenters of the playhouse in language and choice of subject, his references to religion are, if not directly free-thinking, anything but reverent or devout. In the very remarkable poem of Religio Laici (1682), written almost concurrently with the satires, all this is changed, and changed in a manner for which it is impossible to suspect or even suggest any unworthy motive. Dryden appears here as a philosophical but orthodox Anglican, with just a desire for some more authoritative decision on doubtful points of faith and practice than the Anglican creed provides.

Such an attitude if feigned could have 'curried favour' with no person and no party at that time; but if not feigned, it clears away much if not all suspicion from Dryden's change of faith shortly after the accession of James II. This change was of course made the occasion of the most violent attacks on him at the time—attacks which have been more recently revived by Macaulay and others, sometimes with the assistance of false (at best mistaken) assertions as to the rewards he received. All that can be said truly is that Dryden is not the only person who has succumbed (especially after a youth of somewhat reckless living and thinking) to the attractions of an infallible

Church; that the alleged lowness of his moral tone has been greatly exaggerated in order to disprove the possibility of his sincerity; that as a matter of fact he gained nothing (he simply did not lose) by his change; and that when the fresh change came it struck him impavidum and unflinching. It is simply absurd to suppose that a party in the dire straits for literary talent in which the Whigs were then would not have welcomed Dryden even if they had despised him; in fact, they could not have helped themselves. Had Dryden chosen to take the oaths, William might, even without 'Dutch rudeness,' have turned his back on him, and the wits might have emptied their quivers; but the Treasury could not have kept back his pay.

The reign of James, which the almost inhuman folly of the king made disastrous to himself and to all connected with him, was not, even while it lasted, particularly fortunate for Dryden. The only wages of what some are pleased to call his apostasy were troublesome commissions from the court—a translation of the Life of St Francis Xavier; an ill-starred attempt to urge Romanism on the people by help of the papers of the dead king, which brought upon him a severe castigation from the practised hand of Stillingfleet; &c. The better, though not wholly good, polemical poem of The Hind and the Panther could not possibly have owed anything to the dull brain of James as its forerunners had perhaps owed something to the bright one of Charles; and the laureate's poem on the birth of the Prince of Wales, with some fine passages, was the least good of all the serious efforts of his maturity. On the other hand, when the wreck came it was, as far as place and pension went, total. For the last twelve years of his life Dryden had nothing to rely upon but his insignificant private fortune, the liberality of patron-friends like Dorset—who, in spite of all political differences, stuck to his old companion on the voyage down the river (see pages 781 and 813), when they talked of the English drama to the accompaniment of the Dutch guns—and the profits of his literary exertions. These latter were meagre, rather in proportion to the merit of the work than to the standards and necessities of the time. His latest attempts at drama are, in at any rate some cases, better literature than all save the best of his earlier; but they were much less successful. This was partly, no doubt, owing to the fact that even Dryden's iron craftsmanship could not in old age work against the grain (and such work, he himself acknowledged, drama had always been to him) as it had worked in youth; but partly also to the other facts that the public taste was changing, and that the interests, court and other, which had once been on his side were now against him.

Fortunately he had another string to his bow. The standard of English learning, both in the classical and in the modern languages, was falling; but, partly from this very cause, there was a greater appetite than ever for translations. For translation—or at least for a peculiar kind of version which ranged from tolerably free translation to the loosest possible paraphrase—Dryden's genius, both creative and critical, was peculiarly suited. He had indeed, by one of his characteristic processes of critical evolution, arrived at a regular theory of it which was perhaps better justified by his practice than in itself. According to this theory the translator frankly disclaims all literal fidelity, and endeavours to rearrange or recreate the work in his hands, so as to produce something that seems to him to stand in the same relation to the language of the time and the probable readers of his own day as that in which the original stood in regard to those to whom it was addressed. He had, in the early volumes of a series of Miscellanies, begun this process on divers classical authors, almost as soon as the time of his first great satires. In this latest period he carried it out, partially or exclusively, in three works of importance—a translation of Juvenal and Persius, executed partly by himself, partly by others; the famous version of Virgil; and his last and greatest book of verse, the Fables, of which the most considerable portions were what he called 'translations' of Chaucer and Boccaccio. The Virgil is believed to have brought him in as much as £1200; the Fables were sold for the far more inadequate initial price of two hundred and fifty guineas. Moreover, during nearly the whole of his later literary life Dryden derived an income—small and uncertain in amount, but no doubt useful to him—from the supply of prologues and epilogues, according to the demand of the time, for plays other than his own. As these pieces were specially addressed ad vulgus, some of the less estimable features of his language and sentiment appear in them; but hardly any part of his work shows more triumphantly his almost miraculous power of literary adjustment, the trumpet-ring and echo of his verse, and the clear, shrewd, solid strength of his sense and thought. Although in these years his literary primacy was not really disputed by any competent judgment, he naturally had his share, and more than his share, of the controversial amenities of the roughest and fiercest period of political strife in English history; while very late in his life (1698) he was assailed from another side and in the house of his political friends, having to bear no small part of the brunt of Jeremy Collier's famous onslaught on the Profaneness and Immorality of the Stage. He had not merely the good sense but (as everything tends to show) the sincere good feeling to plead guilty, at most claiming extenuating circumstances.

Otherwise the last years of his life were fairly happy. All his family survived him—though all followed him at no great distance of time, death being in the case of his wife and youngest son preceded by impaired sanity. Some of his connections, both of the older and newer generations, were his fast friends to the last. However much he might be abused by mere snarlers or by political and religious partisans, everybody felt—and he knew that everybody felt—that he had succeeded to much more than the position of Ben Jonson as not merely official but actual head of English poetry and English literature; while all the best of the younger men of letters (except Swift, his kinsman, and the recipient of an imagined affront) were his hearty admirers. It was while the Fables were still in the first flush of success that he died (from mortification of the toe caused by gout) on 1st May 1700, and was (ultimately) buried in Westminster Abbey. Even those who, like Macaulay earlier and Sir Leslie Stephen later, have taken, for political or other reasons, an unfairly low view of Dryden's moral character, admit his possession of not a few moral virtues—modesty; absence of jealousy, conceit, or arrogance; family affection. Others, acknowledging that some of the degradation of a rather degraded time affected him, regard him as on the whole in need of very little whitewashing even morally. His intellectual and literary greatness, if not always fully or properly recognised, has scarcely ever been denied by any competent authority.

His position can spare the aid of the historic estimate, but is largely heightened, widened, and strengthened thereby. In himself, and without any account taken of independence of his predecessors or influence on those who came after him, Dryden is a dramatist of singular variety, volume, and (at his best) vigour; a prose-writer forcible, agreeable, and adequate to his subject as are few; a poet wanting only in the highest and rarest atmosphere of poetry; and in all these departments a master at once of the formal and the material constituents of literature. Hardly any one, except Lucretius, can argue in verse as he can; no one has a securer and defter grasp of the weapons of satire; in declamation (an inferior kind, no doubt) he has hardly a superior. Whether we look at the variety of his gifts or at the excellences of their individual expression, his contribution to English literature approves itself at once. But when we supplement this mere 'tasting' by an orderly examination of the state of that literature before and after his time, enjoyment becomes definite appreciation. We no longer, in a phrase of his own, 'like grossly,' but accurately, and with discrimination of what he did.

In every one of the three departments it is all-important to notice that Dryden by no means displaced or rejected the great Elizabethan work, preference (and just preference) of which has made some judges unjust to him. If one or two men of the 'giant race,' such as Milton and Browne, survived till he was no longer young, they were but survivals; and even as such they passed away before he reached his own perfection. As a poet he is to be compared not with Milton, hardly even with Cowley, but with D'Avenant on the one hand and Chamberlayne on the other; as a prose-writer and a dramatist hardly with any one of his forerunners, seeing that he represents in each class a new style rising on the already broken-down ruins of the past. Practically, with a decision and unanimity rare at such crises, the Restoration turned over a new leaf in all three volumes; and it was of the utmost importance that such a master as Dryden was there to set the copy on the blanks.

It was also extremely fortunate that he was not a precocious writer, and that he was (beyond almost all other men of letters in any way his equals) in the habit of reconstructing his theory and practice from time to time. But, like all great poets, he was born with certain secrets which he did not indeed discover or apply very early, but which gave an unmistakable impress to his work when, and almost before, it became mature. In poetry the chief of these was the mastery of a singularly strong and nervous line, which, by the agency partly of the new-stopped or mainly-stopped couplet, was girded up from the flaccid looseness into which both the blank-verse practice of the later dramatists and the luxuriantly overlapped couplet of the poets from Wither to Chamberlayne, had plunged the decasyllable. Something of this appears even in the Heroic Stanzas, but it is much more conspicuous in the three couplet poems above referred to and in Annus Mirabilis. Up, however, to the date of the latter Dryden's versification worked a little stiffly. It still needed expletives like 'do' and 'did'; still had recourse to effective but obvious tricks, such as the scattering of identical emphatic words like 'you' and 'your' in different places of the line. His fifteen years' practice in drama—couplet at first, then blank-verse—relieved him of this; and when he reappeared with Absalom and Achitophel there was hardly a formal blemish left on his verse—for the uses of the triplet and the Alexandrine, to which he resorted to avoid monotony, cannot be called blemishes. In the twenty years that remained to him he improved even on this standard; he certainly adjusted it to wider ranges of subject than political and controversial matters could afford. And while the exquisite lines to the Duchess of Ormond in his latest volume take up the device of 'you' which has been noticed in him forty years before, they employ it, in common with other devices, after such a fashion of combined grace and grandeur as nothing but the very topmost summits of poetic workmanship can excel.

Nor, though the couplet is Dryden's chief medium, is it by any means the only one of which he is a master. His 'Pindarics'—the irregularly rhymed stanzas which Cowley had made fashionable—are, not merely in the universally known Alexander's Feast, but in the partly better Ode on Mrs Anne Killigrew and other places, the finest of their kind. His lighter lyrics (in his play-songs chiefly), though they never have the sweetest or airiest charm of those of the poets of Charles the First's time, or even that of the best pieces of Dorset and Rochester, Sedley and Afra Behn, have been as a rule much undervalued; and he gave no small assistance to the reintroduction of the triple-foot, anapaestic or dactylic, into English poetry for purposes superior to those of doggerel and ballad.

The diction and the subjects of this verse were of equal importance. As far as the latter head is concerned, Dryden's accomplishment in verse-argument was of course not unmixedly beneficial to English literature. It made poetry attempt as a main business what is really a main business of prose; and it gave, if not countenance, yet pretext to a deplorable family of verse didactics. But it was in itself too consummate not to 'conquer time' (as Landor put it), and it by no means prevented the poet from doing much besides arguing. Dryden's narration is admirable, his discourse in non-argumentative ways superb; and his description has since the days of Wordsworth been unduly depreciated. He cannot (or at least he does not) attempt to describe with the elaboration of the modern word-painter; but he is equal to the images he attempts to reproduce, and his single epithets are often admirably luminous and suggestive.

Undoubtedly, however, his great claim, next to his versification, lies in his diction. He rejects the euphuistic promiscuousness of his forerunners without falling into the mere vulgarity of some of his immediate contemporaries, or into the grayness and lack of colour of standard eighteenth-century English. He has not the slightest horror either of a new word or of a foreign word or of an archaic word, yet by a half-instinctive process of selection he has arranged a vocabulary which, though no doubt there can never be any final standard of English, perhaps approaches that ideal as near as any that can be mentioned. So at least thought Charles James Fox, who, when he undertook his History of James II., resolved to use no word which was not to be found in Dryden. But Dryden's practice belies Fox's theory.

The combination of these gifts with a far smaller portion of the true 'poetic fire' than has been assigned to Dryden by all but one-sided criticism would have sufficed to secure an altogether unusually high level of merit. It is not even true that (as Landor qualifies the praise given above by saying) he is 'never tender or sublime.' He is not often tender, but he is sometimes; he is sublime not seldom. But the intellectual and artistic qualities of his verse are no doubt on the whole above the emotional. His best poems have been glanced at already, but a short catalogue of all the more important, with dates and a brief note of the subject, &c., of each, may be useful. Heroic Stanzas, quatrains on Cromwell's death (1658); Astræa Redux, on the king's return, and, like the two following, in heroic couplets (1660); Panegyric on the Coronation (1661); To My Lord

Chancellor (New Year's Day 1662); Annus Mirabilis (winter of 1666), quatrains; Absalom and Achitophel, with its sequels, all in couplets, and all written and published between November 1681 and November 1682; Religio Laici, religious-philosophical couplets (1682); Threnodia Augustalis, a Pindaric on the death of Charles II. (1685); The Hind and the Panther, an allegorical polemic in couplets on the quarrel between the Anglican and Roman Churches, with side-hits at the Protestant sects and obnoxious persons like Burnet (1687); Britannia Rediviva, also couplets (1688); Eleonora, an epic on Lady Abingdon, written to order, but with splendid passages, in couplets (1692). The dates of the great translations and of the Fables (which included rehandlings of the Knight's, Nun's Priest's, and Wife of Bath's Tales from Chaucer; of The Flower and the Leaf; and of the stories of Sigismonda, Honoria, and Cymon, from Boccaccio) have been given above. Dryden's minor poems, which are very numerous, are scattered over the whole forty years of his literary life, and in many places—his plays, those of others, the Miscellanies which he edited, and the various books for which, as compliments or commendations or otherwise, they were specially written.

It will have been observed from this catalogue—and indeed it is generally known—that the larger part of Dryden's poetical work is written in the heroic or decasyllabic couplet, to which he gave an entirely new stamp, and which, directly or through the refined but not in all ways improved form given to it by Pope, became the reigning metre of English verse for nearly a hundred and fifty years. And attention has been drawn already to the importance of his dramatic work in reference to this. That work falls into four classes—comedies or tragi-comedies, heroic plays, later blank-verse dramas, and operas.

Dryden's comedies have, in the general opinion, been ranked lowest among his works; and with some excuse. His touch was scarcely light enough for the kind; and, perhaps here only, he never worked out a distinct form of his own. His comedies, tragi-comedies, and (in the useful French limitation of the word) dramas float between the humour-comedy of Jonson, the romantic-prosaic comedy of Beaumont and Fletcher, and the brilliant new comedy of manners which, quite early in his career, Etherege aimed at, and which, late in that career, Congreve and Vanbrugh triumphantly achieved. This uncertainty of scheme and spirit is not helped by the very frequent coarseness of language and incident or by the indistinctness of comic character. But in one particular situation—the pair of light-o'-loves who flirt and bicker but are really very fond of each other—Dryden is not unsuccessful; while in one figure of an affected coquette, the Melantha of Marriage à la Mode (1672), he has borrowed little from any one else, and has lent a great deal to one of Congreve's masterpieces, Millamant. The drawbacks of his comedy appear at once in his earliest play, The Wild Gallant (1663), and have not disappeared in his last, the tragi-comic Love Triumphant of 1694. Its merits appear chiefly in Secret Love, or the Maiden Queen (1667), where Nell Gwynne's acting undoubtedly helped, but by no means wholly created, the attractive part of Florimel, one of the flirts above mentioned; the also-mentioned Marriage à la Mode; The Spanish Friar (1681); and Amphitryon (1690). The blank-verse tragedies, which he produced after giving up rhyme, undoubtedly contain his noblest work in drama—the bold, but not wholly too bold, attempt on the subject of Antony and Cleopatra called All for Love, or the World Well Lost (1678); the carefully wrought and admirably written Don Sebastian (1690); and the fine rhetorical Cleomenes (1692), his last play but one. These, however, are inevitably brought into contrast with the Elizabethan masterpieces, and suffer accordingly. The operas, Albion and Albanus (1685) and King Arthur (1691), contain good work, especially in the lyric parts; but they are mainly curiosities, historically interesting as marking a transition from the masque. A curiosity, again, is the rhymed or 'tagged' dramatisation of Paradise Lost, called The State of Innocence (1674), which Dryden also called an opera, and which is said to have been good-naturedly though half-contemptuously authorised by Milton himself. Curiosities of a less agreeable kind occur in the Shakespearian alterations of The Tempest, after D'Avenant (1667), and of Troilus and Cressida (1679); but some of Dryden's drama is only 'curious' in a worse sense still.

The heroic play deserves separate treatment for many reasons—the chief being its pre-eminent serviceableness in perfecting his verse, its odd historical isolation as a kind immensely popular for a time and then chiefly laughed at, and its close connection with the admirable Essay of Dramatic Poesy. He did not exactly invent it; it is one of those literary kinds which, in a famous phrase, were never directly invented by any one, but 'grewed.' The heroic play has something to do with the long-winded but universally read French novels of the Scudéry class; something with the French tragedy of Corneille and his earlier contemporaries; much with the out-at-heel degradation of blank-verse in the last plays written immediately before the closing of the theatres in 1642; much also with the growing distaste for remote imaginative conceit and emotion, the growing fancy for sharp intellectual rally and repartee. The first example of it in its high-flown sentiment, rhetorical style, and non-natural situation is D'Avenant's Siege of Rhodes, which, safeguarded by its title of 'opera,' actually preceded the Restoration and the reopening of the theatre generally (1656). It was written for nearly forty years after that date. But its flourishing time was from 1665 to 1680, and all its best examples were mainly or wholly Dryden's work. He it was who first achieved the hectoring, ringing tenor of its couplet tirades, and the sharp battledore-and-shuttlecock (so admirably ridiculed by Butler and in the Rehearsal, and always on the point of burlesquing itself) of its single-line interchanges of speech. The Indian Queen, which he wrote in collaboration with his brother-in-law, Sir Robert Howard, appeared as early as January 1664; The Indian Emperor, by himself, and far superior, followed in 1665. But he made much farther advances to the eccentric perfection which the thing admitted in Tyrannic Love, or the Royal Martyr (1669), on the story of St Catharine, and the two parts of The Conquest of Granada (1670), all three of which are triumphs of preposterous situation and sentiment, carried off by the most extraordinary bravado of poetical rhetoric, which not seldom becomes, for moments, actual poetry of a high class. His last, and in some ways his greatest, heroic or rhymed tragedy was Aurengzebe (1675), a play interesting because of its contemporary if remote subject, and though not possessing the furia and sweep of its two predecessors, including passages (one especially) which display at nearly their best Dryden's masterly fashion of writing and his criticism—not subtle or profound, but strong and true and everlasting—of life.

The transition to his prose is all the easier because, as was noted above, the first considerable example of that prose, the Essay of Dramatic Poesy, is in part a defence of rhymed plays. Congreve represents Dryden as acknowledging indebtedness to Tillotson; but Dryden was too proud a man to be a vain one, and it is very difficult to trace the indebtedness chronologically as well as æsthetically. It is certain that for years past there had been, unconsciously or consciously, both a vague desire for and actual attempts at a style less gorgeous but more generally useful than the styles of Milton, Taylor, and Browne, less intricate and cumbrous than that of Clarendon, easier and more conversational than that of Hobbes. Beginnings of such a style are found as far back as Jonson; Cowley's essays mark a great advance in it. But these essays were not published early. The real bringers of it about were a group of men—Tillotson, Temple, Halifax, South, Dryden himself, and one or two more—who were all born about the year 1630. For the perfecting of such a style the essay, with its freedom from stiff rhetorical rules of argument and its wide liberty, offered special advantages; and Dryden, who, if he did not require, always preferred, a model, found in Corneille's examens of his own plays one for the adjustment of the essay to purposes of literary criticism. Most of the long succession of essays, prefaces, and so forth with which he followed up the Essay of Dramatic Poesy itself are, like it, devoted to literary subjects, with, naturally enough, a strong admixture of political and other polemic, in the period from the Popish Plot to the Revolution. But whatever the subject, the style is the same, or rather it adjusts itself to almost any subject with slight variations. Fault has been found with it (by Coleridge) for not possessing a 'stricter and purer grammar;' but this comes from the mistaken notion that English grammar has a 'sealed pattern' lying somewhere stored up and not to be varied from, instead of being, as it really is, in the main an induction from the practice of the best writers. At first he was perhaps a little too colloquial; but as this fault grew upon his contemporaries he himself corrected it. He was at first also too much given to the use of foreign words; but though he, wisely, never gave this up, he used it later with an equally wise moderation. His diction has the same clear-cut force and form that it possesses in poetry; and the mould of his sentences, with its not excessive or monotonous antithesis, its easy swing and vibration, and the clenching stroke at the end, reminds one in no unpleasant way of his management of the couplet. The great character of his prose throughout is its combination of ease that is never (or hardly ever) slipshod with weight which is still more rarely 'loaded' or clumsy. Here, as in verse, he improved continually to the last; and his prose Preface to the Fables, with its opening epistle to the Duke of Ormond, is as much a 'diploma-piece' of his style in this harmony as the verses to the Duchess (given at page 801) are of his fashion of poetry. In both he was for his time a perfect master of the game; and in such mastery he is very unlikely to be excelled at any time, whatsoever may be the changes that come over English literature.

I. Dryden's Poems.—The first group of illustrative extracts are from Dryden's poetry other than dramatic, the second from his dramas, the third from his prose.

Character of Shaftesbury.

Of these the false Achitophel was first;
A name to all succeeding ages curst:
For close designs and crooked counsels fit,
Sagacious, bold, and turbulent of wit,
Restless, unfixed in principles and place,
In power unpleased, impatient of disgrace:
A fiery soul, which, working out its way,
Fretted the pigmy body to decay,
And o'er-informed the tenement of clay.
A daring pilot in extremity;
Pleased with the danger, when the waves went high,
He sought the storms; but, for a calm unfit,
Would steer too nigh the sands to boast his wit.
Great wits are sure to madness near allied,
And thin partitions do their bounds divide;
Else why should he, with wealth and honour blest,
Refuse his age the needful hours of rest?
Punish a body which he could not please,
Bankrupt of life, yet prodigal of ease?
And all to leave what with his toil he won,
To that unfeathered two-legged thing, a son;
Got while his soul did huddled notions try,
And born a shapeless lump, like anarchy.

In friendship false, implacable in hate;
 Resolved to ruin or to rule the state:
 To compass this, the triple bond he broke,
 The pillars of the public safety shook,
 And fitted Israel for a foreign yoke:
 Then, seized with fear, yet still affecting fame,
 Usurped a patriot's all-atoning name.
 So easy still it proves, in factious times,
 With public zeal to cancel private crimes.
 How safe is treason, and how sacred ill,
 Where none can sin against the people's will!
 Where crowds can wink, and no offence be known,
 Since in another's guilt they find their own!
 Yet fame deserved no enemy can grudge;
 The statesman we abhor, but praise the judge.
 In Israel's courts ne'er sat an Abbethdin—
 With more discerning eyes, or hands more clean,
 Unbribed, unsought, the wretched to redress,
 Swift of despatch, and easy of access.
 Oh! had he been content to serve the crown
 With virtues only proper to the gown,
 Or had the rankness of the soil been freed
 From cockle that oppressed the noble seed,
 David for him his tuneful harp had strung,
 And heaven had wanted one immortal song.
 But wild ambition loves to slide, not stand,
 And Fortune's ice prefers to Virtue's land.
 Achitophel, grown weary to possess
 A lawful fame and lazy happiness,
 Disdained the golden fruit to gather free,
 And lent the crowd his arm to shake the tree.

(From Absalom and Achitophel.)

It is significant that Dryden avoids the spelling Achitophel, which the Authorised Version had long made the stereotyped English spelling, and clings to Achitophel, the spelling not merely of the Latin Vulgate but of the (Catholic) Douay version. Abbethdin, 'father of the house of justice,' was the Hebrew title of a Jewish supreme judge.

The Duke of Buckingham.

Some of their chiefs were princes of the land:
 In the first rank of these did Zimri stand;
 A man so various that he seemed to be
 Not one, but all mankind's epitome:
 Stiff in opinions, always in the wrong,
 Was everything by starts, and nothing long;
 But, in the course of one revolving moon,
 Was chymist, fiddler, statesman, and buffoon;
 Then all for women, painting, rhyming, drinking,
 Besides ten thousand freaks that died in thinking.
 Blest madman, who could every hour employ
 With something new to wish or to enjoy!
 Railing and praising were his usual themes,
 And both, to shew his judgment, in extremes;
 So over-violent, or over-civil,
 That every man with him was god or devil.
 In squandering wealth was his peculiar art;
 Nothing went unrewarded but desert:
 Beggared by fools, whom still he found too late,
 He had his jest, and they had his estate;
 He laughed himself from court, then sought relief
 By forming parties, but could ne'er be chief;
 For, spite of him, the weight of business fell
 On Absalom and wise Achitophel:
 Thus, wicked but in will, of means bereft,
 He left not faction, but of that was left.

(From Absalom and Achitophel.)

Shaftesbury's Address to Monmouth.

Auspicious prince, at whose nativity
 Some royal planet ruled the southern sky,
 Thy longing country's darling and desire,
 Their cloudy pillar and their guardian fire;
 Their second Moses, whose extended wand
 Divides the seas, and shews the promised land;
 Whose dawning day in every distant age
 Has exercised the sacred prophet's rage:
 The people's prayer, the glad diviner's theme,
 The young men's vision, and the old men's dream;
 Thee saviour, thee, the nation's vows confess,
 And, never satisfied with seeing, bless:
 Swift unbespoken pomps thy steps proclaim,
 And stammering babes are taught to lisp thy name:
 How long wilt thou the general joy detain,
 Starve and defraud the people of thy reign?
 Content ingloriously to pass thy days,
 Like one of virtue's fools that feeds on praise;
 Till thy fresh glories, which now shine so bright,
 Grow stale, and tarnish with our daily sight;
 Believe me, royal youth, thy fruit must be
 Or gathered ripe, or rot upon the tree:
 Heaven has to all allotted, soon or late,
 Some lucky revolution of their fate;
 Whose motions, if we watch and guide with skill,
 (For human good depends on human will,)
 Our fortune rolls as from a smooth descent,
 And from the first impression takes the bent;
 But if unseized, she glides away like wind,
 And leaves repenting folly far behind.
 Now, now she meets you with a glorious prize,
 And spreads her locks before you as she flies!
 Had thus old David, from whose loins you spring,
 Not dared, when fortune called him to be king,
 At Gath an exile he might still remain,
 And heaven's anointing oil had been in vain.
 Let his successful youth your hopes engage,
 But shun the example of declining age;
 Behold him setting in his western skies,
 The shadows lengthening as the vapours rise.
 He is not now as when on Jordan's sand
 The joyful people thronged to see him land,
 Covering the beach and blackening all the strand!

(From Absalom and Achitophel.)

Jordan's sand is simply for the English coast, and refers to no incident in Hebrew history.

Ode to the Memory of Mrs Anne Killigrew.

Thou youngest virgin-daughter of the skies,
 Made in the last promotion of the blest;
 Whose palms, new-plucked from Paradise,
 In spreading branches more sublimely rise,
 Rich with immortal green above the rest:
 Whether, adopted to some neighbouring star,
 Thou roll'st above us, in thy wandering race,
 Or, in procession fixed and regular,
 Mov'st with the heaven-majestic pace;
 Or, called to more superior bliss,
 Thou tread'st, with seraphims, the vast abyss:
 Whatever happy region be thy place,
 Cease thy celestial song a little space;
 Thou wilt have time enough for hymns divine,
 Since Heaven's eternal year is thine.
 Hear, then, a mortal Muse thy praise rehearse,
 In no ignoble verse;

But such as thy own voice did practise here,
When thy first-fruits of poesy were given,
To make thyself a welcome inmate there;
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heaven.

If by traduction came thy mind,
Our wonder is the less to find
A soul so charming from a stock so good;
Thy father was transfused into thy blood:
So wert thou born into the tuneful strain,
An early, rich, and inexhausted vein.
But if thy pre-existing soul
Was formed at first with myriads more,
It did through all the mighty poets roll,
Who Greek or Latin laurels wore,
And was that Sappho last, which once it was before.
If so, then cease thy flight, O heaven-born mind!
Thou hast no dross to purge from thy rich ore:
Nor can thy soul a fairer mansion find
Than was the beauteous frame she left behind.
Return to fill or mend the quire of thy celestial kind. . . .

O gracious God! how far have we
Profaned thy heavenly gift of Poesy!
Made prostitute and profligate the Muse,
Debased to each obscene and impious use,
Whose harmony was first ordained above
For tongues of angels, and for hymns of love!
Oh wretched we! why were we hurried down
This lubric and adulterate age,
(Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,)
To increase the steaming ordures of the stage?
What can we say to excuse our second fall?
Let this thy vestal, Heaven, atone for all;
Her Arethusian stream remains unsoiled,
Unmixed with foreign filth and undefiled;
Her wit was more than man; her innocence a child. . . .

When in mid-air the golden trump shall sound,
To raise the nations underground;
When in the valley of Jehosaphat
The judging God shall close the book of Fate;
And there the last assizes keep
For those who wake, and those who sleep;
When rattling bones together fly
From the four corners of the sky;
When sinews o'er the skeletons are spread,
Those clothed with flesh, and life inspires the dead;
The sacred poets first shall hear the sound,
And foremost from the tomb shall bound,
For they are covered with the lightest ground;
And straight, with inborn vigour, on the wing,
Like mountain larks, to the new morning sing.
There thou, sweet saint, before the quire shall go,
As harbinger of heaven, the way to shew,
The way which thou so well hast learned below.

(Miss) Anne Killigrew, daughter of a prebendary of Westminster (who was the brother of the two dramatists; see Vol. II.), died of smallpox in 1685, aged twenty-five. She painted pictures, and a volume of her poems was published after her death. The traducian or derivative theory of the origin of the individual soul is opposed to the creationist view. Jehosaphat is neither the Vulgate nor the Douay spelling (Josaphat), nor yet that of the A.V. (Jehoshaphat).

Satire on Shadwell.

All human things are subject to decay;
And, when Fate summons, monarchs must obey.
This Flecknoe found, who, like Augustus, young
Was called to empire, and had governed long,
In prose and verse was owned, without dispute,
Through all the realms of Nonsense absolute.
This aged prince, now flourishing in peace,
And blest with issue of a large increase,
Worn out with business, did at length debate
To settle the succession of the state;
And pondering which of all his sons was fit
To reign and wage immortal war with Wit,
Cried: 'Tis resolved; for Nature pleads that he Should only rule who most resembles me.
Shadwell alone my perfect image bears,
Mature in dulness from his tender years:
Shadwell alone of all my sons is he
Who stands confirmed in full stupidity.
The rest to some faint meaning make pretence;
But Shadwell never deviates into sense.
Some beams of wit on other souls may fall,
Strike through, and make a lucid interval;
But Shadwell's genuine night admits no ray;
His rising fogs prevail upon the day.
Besides, his goodly fabric fills the eye,
And seems designed for thoughtless majesty:
Thoughtless as monarch oaks that shade the plain,
And, spread in solemn state, supinely reign.
Heywood and Shirley were but types of thee,
Thou last great prophet of tautology!
Even I, a dunce of more renown than they,
Was sent before but to prepare thy way.'

(From Mac-Flecknoe.)

For Flecknoe, see page 784 of this volume, and for Shadwell, Vol. II. p. 63; and for Heywood and Shirley, unkindly comprehended in the same condemnation, pages 431, 484 of this volume.

To my dear Friend, Mr Congreve, on his Comedy called 'The Double Dealer.'

Well then, the promised hour is come at last,
The present age of wit obscures the past:
Strong were our sires, and as they fought they writ,
Conquering with force of arms and dint of wit:
Theirs was the giant race before the flood;
And thus, when Charles returned, our empire stood.
Like Janus, he the stubborn soil manured,
With rules of husbandry the rankness cured;
Tamed us to manners, when the stage was rude,
And boisterous English wit with art endued.
Our age was cultivated thus at length,
But what we gained in skill we lost in strength.
Our builders were with want of genius curst;
The second temple was not like the first;
Till you, the best Vitruvius, come at length,
Our beauties equal, but excel our strength.
Firm Doric pillars found your solid base,
The fair Corinthian crowns the higher space;
Thus all below is strength, and all above is grace.
In easy dialogue is Fletcher's praise;
He moved the mind, but had not power to raise.
Great Jonson did by strength of judgment please,
Yet, doubling Fletcher's force, he wants his ease.
In differing talents both adorned their age,
One for the study, t'other for the stage.

But both to Congreve justly shall submit,
 One matched in judgment, both o'ermatched in wit.
 In him all beauties of this age we see,
 Etherege his courtship, Southern's purity,
 The satire, wit, and strength of manly Wycherly.
 All this in blooming youth you have achieved;
 Nor are your foiled contemporaries grieved.
 So much the sweetness of your manners move,
 We cannot envy you, because we love.

Fabius might joy in Scipio, when he saw
 A beardless Consul made against the law,
 And join his suffrage to the votes of Rome,
 Though he with Hannibal was overcome.
 Thus old Romano bowed to Raphael's fame,
 And scholar to the youth he taught became.

O that your brows my laurel had sustained!
 Well had I been deposed, if you had reigned:
 The father had descended for the son;
 For only you are lineal to the throne.
 Thus, when the state one Edward did depose,
 A greater Edward in his room arose:
 But now, not I but poetry is curst;
 For Tom the second reigns like Tom the first.
 But let them not mistake my patron's part,
 Nor call his charity their own desert.
 Yet this I prophesy—Thou shalt be seen,
 Though with some short parenthesis between,
 High on the throne of wit, and, seated there,
 Not mine—that's little—but thy laurel wear.
 Thy first attempt an early promise made,
 That early promise this has more than paid.
 So bold, yet so judiciously you dare,
 That your least praise is to be regular.
 Time, place, and action may with pains be wrought,
 But genius must be born, and never can be taught.
 This is your portion, this your native store;
 Heaven, that but once was prodigal before, [more.
 To Shakespeare gave as much; she could not give him
 Maintain your post: that's all the fame you need;
 For 'tis impossible you should proceed.
 Already I am worn with cares and age,
 And just abandoning the ungrateful stage:
 Unprofitably kept at Heaven's expense,
 I live a rent-charge on His providence;
 But you, whom every Muse and Grace adorn,
 Whom I foresee to better fortune born,
 Be kind to my remains; and oh, defend,
 Against your judgment, your departed friend!
 Let not the insulting foe my fame pursue,
 But shade those laurels which descend to you:
 And take for tribute what these lines express:
 You merit more, nor could my love do less.

Tom the First and Tom the Second are apparently Thomas Shadwell and Thomas Rymer of the Fadest, also a dramatist, and the worst of all actual and possible critics.

On Milton.

Three poets, in three distant ages born,
 Greece, Italy, and England did adorn.
 The first in loftiness of thought surpassed;
 The next in majesty; in both the last.
 The force of Nature could no farther go;
 To make a third, she joined the former two.

On Cromwell.

His grandeur he derived from Heaven alone,
 For he was great ere Fortune made him so;

And wars, like mists that rise against the sun,
 Made him but greater seem, not greater grow. . . .

Nor was he like those stars which only shine
 When to pale mariners they storms portend;
 He had his calmer influence, and his mien
 Did love and majesty together blend.

(From Heroic Stanzas.)

Reason and Religion.

Dim as the borrowed beams of moon and stars
 To lonely, weary, wandering travellers,
 Is Reason to the soul; and as on high
 Those rolling fires discover but the sky,
 Not light us here; so Reason's glimmering ray
 Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way,
 But guide us upward to a better day.
 And as those nightly tapers disappear,
 When day's bright lord ascends our hemisphere;
 So pale grows Reason at Religion's sight;
 So dies, and so dissolves in supernatural light.

(From Religio Laici.)

It is worth noting the rhyming of stars with travellers.

Hind and Panther Described.

A milk-white Hind, immortal and unchanged,
 Fed on the lawns, and in the forest ranged;
 Without unspotted, innocent within,
 She feared no danger, for she knew no sin.
 Yet had she oft been chased with horns and hounds,
 And Scythian shafts, and many winged wounds
 Aimed at her heart; was often forced to fly,
 And doomed to death, though fated not to die. . . .

The Panther, sure the noblest next the Hind,
 And fairest creature of the spotted kind;
 Oh, could her inborn stains be washed away.
 She were too good to be a beast of prey!
 How can I praise or blame, and not offend,
 Or how divide the frailty from the friend?
 Her vaults and virtues lie so mixed, that she
 Nor wholly stands condemned nor wholly free.
 Then like her injured Lion, let me speak;
 He cannot bend her, and he would not break.
 Unkind already, and estranged in part,
 The Wolf begins to share her wandering heart.
 Though unpolluted yet with actual ill,
 She half commits who sins but in her will.
 If, as our dreaming Platonists report,
 There could be spirits of a middle sort,
 Too black for heaven, and yet too white for hell,
 Who just dropped half-way down, nor lower fell;
 So poised, so gently she descends from high,
 It seems a soft dismission from the sky.

(From The Hind and the Panther, Part II.)

The Swallow.

The swallow, privileged above the rest
 Of all the birds as man's familiar guest,
 Pursues the sun in summer, brisk and bold,
 But wisely shuns the persecuting cold;
 Is well to chancels and to chimneys known,
 Though 'tis not thought she feeds on smoke alone.
 From hence she has been held of heavenly line,
 Endued with particles of soul divine:
 This merry chorister had long possessed
 Her summer seat, and feathered well her nest;

Till frowning skies began to change their cheer,
 And time turned up the wrong side of the year;
 The shedding trees began the ground to strow
 With yellow leaves, and bitter blasts to blow:
 Such auguries of winter thence she drew,
 Which by instinct or prophecy she knew;
 When prudence warned her to remove betimes,
 And seek a better heaven and warmer climes,
 Her sons were summoned on a steeple's height,
 And, called in common council, vote a flight.
 The day was named, the next that should be fair;
 All to the general rendezvous repair; [in air.
 They try their fluttering wings, and trust themselves

Who but the swallow now triumphs alone?
 The canopy of heaven is all her own:
 Her youthful offspring to their haunts repair,
 And glide along in glades, and skim in air,
 And dip for insects in the purling springs,
 And stoop on rivers to refresh their wings.

(From The Hind and the Panther, Part iii.)

The Church's Testimony.

But, gracious God! how well dost Thou provide
 For erring judgments an unerring guide!
 Thy throne is darkness in the abyss of light,
 A blaze of glory that forbids the sight.
 O teach me to believe Thee thus concealed,
 And search no farther than Thy self revealed,
 But her alone for my director take
 Whom thou hast promised never to forsake!
 My thoughtless youth was winged with vain desires,
 My manhood, long misled by wandering fires,
 Followed false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,
 My pride struck out new sparkles of her own.
 Such was I, such by nature still I am;
 Be Thine the glory, and be mine the shame!

(From The Hind and the Panther, Part i.)

The four lines from the eighth present a noteworthy parallel to the keynote of Newman's 'Lead, kindly Light.'

The Cost of Conversion.

If joys hereafter must be purchased here
 With loss of all that mortals hold so dear,
 Then welcome infamy and public shame,
 And last, a long farewell to worldly fame.
 'Tis said with ease, but oh, how hardly tried
 By haughty souls to human honour tied!
 O sharp convulsive pangs of agonising pride!
 Down, then, thou rebel, never more to rise,
 And what thou didst, and dost so dearly prize,
 That fame, that darling fame, make that thy sacrifice.
 'Tis nothing thou hast given; then add thy tears
 For a long race of unrepenting years:
 'Tis nothing yet, yet all thou hast to give;
 Then add those may-be years thou hast to live:
 Yet nothing still; then poor and naked come;
 Thy Father will receive his unthrift home,
 And thy blest Saviour's blood discharge the mighty sum.

(From The Hind and the Panther, Part iii.)

Dreams.

Dreams are but interludes which Fancy makes;
 When monarch Reason sleeps, this mimic wakes
 Compounds a medley of disjointed things,
 A mob of cobblers, and a court of kings:

Light fumes are merry, grosser fumes are sad:
 Both are the reasonable soul run mad;
 And many monstrous forms in sleep we see,
 That neither were, nor are, nor e'er can be.
 Sometimes forgotten things long cast behind
 Rush forward in the brain, and come to mind.
 The nurse's legends are for truths received,
 And the man dreams but what the boy believed.
 Sometimes we but rehearse a former play,
 The night restores our actions done by day,
 As hounds in sleep will open for their prey.

(From The Cock and the Fox, modernised from Chaucer.)

To the Duchess of Ormond.

MADAM,

The bard who first adorned our native tongue
 Tuned to his British lyre this ancient song;
 Which Homer might without a blush rehearse,
 And leaves a doubtful palm in Virgil's verse:
 He matched their beauties, where they most excel;
 Of love sung better, and of arms as well.

Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold
 What power the charms of beauty had of old;
 Nor wonder if such deeds of arms were done,
 Inspired by two fair eyes that sparkled like your own.

If Chaucer by the best idea wrought,
 And poets can divine each other's thought,
 The fairest nymph before his eyes he set;
 And then the fairest was Plantagenet,
 Who three contending princes made her prize,
 And ruled the rival nations with her eyes;
 Who left immortal trophies of her fame,
 And to the noblest order gave the name.

Like her, of equal kindred to the throne,
 You keep her conquests, and extend your own:
 As when the stars, in their ethereal race,
 At length have rolled around the liquid space,
 At certain periods they resume their place,
 From the same point of heaven their course advance,
 And move in measures of their former dance;
 Thus, after length of ages, she returns,
 Restored in you, and the same place adorns:
 Or you perform her office in the sphere,
 Born of her blood, and make a new Platonic year.

O true Plantagenet, O race divine,
 (For beauty still is fatal to the line,)
 Had Chaucer lived that angel-face to view,
 Sure he had drawn his Emily from you;
 Or had you lived to judge the doubtful right,
 Your noble Palamon had been the knight;
 And conquering Theseus from his side had sent
 Your generous lord, to guide the Theban government.
 Time shall accomplish that; and I shall see
 A Palamon in him, in you an Emily.

Already have the Fates your path prepared,
 And sure presage your future sway declared:
 When westward, like the sun, you took your way,
 And from benighted Britain bore the day,
 Blue Triton gave the signal from the shore,
 The ready Nereids heard, and swam before
 To smooth the seas; a soft Etesian gale
 But just inspired, and gently swelled the sail;
 Portunus took his turn, whose ample hand
 Heaved up the lightened keel, and sunk the sand,
 And steered the sacred vessel safe to land.
 The land, if not restrained, had met your way,
 Projected out a neck, and jutted to the sea.

Hibernia, prostrate at your feet, adored
In you the pledge of her expected lord,
Due to her isle; a venerable name;
His father and his grandsire known to fame;
Awed by that house, accustomed to command,
The sturdy kerns in due subjection stand,
Nor hear the reins in any foreign hand.

At your approach, they crowded to the port;
And scarcely landed, you create a court:
As Ormond's harbinger, to you they run,
For Venus is the promise of the Sun.

The waste of civil wars, their towns destroyed,
Pales unhonoured, Ceres unemployed,
Were all forgot; and one triumphant day
Wiped all the tears of three campaigns away.
Blood, rapines, massacres, were cheaply bought,
So mighty recompense your beauty brought.
As when the dove returning bore the mark
Of earth restored to the long-labouring ark,
The relics of mankind, secure of rest,
Oped every window to receive the guest,
And the fair bearer of the message blessed:
So, when you came, with loud repeated cries,
The nation took an omen from your eyes,
And God advanced his rainbow in the skies,
To sign inviolable peace restored;
The saints with solemn shouts proclaimed the new accord.

When at your second coming you appear,
(For I foretell that millenary year)
The sharpened share shall vex the soil no more,
But earth unbidden shall produce her store;
The land shall laugh, the circling ocean smile,
And Heaven's indulgence bless the holy isle.

Heaven from all ages has reserved for you
That happy clime, which venom never knew;
Or if it had been there, your eyes alone
Have power to chase all poison, but their own.

Now in this interval, which Fate has cast
Betwixt your future glories and your past,
This pause of power, 'tis Ireland's hour to mourn;
While England celebrates your safe return,
By which you seem the seasons to command,
And bring our summers back to their forsaken land.

The vanquished isle our leisure must attend,
Till the fair blessing we vouchsafe to send;
Nor can we spare you long, though often we may lend.
The dove was twice employed abroad, before
The world was dried, and she returned no more.

Nor dare we trust so soft a messenger,
New from her sickness, to that northern air;
Rest here awhile your lustre to restore,
That they may see you, as you shone before;
For yet, the eclipse not wholly past, you wade
Through some remains and dimness of a shade.

A subject in his prince may claim a right,
Nor suffer him with strength impaired to fight;
Till force returns, his ardour we restrain,
And curb his warlike wish to cross the main.

Now past the danger, let the learned begin
The inquiry, where disease could enter in;
How those malignant atoms forced their way,
What in the faultless frame they found to make their prey,

Where every element was weighed so well,
That Heaven alone, who mixed the mass, could tell

Which of the four ingredients could rebel;
And where, imprisoned in so sweet a cage,
A soul might well be pleased to pass an age.

And yet the fine materials made it weak;
Porcelain by being pure is apt to break.
Even to your breast the sickness durst aspire,
And forced from that fair temple to retire,
Profanely set the holy place on fire.
In vain your lord, like young Vespasian, mourned,
When the fierce flames the sanctuary burned;
And I prepared to pay in verses rude
A most detested act of gratitude:
Even this had been your Elegy, which now
Is offered for your health, the table of my vow.

Your angel sure our Morley's mind inspired,
To find the remedy your ill required;
As once the Macedon, by Jove's decree,
Was taught to dream an herb for Ptolemy:
Or Heaven, which had such over-cost bestowed
As scarce it could afford to flesh and blood,
So liked the frame, he would not work anew,
To save the charges of another you;
Or by his middle science did he steer,
And saw some great contingent good appear,
Well worth a miracle to keep you here,
And for that end preserved the precious mould,
Which all the future Ormonds was to hold;
And meditated, in his better mind,
An heir from you who may redeem the failing kind.

Blessed be the power which has at once restored
The hopes of lost succession to your lord;
Joy to the first and last of each degree,
Virtue to courts, and, what I longed to see,
To you the Graces, and the Muse to me.

O daughter of the Rose, whose cheeks unite
The differing titles of the Red and White;
Who heaven's alternate beauty well display,
The blush of morning and the milky way;
Whose face is Paradise, but fenced from sin;
For God in either eye has placed a cherubin.

All is your lord's alone; even absent, he Employs the care of chaste Penelope.
For him you waste in tears your widowed hours,
For him your curious needle paints the flowers;
Such works of old imperial dames were taught,
Such for Ascanius fair Elisa wrought.

The soft recesses of your hours improve
The three fair pledges of your happy love:
All other parts of pious duty done,
You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,
To fill in future times his father's place,
And wear the garter of his mother's race.

The Duchess to whom Dryden dedicated Palamon and Arcite, his version of Chaucer's 'Knight's Tale,' was the second wife of the second Duke of Ormond, son of the Earl of Ossory, who died before his father, the first Duke. The Duchess was daughter of the Duke of Beaufort. The traditional—and fabulous—story of the founding of the Order of the Garter confounds Joan, granddaughter of Edward I., who was betrothed (but not married) to the second Earl of Salisbury, with the (non-royal) Countess of the first Earl. For the Platonic year, see note above at Butler, page 741. Fatal, fated, destined. Portunus, guardian deity of harbours; Pales, of sheep-walks. The Duchess had just recovered from fever; Dr Morley was her doctor. Titus Vespasian wept at the destruction of the Temple of Jerusalem. Alexander the Great dreamt of a remedy for the poisoned wound of Ptolemy Soter. Cherubin and cherubim, both plural forms, are often used interchangeably with 'cherub.' Dido was also called Elissa or Elisa.

Theodore and Honoria.

Of all the cities in Romanian lands,
The chief and most renowned Ravenna stands,
Adorned in ancient times with arms and arts,
And rich inhabitants with generous hearts.
But Theodore the brave, above the rest,
With gifts of fortune and of nature blessed,
The foremost place for wealth and honour held,
And all in feats of chivalry excelled.

This noble youth to madness loved a dame
Of high degree; Honoria was her name;
Fair as the fairest, but of haughty mind,
And fiercer than became so soft a kind.
Proud of her birth (for equal she had none),
The rest she scorned, but hated him alone.
His gifts, his constant courtship, nothing gained;
For she, the more he loved, the more disdained.
He lived with all the pomp he could devise,
At tilts and tournaments obtained the prize,
But found no favour in his lady's eyes:
Relentless as a rock, the lofty maid
Turned all to poison that he did or said;
Nor prayers, nor tears, nor offered vows, could move;
The work went backward; and the more he strove
To advance his suit, the farther from her love.

Wearied at length, and wanting remedy,
He doubted oft, and oft resolved to die.
But pride stood ready to prevent the blow,
For who would die to gratify a foe?
His generous mind disdained so mean a fate;
That passed, his next endeavour was to hate.
But vainer that relief than all the rest;
The less he hoped, with more desire possessed;
Love stood the siege, and would not yield his breast.
Change was the next, but change deceived his care;
He sought a fairer, but found none so fair.
He would have worn her out by slow degrees,
As men by fasting starve the untamed disease:
But present love required a present ease.
Looking, he feeds alone his famished eyes,
Feeds lingering death, but looking not, he dies.
Yet still he chose the longest way to fate,
Wasting at once his life and his estate.

His friends beheld, and pitied him in vain,
For what advice can ease a lover's pain?
Absence, the best expedient they could find,
Might save the fortune, if not cure the mind:
This means they long proposed, but little gained,
Yet, after much pursuit, at length obtained.

Hard you may think it was to give consent,
But struggling with his own desires he went,
With large expense, and with a pompous train,
Provided as to visit France or Spain,
Or for some distant voyage o'er the main.
But Love had clipped his wings, and cut him short;
Confined within the purlieu of the court,
Three miles he went, no farther could retreat;
His travels ended at his country-seat:
To Chassi's pleasing plains he took his way,
There pitched his tents, and there resolved to stay.

The spring was in the prime; the neighbouring grove
Supplied with birds, the choristers of love,
Music unbought, that ministered delight
To morning walks, and lulled his cares by night:
There he discharged his friends, but not the expense
Of frequent treats and proud magnificence.

He lived as kings retire, though more at large
From public business, yet with equal charge:
With house and heart still open to receive;
As well content as love would give him leave:
He would have lived more free; but many a guest,
Who could forsake the friend, pursued the feast.

It happened one morning, as his fancy led,
Before his usual hour he left his bed,
To walk within a lonely lawn, that stood
On every side surrounded by the wood:
Alone he walked, to please his pensive mind,
And sought the deepest solitude to find;
'Twas in a grove of spreading pines he strayed;
The winds within the quivering branches played,
And dancing trees a mournful music made.
The place itself was suiting to his care,
Uncouth and savage, as the cruel fair.
He wandered on, unknowing where he went,
Lost in the wood, and all on love intent:
The day already half his race had run,
And summoned him to due repast at noon,
But love could feel no hunger but his own.

Whilst listening to the murmuring leaves he stood,
More than a mile immersed within the wood,
At once the wind was laid; the whispering sound
Was dumb; a rising earthquake rocked the ground:
With deeper brown the grove was overspread;
A sudden horror seized his giddy head,
And his ears tingled, and his colour fled;
Nature was in alarm; some danger nigh
Seemed threatened, though unseen to mortal eye.
Unused to fear, he summoned all his soul,
And stood collected in himself—and whole;
Not long: for soon a whirlwind rose around,
And from afar he heard a screaming sound,
As of a dame distressed, who cried for aid,
And filled with loud laments the secret shade.

A thicket close beside the grove there stood,
With briers and brambles choked, and dwarfish wood;
From thence the noise, which now, approaching near,
With more distinguished notes invades his ear;
He raised his head, and saw a beauteous maid,
With hair dishevelled, issuing through the shade;
Stripped of her clothes, and even those parts revealed
Which modest nature keeps from sight concealed.
Her face, her hands, her naked limbs were torn,
With passing through the brakes and prickly thorn;
Two mastiffs gaunt and grim her flight pursued,
And oft their fastened fangs in blood imbrued:
Oft they came up, and pinched her tender side;
'Mercy, O mercy, Heaven!' she ran, and cried;
When Heaven was named, they loosed their hold again,

Then sprung she forth, they followed her amain.

Not far behind, a knight of swarthy face,
High on a coal-black steed pursued the chase;
With flashing flames his ardent eyes were filled,
And in his hands a naked sword he held:
He cheered the dogs to follow her who fled,
And vowed revenge on her devoted head.

As Theodore was born of noble kind,
The brutal action roused his manly mind;
Moved with unworthy usage of the maid,
He, though unarmed, resolved to give her aid.
A saplin pine he wrenched from out the ground,
The readiest weapon that his fury found.

Thus furnished for offence, he crossed the way
Betwixt the graceless villain and his prey.

The knight came thundering on, but, from afar,
Thus in imperious tone forbade the war :

'Cease, Theodore, to proffer vain relief,
Nor stop the vengeance of so just a grief ;
But give me leave to seize my destined prey,
And let eternal justice take the way :

I but revenge my fate, disdained, betrayed,
And suffering death for this ungrateful maid.'

He said, at once dismounting from the steed ;
For now the hell-hounds with superior speed
Had reached the dame, and, fastening on her side,
The ground with issuing streams of purple dyed ;
Stood Theodore surprised in deadly fright,
With chattering teeth, and bristling hair upright ;
Yet armed with inborn worth : 'Whate'er,' said he,
'Thou art, who know'st me better than I thee ;
Or prove thy rightful cause, or be defied ;'
The spectre, fiercely staring, thus replied :

'Know, Theodore, thy ancestry I claim,
And Guido Cavalcanti was my name.
One common sire our fathers did beget ;
My name and story some remember yet :
Thee, then a boy, within my arms I laid,
When for my sins I loved this haughty maid ;
Not less adored in life, nor served by me,
Than proud Honoria now is loved by thee.
What did I not her stubborn heart to gain ?
But all my vows were answered with disdain :
She scorned my sorrows, and despised my pain.
Long time I dragged my days in fruitless care ;
Then, loathing life, and plunged in deep despair,
To finish my unhappy life, I fell
On this sharp sword, and now am damned in hell.

'Short was her joy ; for soon the insulting maid
By Heaven's decree in the cold grave was laid.
And as in unrepenting sin she died, [pride ;
Doomed to the same bad place is punished for her
Because she deemed I well deserved to die,
And made a merit of her cruelty.
There, then, we met ; both tried, and both were cast,
And this irrevocable sentence passed :
That she, whom I so long pursued in vain,
Should suffer from my hands a lingering pain :
Renewed to life, that she might daily die,
I daily doomed to follow, she to fly ;
No more a lover, but a mortal foe,
I seek her life (for love is none below) :
As often as my dogs with better speed
Arrest her flight, is she to death decreed :
Then with this fatal sword, on which I died,
I pierce her opened back or tender side,
And tear that hardened heart from out her breast,
Which, with her entrails, makes my hungry hounds a
Nor lies she long, but, as her fates ordain, [feast.
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain,
Is saved to-day, to-morrow to be slain.'

This, versed in death, the infernal knight relates,
And then for proof fulfilled their common fates ;
Her heart and bowels through her back he drew
And fed the hounds that helped him to pursue ;
Stern looked the fiend, as frustrate of his will,
Not half sufficed, and greedy yet to kill.
And now the soul, expiring through the wound,
Had left the body breathless on the ground,

When thus the grisly spectre spoke again :
'Behold the fruit of ill-rewarded pain :
As many months as I sustained her hate,
So many years is she condemned by Fate
To daily death ; and every several place,
Conscious of her disdain and my disgrace,
Must witness her just punishment, and be
A scene of triumph and revenge to me !
As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell,
As Friday saw me die, so she my prey
Becomes even here, on this revolving day.'

Thus, while he spoke, the virgin from the ground
Upstarted fresh, already closed the wound,
And unconcerned for all she felt before,
Precipitates her flight along the shore :
The hell-hounds, as ungorged with flesh and blood,
Pursue their prey, and seek their wonted food :
The fiend remounts his courser, mends his pace,
And all the vision vanished from the place.

Long stood the noble youth oppressed with awe,
And stupid at the wondrous things he saw,
Surpassing common faith, transgressing Nature's law.
He would have been asleep, and wished to wake,
But dreams, he knew, no long impression make,
Though strong at first ; if vision, to what end,
But such as must his future state portend,
His love the damsel, and himself the fiend ?
But yet, reflecting that it could not be
From Heaven, which cannot impious acts decree,
Resolved within himself to shun the snare
Which hell for his destruction did prepare ;
And, as his better genius should direct,
From an ill cause to draw a good effect.

Inspired from Heaven, he homeward took his way,
Nor palled his new design with long delay :
But of his train a trusty servant sent
To call his friends together at his tent.
They came, and, usual salutations paid,
With words premeditated thus he said :
'What you have often counselled, to remove
My vain pursuit of unregarded love,
By thrift my sinking fortune to repair,
Though late, yet is at last become my care :
My heart shall be my own ; my vast expense
Reduced to bounds by timely providence ;
This only I require ; invite for me
Honoria, with her father's family,
Her friends and mine ; the cause I shall display
On Friday next, for that 's the appointed day.'

Well pleased were all his friends, the task was light ;
The father, mother, daughter, they invite ;
Hardly the dame was drawn to this repast ;
But yet resolved, because it was the last.
The day was come, the guests invited came,
And with the rest the inexorable dame :
A feast prepared with riotous expense,
Much cost, more care, and most magnificence.
The place ordained was in that haunted grove
Where the revenging ghost pursued his love :
The tables in a proud pavilion spread,
With flowers below, and tissue overhead :
The rest in rank, Honoria chief in place,
Was artfully contrived to set her face
To front the thicket, and behold the chase.

The feast was served, the time so well forecast,
That just when the dessert and fruits were placed,
The fiend's alarm began; the hollow sound
Sung in the leaves, the forest shook around,
Air blackened, rolled the thunder, groaned the ground.

Nor long before the loud laments arise
Of one distressed, and mastiffs' mingled cries;
And first the dame came rushing through the wood,
And next the famished hounds that sought their food,
And griped her flanks, and oft essayed their jaws in Last came the felon on his sable steed, [blood.
Armed with his naked sword, and urged his dogs to
She ran, and cried, her flight directly bent— [speed.
A guest unbidden—to the fatal tent,
The scene of death, and place ordained for punish-
Loud was the noise, aghast was every guest. [ment.
The women shrieked, the men forsook the feast;
The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bayed;
The hunter close pursued the visionary maid;
She rent the heaven with loud laments, imploring aid.

The gallants, to protect the lady's right,
Their fauchions brandished at the grisly sight;
High on his stirrups he provoked the fight.
Then on the crowd he cast a furious look,
And withered all their strength before he strook:
'Back, on your lives! let be,' said he, 'my prey,
And let my vengeance take the destined way:
Vain are your arms, and vainer your defence,
Against the eternal doom of Providence:
Mine is the ungrateful maid by Heaven designed:
Mercy she would not give, nor mercy shall she find.'
At this the former tale again he told
With thundering tone, and dreadful to behold:
Sunk were their hearts with horror of the crime,
Nor needed to be warned a second time,
But bore each other back: some knew the face,
And all had heard the much-lamented case
Of him who fell for love, and this the fatal place.

And now the infernal minister advanced,
Seized the due victim, and with fury lanced
Her back, and, piercing through her inmost heart,
Drew backward, as before, the offending part.
The reeking entrails next he tore away,
And to his meagre mastiffs made a prey.
The pale assistants on each other stared,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepared;
The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And died imperfect on the faltering tongue.
The fright was general; but the female band,
A helpless train, in more confusion stand:
With horror shuddering, on a heap they run,
Sick at the sight of hateful justice done;
For conscience rung the alarm, and made the case their
So, spread upon a lake with upward eye, [own.
A plump of fowl behold their foe on high;
They close their trembling troop; and all attend
On whom the sowsing eagle will descend.

But most the proud Honoria feared the event,
And thought to her alone the vision sent.
Her guilt presents to her distracted mind
Heaven's justice, Theodore's revengeful kind,
And the same fate to the same sin assigned;
Already sees herself the monster's prey,
And feels her heart and entrails torn away.
'Twas a mute scene of sorrow, mixed with fear;
Still on the table lay the unfinished cheer:

The knight and hungry mastiffs stood around;
The mangled dame lay breathless on the ground:
When on a sudden, re-inspired with breath,
Again she rose, again to suffer death;
Nor stayed the hell-hounds, nor the hunter stayed,
But followed, as before, the flying maid:
The avenger took from earth the avenging sword,
And mounting light as air, his sable steed he spurred:
The clouds dispelled, the sky resumed her light,
And Nature stood recovered of her fright.

But fear, the last of ills, remained behind,
And horror heavy sat on every mind.
Nor Theodore encouraged more his feast,
But sternly looked, as hatching in his breast
Some deep designs; which, when Honoria viewed,
The fresh impulse her former fright renewed;
She thought herself the trembling dame who fled,
And him the grisly ghost that spurred the infernal steed:

The more dismayed, for when the guests withdrew,
Their courteous host, saluting all the crew,
Regardless passed her o'er; nor graced with kind
That sting infix'd within her haughty mind [adieu;
The downfall of her empire she divined,
And her proud heart with secret sorrow pined.
Home as they went, the sad discourse renewed,
Of the relentless dame to death pursued,
And of the sight obscene so lately viewed.
None durst arraign the righteous doom she bore;
Even they who pitied most, yet blamed her more;
The parallel they needed not to name,
But in the dead they damned the living dame.

At every little noise she looked behind,
For still the knight was present to her mind:
And anxious oft she started on the way,
And thought the horseman-ghost came thundering for Returned, she took her bed with little rest, [his prey.
But in short slumbers dreamt the funeral feast:
Awaked, she turned her side, and slept again;
The same black vapours mounted in her brain,
And the same dreams returned with double pain.

Now forced to wake, because afraid to sleep,
Her blood all fevered, with a furious leap
She sprung from bed, distracted in her mind,
And feared at every step a twitching sprite behind.
Darkling and desperate, with a staggering pace,
Of death afraid, and conscious of disgrace;
Fear, pride, remorse, at once her heart assailed;
Pride put remorse to flight, but fear prevailed.
Friday, the fatal day, when next it came,
Her soul forethought the fiend would change his game,
And her pursue, or Theodore be slain,
And two ghosts join their packs to hunt her o'er the

This dreadful image so possessed her mind, [plain.
That, desperate any succour else to find,
She ceased all farther hope; and now began
To make reflection on the unhappy man,
Rich, brave, and young, who past expression loved;
Proof to disdain, and not to be removed:
Of all the men respected and admired;
Of all the dames, except herself, desired:
Why not of her? preferred above the rest
By him with knightly deeds, and open love professed?
So had another been, where he his vows addressed.
This quelled her pride, yet other doubts remained,
That once disdaining, she might be disdained.

The fear was just, but greater fear prevailed;
 Fear of her life by hellish hounds assailed:
 He took a lowering leave; but who can tell
 What outward hate might inward love conceal?
 Her sex's arts she knew; and why not then
 Might deep dissembling have a place in men?
 Here hope began to dawn; resolved to try,
 She fixed on this her utmost remedy:
 Death was behind, but hard it was to die.

'Twas time enough at last on death to call,
 The precipice in sight, a shrub was all
 That kindly stood betwixt to break the fatal fall.

One maid she had, beloved above the rest;
 Secure of her, the secret she confessed;
 And now the cheerful light her fears dispelled;
 She with no winding turns the truth concealed,
 But put the woman off, and stood revealed:
 With faults confessed, commissioned her to go,
 If pity yet had place, and reconcile her foe;
 The welcome message made, was soon received;
 'Twas what he wished, and hoped, but scarce believed;
 Fate seemed a fair occasion to present;
 He knew the sex, and feared she might repent,
 Should he delay the moment of consent.

There yet remained to gain her friends (a care
 The modesty of maidens well might spare);
 But she with such a zeal the cause embraced
 (As women, where they will, are all in haste),
 The father, mother, and the kin beside,
 Were overborne by fury of the tide;
 With full consent of all, she changed her state;
 Resistless in her love, as in her hate.

By her example warned, the rest beware;
 More easy, less imperious, were the fair;
 And that one hunting, which the devil designed
 For one fair female, lost him half the kind.

(From Boccaccio.)

Enjoy the Present Hour.

Enjoy the present smiling hour,
 And put it out of Fortune's power:
 The tide of business, like the running stream,
 Is sometimes high and sometimes low,
 A quiet ebb or a tempestuous flow,
 And always in extreme.
 Now with a noiseless gentle course
 It keeps within the middle bed;
 Anon it lifts aloft the head,
 And bears down all before it with impetuous force;
 And trunks of trees come rolling down;
 Sheep and their folds together drown:
 Both house and homestead into seas are borne;
 And rocks are from their old foundations torn;
 And woods, made thin with winds, their scattered honours mourn.

Happy the man, and happy he alone
 He who can call to-day his own:
 He who, secure within, can say,
 To-morrow, do thy worst, for I have lived to-day.
 Be fair or foul, or rain or shine,
 The joys I have possessed in spite of fate are mine.
 Not heaven itself upon the past has power;
 But what has been, has been, and I have had my hour!

Fortune, that with malicious joy
 Does man, her slave, oppress,

Proud of her office to destroy,
 Is seldom pleased to bless:
 Still various and inconstant still,
 But with an inclination to be ill,
 Promotes, degrades, delights in strife,
 And makes a lottery of life.
 I can enjoy her while she's kind;
 But when she dances in the wind,
 And shakes her wings, and will not stay,
 I puff the prostitute away:
 The little or the much she gave is quietly resigned:
 Content with poverty, my soul I arm;
 And virtue, though in rags, will keep me warm.

What is 't to me,
 Who never sail in her unfaithful sea,
 If storms arise, and clouds grow black;
 If the mast split, and threaten wreck?
 Then let the greedy merchant fear
 For his ill-gotten gain;
 And pray to gods that will not hear,
 While the debating winds and billows bear
 His wealth into the main.
 For me, secure from Fortune's blows,
 Secure of what I cannot lose,
 In my small pinnace I can sail,
 Contemning all the blustering roar;
 And running with a merry gale,
 With friendly stars my safety seek,
 Within some little winding creek,
 And see the storm ashore.

(From Horace, Odes, iii. 29.)

From Song in 'The Conquest of Granada.'

Beneath a myrtle's shade,
 Which love for none but happy lovers made,
 I slept, and straight my love before me brought
 Phyllis, the object of my waking thought.
 Undressed she came my flame to meet,
 While love strewed flowers beneath her feet,
 Flowers which, so pressed by her, became more sweet.

From the bright vision's head
 A careless veil of lawn was loosely shed,
 From her white temples fell her shaded hair,
 Like cloudy sunshine, not too brown nor fair.
 Her hands, her lips, did love inspire,
 Her every grace my heart did fire,
 But most her eyes, which languished with desire.

Song from 'Cleomenes.'

No, no, poor suffering heart, no change endeavour,
 Choose to sustain the smart, rather than leave her;
 My ravished eyes behold such charms about her,
 I can die with her, but not live without her;
 One tender sigh of hers to see me languish,
 Will more than pay the price of my past anguish:
 Beware, O cruel fair, how you smile on me,
 'Twas a kind look of yours, that has undone me.
 Love has in store for me one happy minute,
 And she will end my pain, who did begin it;
 Then no day void of bliss, of pleasure, leaving,
 Ages shall slide away without perceiving:
 Cupid shall guard the door, the more to please us,
 And keep out time and death, when they would seize us;
 Time and death shall depart, and say in flying
 Love has found out a way to live by dying.

II. From Dryden's Dramas.—Prefixed to the two specimen scenes given here from Dryden's dramas are a few shorter passages of exceptional poetic interest.

Freedom.

No man has more contempt than I of breath ;
But whence hast thou the right to give me death ?
Obeyed as sovereign by thy subjects be,
But know that I alone am king of me.
I am as free as Nature first made man,
Ere the base laws of servitude began,
When wild in woods the noble savage ran.

(From The Conquest of Granada, Part i.)

Timidity.

As some fair tulip, by a storm oppress,
Shrinks up, and folds its silken arms to rest ;
And bending to the blast, all pale and dead,
Hears from within the wind sing round its head :
So shrouded up your beauty disappears ;
Unveil, my love, and lay aside your fears :
The storm that caused your fright is past and done.

(From the same, Part i.)

Forgiveness.

A blush remains in a forgiven face,
It wears the silent tokens of disgrace.
Forgiveness to the injured does belong,
But they ne'er pardon who have done the wrong.

(From Part ii.)

Love.

Love is that madness which all lovers have ;
But yet 'tis sweet and pleasing so to rave.
'Tis an enchantment, where the reason's bound ;
But Paradise is in the enchanted ground.
A palace void of envy, cares, and strife ;
Where gentle hours delude so much of life.
To take those charms away, and set me free,
Is but to send me into misery.
And prudence, of whose care so much you boast,
Restores those pains which that sweet folly lost.

(From the same, Part ii.)

That friendship which from withered love doth shoot,
Like the faint herbage on a rock, wants root ;
Love is a tender amity, refined :
Grafted on friendship, it exalts the mind ;
But when the graft no longer does remain,
The dull stock lives, but never bears again.

(From Part ii.)

So Venus moves when to the Thunderer
In smiles or tears she would some suit prefer.
When with her cestus girt
And drawn by doves, she cuts the liquid skies,
To every eye a goddess is confest ;
By all the heavenly nations she is blest,
And each with secret joy admits her to his breast.

(From Part ii.)

Fair though you are

As summer mornings, and your eyes more bright
Than stars that twinkle on a winter's night ;
Though you have eloquence to warm and move
Cold age and fasting hermits into love ;
Though Almahide with scorn rewards my care,
Yet than to change 'tis nobler to despair.

My love's my soul, and that from fate is free,
'Tis that unchanged and deathless part of me.

(From Part ii.)

Love various minds does variously aspire :
He stirs in gentle natures gentle fire,
Like that of incense on the altars laid ;
But raging flames tempestuous souls invade—
A fire which every windy passion blows,
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows.

(From Tyrannic Love)

A change so swift what heart did ever feel !
It rushed upon me like a mighty stream,
And bore me in a moment far from shore.
I've loved away myself ; in one short hour
Already am I gone an age of passion.
Was it his youth, his valour, or success ?
These might perhaps be found in other men.
'Twas that respect, that awful homage paid me ;
That fearful love which trembled in his eyes,
And with a silent earthquake shook his soul.
But when he spoke, what tender words he said !
So softly that, like flakes of feathered snow,
They melted as they fell.

(From The Spanish Friar.)

Midnight.

All things are hushed, as Nature's self lay dead ;
The mountains seem to nod their drowsy head,
The little birds in dreams their songs repeat,
And sleeping flowers beneath the night-dew sweat ;
Even lust and envy sleep, yet love denies
Rest to my soul and slumber to my eyes.

It was these famous lines on midnight that Wordsworth pronounced to be 'vague, bombastic, and senseless.'

Tears.

What precious drops are those
Which silently each other's track pursue,
Bright as young diamonds in their infant dew !

(From The Conquest of Granada, Part ii.)

Mankind.

Men are but children of a larger growth ;
Our appetite's as apt to change as theirs,
And full as craving too, and full as vain ;
And yet the soul shut up in her dark room,
Viewing so clear abroad, at home sees nothing ;
But, like a mole in earth, busy and blind,
Works all her folly up, and casts it outward
To the world's open view.

(From All for Love.)

Man is but man ; unconstant still, and various ;
There's no to-morrow in him like to-day.
Perhaps the atoms rolling in his brain
Make him think honestly this present hour ;
The next, a swarm of base ungrateful thoughts
May mount aloft ; and where's our Egypt then ?
Who would trust chance ? since all men have the seeds
Of good and ill, which should work upward first.

(From Cleomenes.)

Life.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat ;
Yet, fooled with hope, men favour the deceit,
Trust on, and think to-morrow will repay.
To-morrow's falser than the former day ;

Lies worse ; and while it says we shall be blest
 With some new joys, cuts off what we possessed.
 * Strange cozenage ! None would live past years again,
 Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain ;
 And from the dregs of life think to receive
 What the first sprightly running could not give.
 I'm tired with waiting for this chymic gold,
 Which fools us young, and beggars us when old.
 —'Tis not for nothing that we life pursue ;
 It pays our hopes with something still that's new :
 Each day's a mistress unenjoyed before ;
 Like travellers, we're pleased with seeing more.
 Did you but know what joys your way attend,
 You would not hurry to your journey's end.

(From Aurengzebe.)

Fear of Death.

Berenice. Now death draws near, a strange perplexity
 Creeps coldly on me, like a fear to die :
 Courage uncertain dangers may abate,
 But who can bear the approach of certain fate ?

St Catherine. The wisest and the best some fear may show,

And wish to stay, though they resolve to go.

Ber. As some faint pilgrim, standing on the shore,
 First views the torrent he would venture o'er,
 And then his inn upon the farther ground,
 Loath to wade through, and loather to go round :
 Then dipping in his staff, does trial make
 How deep it is, and sighing pulls it back :
 Sometimes resolved to fetch his leap ; and then
 Runs to the bank, but there stops short again.
 So I at once

Both heavenly faith and human fear obey ;

And feel before me in an unknown way.

For this blest voyage I with joy prepare,

Yet am ashamed to be a stranger there.

(From Tyrannic Love.)

Scene from 'All for Love.'

[This was the only play Dryden wrote for himself, he said ; all the rest were given to the people ; the scene quoted he thought the best he had written in that kind. The play, avowedly in imitation of Shakespeare, is founded on the story of Antony and Cleopatra ; the dialogue quoted, like that from Don Sebastian, given below, is obviously founded on the quarrel of Brutus and Cassius in Julius Caesar. Ventidius was Antony's general.]

Antony. They tell me 'tis my birthday, and I'll keep it
 With double pomp of sadness.

'Tis what the day deserves which gave me breath.

Why was I raised the meteor of the world,

Hung in the skies, and blazing as I travelled,

Till all my fires were spent, and then cast downward

To be trod out by Cæsar ?

Ventidius. [Aside.] On my soul

'Tis mournful, wondrous mournful !

Ant. Count thy gains,

Now, Antony : wouldst thou be born for this ?

Glutton of fortune, thy devouring youth

Has starved thy wanting age.

Vent. [Aside.] How sorrow shakes him !

So now the tempest tears him by the roots,

And on the ground extends the noble ruin.

[Antony throws himself down.]

Ant. Lie there, thou shadow of an emperor ;

The place thou pressest on thy mother-earth

Is all thy empire now ; now it contains thee ;

Some few days hence, and then 'twill be too large,
 When thou'rt contracted in thy narrow urn,
 Shrunk to a few cold ashes ; then Octavia
 (For Cleopatra will not live to see it),
 Octavia then will have thee all her own,
 And bear thee in her widowed hand to Cæsar.
 Cæsar will weep, the crocodile will weep,
 To see his rival of the universe
 Lie still and peaceful there. I'll think no more on't.
 Give me some music ; look that it be sad ;
 I'll soothe my melancholy till I swell,
 And burst myself with sighing.
 'Tis somewhat to my humour. Stay, I fancy
 I'm now turned wild, a commoner of nature ;
 Of all forsaken, and forsaking all ;
 Live in a shady forest's silvan scene ;
 Stretched at my length beneath some blasted oak,
 I lean my head upon the mossy bark,
 And look just of a piece, as I grew from it ;
 My uncombed locks, matted like mistletoe,
 Hang o'er my hoary face ; a murmuring brook
 Runs at my foot——

Vent. Methinks I fancy

Myself there too.

Ant. The herd come jumping by me,

And fearless quench their thirst, while I look on,

And take me for their fellow-citizen.

More of this image ; more ; it lulls my thoughts.

Vent. I must disturb him. I can hold no longer.

[Stands before him.]

Ant. [Starting up.] Art thou Ventidius ?

Vent. Are you Antony ?

I'm liker what I was, than you to him

I left you last.

Ant. I'm angry.

Vent. So am I.

Ant. I would be private. Leave me.

Vent. Sir, I love you,

And therefore will not leave you.

Ant. Will not leave me !

Where have you learned that answer ? Who am I !

Vent. My emperor ; the man I love next heaven.

If I said more, I think 'twere scarce a sin :

You are all that's good and godlike.

Ant. All that's wretched.

You will not leave me, then ?

Vent. 'Twas too presuming

To say I would not : but I dare not leave you ;

And 'tis unkind in you to chide me hence

So soon, when I so far have come to see you.

Ant. Now thou hast seen me, art thou satisfied ?

For, if a friend, thou hast beheld enough,

And, if a foe, too much.

Vent. Look, emperor ; this is no common dew ;

I have not wept this forty years ; but now

My mother comes afresh into my eyes ;

I cannot help her softness.

Ant. By heaven, he weeps ; poor good old man, he weeps !

The big round drops course one another down

The furrows of his cheeks. Stop 'em, Ventidius,

Or I shall blush to death ; they set my shame,

That caused 'em, full before me.

Vent. I'll do my best.

Ant. Sure there's contagion in the tears of friends ;

See, I have caught it too. Believe me, 'tis not

For my own griefs, but thine—— Nay, father.

Vent. Emperor!

Ant. Emperor! Why, that's the style of victory.
The conquering soldier, red with unfelt wounds,
Salutes his general so: but never more
Shall that sound reach my ears.

Vent. I warrant you.

Ant. Actium, Actium! Oh—

Vent. It sits too near you.

Ant. Here, here it lies; a lump of lead by day;
And in my short, distracted nightly slumbers,
The hag that rides my dreams—

Vent. Out with it; give it vent.

Ant. Urge not my shame—
I lost a battle.

Vent. So has Julius done. [think'st;

Ant. Thou favour'st me, and speak'st not half thou
For Julius fought it out, and lost it fairly;
But Antony—

Vent. Nay, stop not.

Ant. Antony—
Well, thou wilt have it—like a coward, fled,
Fled while his soldiers fought; fled first, Ventidius.
Thou long'st to curse me, and I give thee leave.
I know thou cam'st prepared to rail.

Vent. I did.

Ant. I'll help thee—I have been a man, Ventidius.

Vent. Yes, and a brave one; but—

Ant. I know thy meaning.
But I have lost my reason, have disgraced
The name of soldier with inglorious ease;
In the full vintage of my flowing honours
Sat still, and saw it pressed by other hands.
Fortune came smiling to my youth, and wooed it.
And purple greatness met my ripened years.
When first I came to empire, I was borne
On tides of people, crowding to my triumphs.
The wish of nations, and the willing world,
Received me as its pledge of future peace.
I was so great, so happy, so beloved,
Fate could not ruin me; till I took pains,
And worked against my fortune, chid her from me,
And turned her loose: yet still she came again.
My careless days and my luxurious nights
At length have wearied her, and now she's gone:
Gone, gone, divorced for ever. Help me, soldier,
To curse this madman, this industrious fool,
Who laboured to be wretched. Prythee, curse me.

Vent. No.

Ant. Why?

Vent. You are too sensible already
Of what you have done; too conscious of your failings.
And like a scorpion, whipt by others first
To fury, sting yourself in mad revenge.
I would bring balm, and pour it in your wounds,
Cure your distempered mind, and heal your fortunes.

Ant. I know thou wouldst.

Vent. I will.

Ant. Ha, ha, ha, ha!

Vent. You laugh.

Ant. I do, to see officious love
Give cordials to the dead.

Vent. You would be lost, then?

Ant. I am.

Vent. I say you are not. Try your fortune.

Ant. I have to the utmost. Dost thou think me desperate

Without just cause? No; when I found all lost
Beyond repair, I hid me from the world,
And learned to scorn it here; which now I do
So heartily, I think it is not worth
The cost of keeping.

Vent. Cæsar thinks not so:
He'll thank you for the gift he could not take.
You would be killed like Tully, would you? Do
Hold out your throat to Cæsar, and die tamely.

Ant. No, I can kill myself, and so resolve.

Vent. I can die with you, too, when time shall serve;
But fortune calls upon us now to live,
To fight, to conquer.

Ant. Sure thou dream'st, Ventidius!

Vent. No; 'tis you dream; you sleep away your hours

In desperate sloth, miscalled philosophy.
Up, up, for honour's sake; twelve legions wait you,
And long to call you chief. By painful journeys
I led 'em patient both of heat and hunger,
Down from the Parthian marches to the Nile.
'Twill do you good to see their sunburnt faces,
Their scarred cheeks, and chopt hands; there's virtue in 'em:
They'll sell those mangled limbs at dearer rates
Than yon trim bands can buy.

Ant. Where left you them?

Vent. I said in Lower Syria.

Ant. Bring 'em hither;
There may be life in these.

Vent. They will not come.

Ant. Why didst thou mock my hopes with promised aids,
To double my despair? They're mutinous.

Vent. Most firm and loyal.

Ant. Yet they will not march
To succour me. Oh, trifler!

Vent. They petition
You would make haste to head 'em.

Ant. I'm besieged.

Vent. There's but one way shut up. How came I hither?

Ant. I will not stir.

Vent. They would perhaps desire
A better reason.

Ant. I have never used
My soldiers to demand a reason of My actions. Why did they refuse to march?

Vent. They said they would not fight for Cleopatra.

Ant. What was 't they said?

Vent. They said they would not fight for Cleopatra.
Why should they fight, indeed, to make her conquer,
And make you more a slave? To gain you kingdoms
Which, for a kiss, at your next midnight feast
You'll sell to her? Then she new-names her jewels,
And calls this diamond such or such a tax;
Each pendant in her ear shall be a province.

Ant. Ventidius, I allow your tongue free licence
On all my other faults; but, on your life,
No word of Cleopatra; she deserves
More worlds than I can lose.

Vent. Behold, you powers,
To whom you have intrusted humankind;
See Europe, Afric, Asia put in balance,
And all weighed down by one light worthless woman!
I think the gods are Antonies, and give,
Like prodigals, this nether world away
To none but wasteful hands.

Ant. You grow presumptuous.

Vent. I take the privilege of plain love to speak.

Ant. Plain love! plain arrogance! plain insolence!
Thy men are cowards, thou an envious traitor;
Who, under seeming honesty, hast vented
The burden of thy rank o'erflowing gall.
Oh, that thou wert my equal; great in arms
As the first Cæsar was, that I might kill thee
Without stain to my honour!

Vent. You may kill me.
You have done more already, called me traitor.

Ant. Art thou not one?

Vent. For shewing you yourself,
Which none else durst have done. But had I been
That name which I disdain to speak again,
I needed not have sought your abject fortunes,
Come to partake your fate, to die with you.
What hindered me to have led my conquering eagles
To fill Octavius' bands? I could have been
A traitor then, a glorious happy traitor,
And not have been so called.

Ant. Forgive me, soldier;
I've been too passionate.

Vent. You thought me false;
Thought my old age betrayed you. Kill me, sir;
Pray kill me; yet you need not; your unkindness
Has left your sword no work.

Ant. I did not think so;
I said it in my rage; prythee, forgive me.
Why didst thou tempt my anger, by discovery
Of what I would not hear?

Vent. No prince but you
Could merit that sincerity I used;
Nor durst another man have ventured it;
But you, ere love misled your wandering eyes,
Were sure the chief and best of human race,
Framed in the very pride and boast of nature,
So perfect that the gods who formed you wondered
At their own skill and cried, A lucky hit
Has mended our design. Their envy hindered,
Else you had been immortal and a pattern,
When Heaven would work for ostentation sake,
To copy out again.

Ant. But Cleopatra—
Go on; for I can bear it now.

Vent. No more.

Ant. Thou dar'st not trust my passion; but thou mayst;
Thou only lov'st, the rest have flattered me.

Vent. Heaven's blessing on your heart for that kind word.
May I believe you love me? Speak again.

Ant. Indeed I do. Speak this, and this.

[Hugging him.]

Thy praises were unjust; but I'll deserve 'em,
And yet mend all. Do with me what thou wilt;
Lead me to victory; thou know'st the way.

Vent. And will you leave this—

Ant. Prythee, do not curse her,
And I will leave her; though, Heaven knows, I love
Beyond life, conquest, empire, all but honour;
But I will leave her.

Vent. That's my royal master.
And shall we fight?

Ant. I warrant thee, old soldier;
Thou shalt behold me once again in iron,
And, at the head of our old troops, that beat
The Parthians, cry aloud, Come, follow me.

Vent. Oh, now I hear my emperor! In that word

Octavius fell. Gods, let me see that day,
And, if I have ten years behind, take all;
I'll thank you for the exchange.

Ant. Oh, Cleopatra!

Vent. Again?

Ant. I've done. In that last sigh she went;
Cæsar shall know what 'tis to force a lover
From all he holds most dear.

Vent. Methinks you breathe
Another soul; your looks are more divine;
You speak a hero, and you move a god.

Ant. Oh, thou hast fired me; my soul's up in arms,
And mans each part about me. Once again
That noble eagerness of fight has seized me;
That eagerness with which I darted upward
To Cassius' camp. In vain the steepy hill
Opposed my way; in vain a war of spears
Sung round my head, and planted all my shield;
I won the trenches, while my foremost men
Lagged on the plain below.

Vent. Ye gods, ye gods,
For such another honour!

Ant. Come on, my soldier!
Our hearts and arms are still the same. I long
Once more to meet our foes; that thou and I,
Like Time and Death, marching before our troops,
May taste fate to 'em, mow 'em out a passage,
And, entering where the foremost squadrons yield,
Begin the noble harvest of the field.

(From Act I.)

Scene from 'Don Sebastian.'

[Don Sebastian of Portugal, defeated and taken prisoner by the Moors, is saved from death by Dorax, a noble Portuguese, then a renegade in the court of the Emperor of Barbary, but formerly Don Alonzo of Alcazar. Attendants being dismissed, Dorax takes off his turban, and assumes his Portuguese dress and manner.]

Dorax. Now do you know me?

Sebastian. Thou shouldst be Alonzo.

Dor. So you should be Sebastian;
But when Sebastian ceased to be himself,
I ceased to be Alonzo.

Seb. As in a dream
I see thee here, and scarce believe mine eyes.

Dor. Is it so strange to find me where my wrongs
And your inhuman tyranny have sent me?
Think not you dream: or, if you did, my injuries
Shall call so loud, that lethargy should wake,
And death should give you back to answer me.
A thousand nights have brushed their balmy wings
Over these eyes; but ever when they closed,
Your tyrant image forced them ope again,
And dried the dew they brought.

The long-expected hour is come at length,
By manly vengeance to redeem my fame:
And that once cleared, eternal sleep is welcome.

Seb. I have not yet forgot I am a king,
Whose royal office is redress of wrongs:
If I have wronged thee, charge me face to face;
I have not yet forgot I am a soldier.

Dor. 'Tis the first justice thou hast ever done me;
Then though I loathe this woman's war of tongues,
Yet shall my cause of vengeance first be clear;
And, Honour, be thou judge.

Seb. Honour befriend us both.
Beware, I warn thee yet, to tell thy griefs
In terms becoming majesty to hear:

I warn thee thus, because I know thy temper
Is insolent and haughty to superiors :
How often hast thou braved my peaceful court,
Filled it with noisy brawls and windy boasts ;
And with past service, nauseously repeated,
Reproached even me thy prince ?

Dor. And well I might, when you forgot reward,
The part of heaven in kings ; for punishment
Is hangman's work, and drudgery for devils.
I must and will reproach thee with my service,
Tyrant ! It irks me so to call my prince ;
But just resentment and hard usage coined
The unwilling word, and, grating as it is,
Take it, for 'tis thy due.

Seb. How, tyrant ?

Dor. Tyrant !

Seb. Traitor ! that name thou canst not echo back :
That robe of infamy, that circumcision,
Ill hid beneath that robe, proclaim thee traitor ;
And if a name
More foul than traitor be, 'tis renegade.

Dor. If I'm a traitor, think and blush, thou tyrant,
Whose injuries betrayed me into treason,
Effaced my loyalty, unhinged my faith,
And hurried me from hopes of heaven to hell ;
All these and all my yet unfinished crimes,
When I shall rise to plead before the saints,
I charge on thee, to make thy damning sure.

Seb. Thy old presumptuous arrogance again,
That bred my first dislike and then my loathing ;
Once more be warned, and know me for thy king.

Dor. Too well I know thee, but for king no more :
This is not Lisbon, nor the circle this,
Where like a statue thou hast stood besieged
By sycophants and fools, the growth of courts ;
Where thy gulled eyes, in all the gaudy round,
Met nothing but a lie in every face ;
And the gross flattery of a gaping crowd,
Envious who first should catch and first applaud
The stuff or royal nonsense : when I spoke,
My honest homely words were carped and censured
For want of courtly style : related actions,
Though modestly reported, passed for boasts :
Secure of merit, if I asked reward,
Thy hungry minions thought their rights invaded,
And the bread snatched from pimps and parasites.
Henriquez answered, with a ready lie
To save his king's, the boon was begged before.

Seb. What say'st thou of Henriquez ? Now, by Heaven,

Thou mov'st me more by barely naming him,
Than all thy foul, unmannered, scurril taunts.

Dor. And therefore 'twas to gall thee that I named him ;
That thing, that nothing but a cringe and smile ;
That woman, but more daubed ; or if a man,
Corrupted to a woman ; thy man-mistress.

Seb. All false as hell or thou.

Dor. Yes ; full as false
As that I served thee fifteen hard campaigns,
And pitched thy standard in these foreign fields :
By me thy greatness grew ; thy years grew with it,
But thy ingratitude outgrew them both.

Seb. I see to what thou tend'st ; but tell me first,
If those great acts were done alone for me :
If love produced not some, and pride the rest ?

Dor. Why, love does all that's noble here below :

But all the advantage of that love was thine :
For, coming fraughted back, in either hand
With palm and olive, victory and peace,
I was indeed prepared to ask my own
(For Violante's vows were mine before) ;
Thy malice had prevention, ere I spoke ;
And asked me Violante for Henriquez.

Seb. I meant thee a reward of greater worth.

Dor. Where justice wanted, could reward be hoped ?
Could the robbed passenger expect a bounty
From those rapacious hands who stripped him first ?

Seb. He had my promise ere I knew thy love.

Dor. My services deserved thou shouldst revoke it.

Seb. Thy insolence had cancelled all thy service ;
To violate my laws, even in my court,
Sacred to peace, and safe from all affronts ;
Even to my face, and done in my despite,
Under the wing of awful majesty
To strike the man I loved !

Dor. Even in the face of heaven, a place more sacred,
Would I have struck the man who, propt by power,
Would seize my right, and rob me of my love :
But, for a blow provoked by thy injustice,
The hasty product of a just despair,
When he refused to meet me in the field,
That thou shouldst make a coward's cause thy own !

Seb. He durst : nay more, desired and begged with tears,
To meet thy challenge fairly : 'twas thy fault
To make it public ; but my duty then
To interpose, on pain of my displeasure,
Betwixt your swords.

Dor. On pain of infamy
He should have disobeyed.

Seb. The indignity thou didst was meant to me :
Thy gloomy eyes were cast on me with scorn,
As who should say the blow was there intended ;
But that thou didst not dare to lift thy hands
Against anointed power : so was I forced
To do a sovereign justice to myself,
And spurn thee from my presence.

Dor. Thou hast dared
To tell me what I durst not tell myself :
I durst not think that I was spurned, and live ;
And live to hear it boasted to my face.
All my long avarice of honour lost,
Heaped up in youth, and hoarded up for age :
Has honour's fountain then sucked back the stream ?
He has ; and hooting boys may dry-shod pass,
And gather pebbles from the naked ford.
Give me my love, my honour ; give them back ;
Give me revenge, while I have breath to ask it.

Seb. Now, by this honoured order which I wear,
More gladly would I give than thou dar'st ask it.
Nor shall the sacred character of king
Be urged to shield me from thy bold appeal.
If I have injured thee, that makes us equal :
The wrong, if done, debased me down to thee :
But thou hast charged me with ingratitude ;
Hast thou not charged me ? Speak.

Dor. Thou know'st I have
If thou disown'st that imputation, draw,
And prove my charge a lie.

Seb. No ; to disprove that lie, I must not draw :
Be conscious to thy worth, and tell thy soul
What thou hast done this day in my defence ;
To fight thee after this, what were it else

Than owning that ingratitude thou urgest?
That isthmus stands between two rushing seas,
Which, mounting, view each other from afar,
And strive in vain to meet.

Dor. I'll cut that isthmus:
Thou know'st I meant not to preserve thy life,
But to reprieve it, for my own revenge.
I saved thee out of honourable malice:
Now draw; I should be loath to think thou dar'st not:
Beware of such another vile excuse.

Seb. Oh, patience, Heaven!
Dor. Beware of patience too;
That's a suspicious word: it had been proper,
Before thy foot had spurned me; now 'tis base:
Yet, to disarm thee of thy last defence,
I have thy oath for my security:
The only boon I begged was this fair combat:
Fight or be perjured now; that's all thy choice.

Seb. Now can I thank thee as thou wouldst be thanked: [Drawing.

Never was vow of honour better paid,
If my true sword but hold, than this shall be.
The sprightly bridegroom, on his wedding night,
More gladly enters not the lists of love.
Why, 'tis enjoyment to be summoned thus.
Go; bear my message to Henriquez' ghost;
And say his master and his friend revenged him.

Dor. His ghost! then is my hated rival dead?

Seb. The question is beside our present purpose;
Thou seest me ready; we delay too long.

Dor. A minute is not much in either's life,
When there's but one betwixt us; throw it in,
And give it him of us who is to fall. [take him.

Seb. He's dead: make haste, and thou mayst yet o'er-

Dor. When I was hasty, thou delay'dst me longer.
I prithee, let me hedge one moment more
Into thy promise: for thy life preserved,
Be kind; and tell me how that rival died,
Whose death, next thine, I wished.

Seb. If it would please thee, thou shouldst never know.
But thou, like jealousy, inquir'st a truth,
Which sound, will torture thee: he died in fight:
Fought next my person; as in concert fought:
Kept pace for pace, and blow for every blow;
Save when he heaved his shield in my defence,
And on his naked side received my wound:
Then, when he could no more, he fell at once,
But rolled his falling body cross their way,
And made a bulwark of it for his prince.

Dor. I never can forgive him such a death!

Seb. I prophesied thy proud soul could not bear it.
Now judge thyself who best deserved my love.
I knew you both; and, durst I say, as Heaven
Foreknew among the shining angel host
Who should stand firm, who fall.

Dor. Had he been tempted so, so had he fallen;
And so, had I been favoured, had I stood.

Seb. What had been is unknown; what is appears;
Confess he justly was preferred to thee.

Dor. Had I been born with his indulgent stars,
My fortune had been his, and his been mine.
Oh, worse than hell! what glory have I lost,
And what has he acquired by such a death!
I should have fallen by Sebastian's side;
My corpse had been the bulwark of my king.
His glorious end was a patched work of fate,

Ill-sorted with a soft effeminate life:
It suited better with my life than his
So to have died: mine had been of a piece,
Spent in your service, dying at your feet.

Seb. The more effeminate and soft his life,
The more his fame, to struggle to the field,
And meet his glorious fate: confess, proud spirit—
For I will have it from thy very mouth—
That better he deserved my love than thou.

Dor. Oh, whither would you drive me! I must grant,
Yes, I must grant, but with a swelling soul,
Henriquez had your love with more desert:
For you he fought and died; I fought against you;
Through all the mazes of the bloody field
Hunted your sacred life; which that I missed,
Was the propitious error of my fate,
Not of my soul; my soul's a regicide.

Seb. Thou mightst have given it a more gentle name;
Thou meant'st to kill a tyrant, not a king.
Speak; didst thou not, Alonzo?

Dor. Can I speak?

Alas! I cannot answer to Alonzo:
No, Dorax cannot answer to Alonzo:
Alonzo was too kind a name for me.
Then when I fought and conquered with your arms,
In that blest age I was the man you named;
Till rage and pride debased me into Dorax,
And lost, like Lucifer, my name above.

Seb. Yet twice this day I owed my life to Dorax.

Dor. I saved you but to kill you: there's my grief.

Seb. Nay, if thou canst be grieved, thou canst repent;
Thou couldst not be a villain though thou wouldst:
Thou own'st too much in owning thou hast erred;
And I too little, who provoked thy crime.

Dor. Oh, stop this headlong torrent of your goodness;
It comes too fast upon a feeble soul
Half-drowned in tears before; spare my confusion:
For pity spare, and say not first you erred.
For yet I have not dared, through guilt and shame,
To throw myself beneath your royal feet.

[Falls at his feet.

Now spurn this rebel, this proud renegade:
'Tis just you should, nor will I more complain.

Seb. Indeed thou shouldst not ask forgiveness first;
But thou prevent'st me still, in all that's noble.

[Taking him up.

Yes, I will raise thee up with better news:
Thy Violante's heart was ever thine;
Compelled to wed, because she was my ward,
Her soul was absent when she gave her hand:
Nor could my threats, or his pursuing courtship,
Effect the consummation of his love:
So, still indulging tears, she pines for thee,
A widow and a maid. [me?

Dor. Have I been cursing Heaven, while Heaven blest
I shall run mad with ecstasy of joy:

What, in one moment to be reconciled
To Heaven, and to my king, and to my love!
But pity is my friend, and stops me short,
For my unhappy rival. Poor Henriquez!

Seb. Art thou so generous, too, to pity him?
Nay, then, I was unjust to love him better.
Here let me ever hold thee in my arms; [Embracing him.
And all our quarrels be but such as these,
Who shall love best, and closest shall embrace:
Be what Henriquez was: be my Alonzo.

Dor. What! my Alonzo, said you? My Alonzo?
 Let my tears thank you; for I cannot speak;
 And if I could,
 Words were not made to vent such thoughts as mine.
Seb. Thou canst not speak, and I can ne'er be silent.
 Some strange reverse of fate must sure attend
 This vast profusion, this extravagance
 Of Heaven to bless me thus. 'Tis gold so pure,
 It cannot bear the stamp, without alloy.
 Be kind, ye powers, and take but half away:
 With ease the gifts of fortune I resign;
 But let my love and friend be ever mine.

(Last Scene of Act iv.)

III. Dryden's Prose.—Scott was as enthusiastic as Johnson in his praise of Dryden's Essays and Prefaces. 'The prose of Dryden,' says Sir Walter, 'may rank with the best in the English language. It is no less of his own formation than his versification; is equally spirited, and equally harmonious. Without the lengthened and pedantic sentences of Clarendon, it is dignified when dignity is becoming, and is lively without the accumulation of strained and absurd allusions and metaphors, which were unfortunately mistaken for wit by many of the author's contemporaries.' Malone recorded that Dryden's prose writings were held in high estimation by Burke, who carefully studied them on account equally of their style and matter, and is thought to have in some degree taken them as the model of his own diction. Dryden himself acknowledged that he had made Tillotson his model. In so saying he must have referred to the easy modern style of the composition; in all other respects the copy immensely surpasses the model. Besides his Prefaces and Essays, Dryden published several translations from the French, including Bouhours' Life of Francis Xavier (1687) and Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting (1695); also a Life of Plutarch, contributed to a translation, and a character of Polybius, produced in a like connection. Dryden's Essay of Dramatic Poesy, which, according to Johnson, 'was the first regular and valuable treatise on the art of writing,' opens with the following graphic exordium:

It was that memorable day in the first summer of the late war when our navy engaged the Dutch; a day wherein the two most mighty and best appointed fleets which any age had ever seen disputed the command of the greater half of the globe, the commerce of nations, and the riches of the universe: while these vast floating bodies on either side moved against each other in parallel lines, and our countrymen, under the happy command of his Royal Highness [the Duke of York, afterwards James II.], went breaking, little by little, into the line of the enemies; the noise of the cannon from both navies reached our ears about the city. So that all men being alarmed with it and in a dreadful suspense of the event which they knew was then deciding, every one went following the sound as his fancy led him; and leaving the town almost empty, some took towards the Park, some cross the river, others down it; all seeking the noise in the depth of silence. Amongst the rest it was the fortune of Eugenius, Crites, Lisideus, and Neander to be in company together. . . .

Taking then a barge, which a servant of Lisideus had provided for them, they made haste to shoot the bridge, and left behind them that great fall of waters which hindered them from hearing what they desired: after which having disengaged themselves from many vessels which rode at anchor in the Thames, and almost blocked up the passage towards Greenwich, they ordered the watermen to let fall their oars more gently; and then, every one favouring his own curiosity with a strict silence, it was not long ere they perceived the air to break about them like the noise of distant thunder, or of swallows in a chimney: those little undulations of sound, though almost vanishing before they reached them, yet still seeming to retain somewhat of their first horror which they had betwixt the fleets. After they had attentively listened till such time as the sound by little and little went from them, Eugenius, lifting up his head and taking notice of it, was the first who congratulated to the rest that happy omen of our nation's victory, adding that we had but this to desire in confirmation of it, that we might hear no more of that noise which was now leaving the English coast.

The Essay concludes thus:

Neander was pursuing this discourse so eagerly, that Eugenius had called to him twice or thrice ere he took notice that the barge stood still, and that they were at the foot of Somerset Stairs, where they had appointed it to land. The company were all sorry to separate so soon, though a great part of the evening was already spent; and stood a-while looking back on the water, which the moon-beams played upon, and made it appear like floating quick-silver: at last they went up through a crowd of French people, who were merrily dancing in the open air, and nothing concerned for the noise of guns which had alarmed the town that afternoon. Walking thence together to the Piazza, they parted there; Eugenius and Lisideus to some pleasant appointment they had made, and Crites and Neander to their several lodgings.

Neander was Dryden himself; Lisideus, Sir Charles Sedley (an anagram of Sidleus); Crites, Sir Robert Howard, Dryden's brother-in-law; Eugenius, the Earl of Dorset.

The following finely-drawn characters of the great Elizabethan dramatists are also from the Essay of Dramatic Poesy:

Shakespeare.

To begin then with Shakespeare. He was the man who, of all modern, and perhaps ancient poets, had the largest and most comprehensive soul. All the images of nature were still present to him, and he drew them not laboriously, but luckily. When he describes anything, you more than see it, you feel it too. Those who accuse him to have wanted learning, give him the greater commendation. He was naturally learned; he needed not the spectacles of books to read nature; he looked inwards, and found her there. I cannot say he is everywhere alike; were he so, I should do him injury to compare him with the greatest of mankind. He is many times flat, insipid; his comic wit degenerating into clenches [puns, word-plays], his serious swelling into bombast. But he is always great when some great occasion is presented to him; no man can say he ever had a fit subject for his wit and did not then raise himself as high above the rest of poets,

'Quantum lenta solent inter viburna cupressi.'

The consideration of this made Mr Hales of Eton say that there was no subject of which any poet ever writ, but he would produce it much better done in Shakespeare; and however others are now generally preferred before him, yet the age wherein he lived, which had contemporaries with him Fletcher and Jonson, never equalled them to him in their esteem. And in the last king's court, when Ben's reputation was at highest, Sir John Suckling, and with him the greater part of the courtiers, set our Shakespeare far above him.

Beaumont and Fletcher.

Beaumont and Fletcher, of whom I am next to speak, had, with the advantage of Shakespeare's wit, which was their precedent, great natural gifts, improved by study; Beaumont especially being so accurate a judge of plays that Ben Jonson, while he lived, submitted all his writings to his censure, and, 'tis thought, used his judgment in correcting if not contriving all his plots. What value he had for him appears by the verses he writ to him, and therefore I need speak no farther of it. The first play that brought Fletcher and him in esteem was their Philaster; for before that they had written two or three very unsuccessfully: as the like is reported of Ben Jonson before he writ Every Man in his Humour. Their plots were generally more regular than Shakespeare's, especially those which were made before Beaumont's death; and they understood and imitated the conversation of gentlemen much better; whose wild debaucheries and quickness of wit in repartees no poet before them could paint as they have done. Humour, which Ben Jonson derived from particular persons, they made it not their business to describe; they represented all the passions very lively, but above all, love. I am apt to believe the English language in them arrived to its highest perfection: what words have since been taken in are rather superfluous than ornamental. Their plays are now the most pleasant and frequent entertainments of the stage; two of theirs being acted through the year for one of Shakespeare's or Jonson's: the reason is because there is a certain gaiety in their comedies and pathos in their more serious plays, which suits generally with all men's humours. Shakespeare's language is likewise a little obsolete, and Ben Jonson's wit comes short of theirs.

Ben Jonson.

As for Jonson, to whose character I am now arrived, if we look upon him while he was himself (for his last plays were but his dotages) I think him the most learned and judicious writer which any theatre ever had. He was a most severe judge of himself, as well as others. One cannot say he wanted wit, but rather that he was frugal of it. In his works you find little to retrench or alter. Wit, and language, and humour also in some measure we had before him; but something of art was wanting to the drama till he came. He managed his strength to more advantage than any who preceded him. You seldom find him making love in any of his scenes, or endeavouring to move the passions; his genius was too sullen and saturnine to do it gracefully, especially when he knew he came after those who had performed both to such a height. Humour was his proper sphere; and in that he delighted most to represent mechanic people. He was deeply conversant in the ancients, both Greek and Latin, and he borrowed boldly from them; there is scarce a poet or historian among the Roman authors of those times whom he has not translated in Sejanus and Catiline. But he has done his robberies so openly, that one may see he fears not to be taxed by any law. He invades authors like a monarch; and what would be theft in other poets is only victory in him. With the spoils of these writers he so represents old Rome to us in its rites, ceremonies, and customs, that if one of their poets had written either of his tragedies, we had seen less of it than in him. If there was any fault in his language 'twas that he weaved it too closely and laboriously, in his comedies especially: perhaps too he did a little too much Romanise our tongue, leaving the words which he translated almost as much Latin as he found them; wherein though he learnedly followed their language, he did not enough comply with the idiom of ours. If I would compare him with Shakespeare, I must acknowledge him the more correct poet, but Shakespeare the greater wit. Shakespeare was the Homer, or father of our dramatic poets: Jonson was the Virgil, the pattern of elaborate writing; I admire him, but I love Shakespeare. To conclude of him: as he has given us the most correct plays, so in the precepts which he has laid down in his Discoveries, we have as many and profitable rules for perfecting the stage as any wherewith the French can furnish us.

Dramatic Dialogue after the Restoration.

I have always acknowledged the wit of our predecessors with all the veneration which becomes me; but I am sure their wit was not that of gentlemen; there was ever somewhat that was ill-bred and clownish in it, and which confessed the conversation of the authors.

And this leads me to the last and greatest advantage of our writing, which proceeds from conversation. In the age wherein those poets lived there was less of gallantry than in ours; neither did they keep the best company of theirs. Their fortune has been much like that of Epicurus in the retirement of his gardens; to live almost unknown, and to be celebrated after their decease. I cannot find that any of them had been conversant in courts except Ben Jonson; and his genius lay not so much that way as to make an improvement by it. Greatness was not then so easy of access, nor conversation so free, as it now is. I cannot, therefore, conceive it any insolence to affirm, that by the knowledge and pattern of their wit who writ before us, and by the advantage of our own conversation, the discourse and raillery of our comedies excel what has been written by them. And this will be denied by none but some few old fellows who value themselves on their acquaintance with the Black Friars; who, because they saw their plays, would pretend a right to judge ours. . . .

Now, if any ask me whence it is that our conversation is so much refined, I must freely and without flattery ascribe it to the court, and in it particularly to the king, whose example gives a law to it. His own misfortunes and the nation's afforded him an opportunity which is rarely allowed to sovereign princes, I mean of travelling and being conversant in the most polished courts of Europe; and thereby of cultivating a spirit which was formed by nature to receive the impressions of a gallant and generous education. At his return, he found a nation lost as much in barbarism as in rebellion: and as the excellency of his nature forgave the one, so the excellency of his manners reformed the other. The desire of imitating so great a pattern first awakened the dull and heavy spirits of the English from their natural reservedness, loosened them from their stiff forms of conversation, and made them easy and pliant to each other in discourse. Thus insensibly our way of living became more free; and the fire of the English wit, which was before stifled under a constrained melancholy way of breeding, began first to display its force by mixing the solidity of our nation with the air and gaiety of our neighbours. This being granted to be true, it would be a wonder if the poets, whose work is imitation, should be the only persons in the three kingdoms who should not receive advantage by it; or if they should not more easily imitate the wit and conversation of the present age than of the past.

(From the Defence of the Epilogue to the Second Part of The Conquest of Granada.)

On Translation.

Translation is a kind of drawing after the life; where every one will acknowledge there is a double sort of likeness, a good one and a bad. It is one thing to draw the outlines true, the features like, the proportions exact, the colouring itself perhaps tolerable; and another thing to make all these graceful, by the posture, the shadowings, and chiefly by the spirit which animates the whole. I cannot without some indignation look on an ill copy of an excellent original; much less can I behold with patience Virgil, Homer, and some others, whose beauties I have been endeavouring all my life to imitate, so abused, as I may say, to their faces by a botching interpreter. What English readers unacquainted with Greek or Latin will believe me or any other man when we commend these authors, and confess we derive all that is pardonable in us from their fountains, if they take those to be the same poets whom our Oglebies have translated? But I dare assure them that a good poet is no more like himself in a dull translation, than his carcass would be to his living body. There are many who understand Greek and Latin, and yet are ignorant of their mother-tongue. The proprieties and delicacies of the English are known to few; it is impossible even for a good wit to understand and practise them without the help of a liberal education, long reading, and digesting of those few good authors we have amongst us; the knowledge of men and manners, the freedom of habitudes and conversation with the best company of both sexes; and, in short, without wearing off the rust which he contracted while he was laying in a stock of learning. Thus difficult it is to understand the purity of English, and critically to discern not only good writers from bad, and a proper style from a corrupt, but also to distinguish that which is pure in a good author, from that which is vicious and corrupt in him. And for want of all these requisites, or the greatest part of them, most of our ingenious young men take up some cried-up English poet for their model; adore him, and imitate him, as they think, without knowing wherein he is defective, where he is boyish and trifling, wherein either his thoughts are improper to his subject, or his expressions unworily of his thoughts, or the turn of both is unharmonious.

Thus it appears necessary that a man should be a nice critic in his mother-tongue before he attempts to translate in a foreign language. Neither is it sufficient that he be able to judge of words and style, but he must be a master of them too: he must perfectly understand his author's tongue, and absolutely command his own; so that to be a thorough translator he must be a thorough poet. Neither is it enough to give his author's sense in good English, in poetical expressions, and in musical numbers; for though all these are exceeding difficult to perform, yet there remains a harder task; and it is a secret of which few translators have sufficiently thought. I have already hinted a word or two concerning it; that is the maintaining the character of an author which distinguishes him from all others, and makes him appear that individual poet whom you would interpret. For example, not only the thoughts but the style and versification of Virgil and Ovid are very different; yet I see even in our best poets who have translated some parts of them, that they have confounded their several talents; and by endeavouring only at the sweetness and harmony of numbers, have made them both so much alike that if I did not know the originals, I should never be able to judge by the copies which was Virgil and which was Ovid. It was objected against a late noble painter that he drew many graceful pictures, but few of them were like. And this happened to him because he always studied himself more than those who sat to him. In such translators I can easily distinguish the hand which performed the work, but I cannot distinguish their poet from another. Suppose two authors are equally sweet; yet there is as great distinction to be made in sweetness as in that of sugar and that of honey. I can make the difference more plain, by giving you (if it be worth knowing) my own method of proceeding, in my translations out of four several poets in this volume: Virgil, Theocritus, Lucretius, and Horace. In each of these, before I undertook them, I considered the genius and distinguishing character of my author. I looked on Virgil as a succinct and grave majestic writer; one who weighed not only every thought, but every word and syllable; who was still aiming to crowd his sense into as narrow a compass as possibly he could; for which reason he is so very figurative, that he requires, I may almost say, a grammar apart to construe him. His verse is everywhere sounding the very thing in your ears whose sense it bears; yet the numbers are perpetually varied, to increase the delight of the reader, so that the same sounds are never repeated twice together. On the contrary, Ovid and Claudian, though they write in styles differing from each other, yet have each of them but one sort of music in their verses. All the versification and little variety of Claudian is included within the compass of four or five lines, and then he begins again in the same tenor, perpetually closing his sense at the end of a verse, and that verse commonly which they call golden, or two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Ovid, with all his sweetness, has as little variety of numbers and sound as he; he is always, as it were, upon the hand-gallop, and his verse runs upon carpet ground. He avoids like the other all synalephas, or cutting off one vowel when it comes before another in the following word; so that, minding only smoothness, he wants both variety and majesty. But to return to Virgil: though he is smooth where smoothness is required, yet he is so far from affecting it, that he seems rather to disdain it; frequently makes use of synalephas, and concludes his sense in the middle of his verse. He is everywhere above conceits of epigrammatic wit and gross hyperboles; he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines but glares not; and is stately without ambition, which is the vice of Lucan. . . .

He who excels all other poets in his own language, were it possible to do him right, must appear above them in our tongue, which, as my Lord Roscommon justly observes, approaches nearest to the Roman in its majesty; nearest indeed, but with a vast interval betwixt them. There is an inimitable grace in Virgil's words, and in them principally consists that beauty which gives so inexpressible a pleasure to him who best understands their force. This diction of his, I must once again say, is never to be copied; and since it cannot, he will appear but lame in the best translation. The turns of his verse, his breakings, his propriety, his numbers and his gravity, I have as far imitated as the poverty of our language and the hastiness of my performance would allow. I may seem sometimes to have varied from his sense; but I think the greatest variations may be fairly deduced from him; and where I leave his commentators, it may be I understand him better; at least I writ without consulting them in many places.

(From the Preface to the Second Miscellany, 1685.)

Spenser and Milton.

[In epic poetry] the English have only to boast of Spenser and Milton, who neither of them wanted either genius or learning to have been perfect poets, and yet both of them are liable to many censures. For there is no uniformity in the design of Spenser; he aims at the accomplishment of no one action, he raises up a hero for every one of his adventures, and endows each of them with some particular moral virtue, which renders them all equal, without subordination or preference: every one is most valiant in his own legend: only we must do him that justice to observe that Magnanimity, which is the character of Prince Arthur, shines throughout the whole poem, and succours the rest when they are in distress. The original of every knight was then living in the court of Queen Elizabeth; and he attributed to each of them that virtue which he thought was most conspicuous in them: an ingenious piece of flattery, though it turned not much to his account. Had he lived to finish his poem, in the six remaining legends, it had certainly been more of a piece, but could not have been perfect, because the model was not true. But Prince Arthur, or his chief patron, Sir Philip Sidney, whom he intended to make happy by the marriage of his Gloriana, dying before him, deprived the poet both of means and spirit to accomplish his design. For the rest, his obsolete language and the ill choice of his stanza, are faults but of the second magnitude; for notwithstanding the first, he is still intelligible, at least after a little practice; and for the last, he is the more to be admired that, labouring under such a difficulty, his verses are so numerous, so various, and so harmonious, that only Virgil, whom he professedly imitated, has surpassed him among the Romans, and only Mr Waller among the English.

As for Mr Milton, whom we all admire with so much justice, his subject is not that of a heroic poem, properly so called. His design is the losing of our happiness; his event is not prosperous, like that of all other epic works; his heavenly machines are many, and his human persons are but two. But I will not take Mr Rymer's work out of his hands: he has promised the world a critique on that author, wherein, though he will not allow his poem for heroic, I hope he will grant us that his thoughts are elevated, his words sounding, and that no man has so happily copied the manner of Homer, or so copiously translated his Grecisms, and the Latin elegancies of Virgil. It is true he runs into a flat of thought sometimes for a hundred lines together, but it is when he has got into a track of Scripture. His antiquated words were his choice, not his necessity; for therein he imitated Spenser, as Spenser did Chaucer. And though perhaps the love of their masters may have transported both too far in the frequent use of them, yet in my opinion obsolete words may then be laudably revived, when either they are more sounding or more significant than those in practice; and when their obscurity is taken away by joining other words to them which clear the sense, according to the rule of Horace for the admission of new words. But in both cases a moderation is to be observed in the use of them; for unnecessary coinage, as well as unnecessary revival, runs into affectation: a fault to be avoided on either hand. Neither will I justify Milton for his blank-verse, though I may excuse him by the example of Hannibal Caro and other Italians who have used it; for whatever causes he alleges for the abolishing of rhyme (which I have not now the leisure to examine), his own particular reason is, plainly this, that rhyme was not his talent; he had neither the ease of doing it, nor the graces of it, which is manifest in his Juvenilia, or verses written in his youth, where his rhyme is always constrained and forced, and comes hardly from him, at an age when the soul is most pliant, and the passion of love makes almost every man a rhymers, though not a poet.

(From the Discourse on the Original and Progress of Satire, 1693.)

Dryden's plays appeared in two folio volumes in the year of his death, and were afterwards re-edited by his friend Congreve, in six duodecimos. The Fables, supplemented by most, though not all, of his earlier non-dramatic verse, make another folio volume of the same date. One or two somewhat imperfect editions of his poems appeared during the eighteenth century; and Malone gave an admirable collection of the prose in four volumes. But all editions were superseded by that of Sir Walter (then Mr) Scott in 1808. This was reprinted in 1821, and in 1883-93 re-edited (in 18 vols.) by the present writer. Scott's Life is the standard. The editions of Bell, Mitford, Christie, and Sargeant (1910) are useful. The Aldine edition (by Hooper, 1892) is in 5 vols. Churton Collins edited the Satires in 1893, and Prof. W. P. Ker selected Essays in 1900. See Dryden in the 'Men of Letters' series (1881; 1902; 1925) by the present writer, Johnson's Lives, Hazlitt's English Poets, Lowell's Among my Books, Garnett's Age of Dryden (1896), the Cambridge History of Literature (vol. viii. 1912), Verrall's Lectures on Dryden (1914), and books by Pendlebury (1923), Allardyce Nicoll (1923), T. S. Eliot (1924), and Van Doren (1931).

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

SCOTTISH LITERATURE.

From the Civil War On.

page 505 and elsewhere it has been sufficiently insisted on that alike in volume and in quality Scottish literary production had declined to a low ebb during the troublous seventeenth century, when Scotland was truly a most distressful country, rent by factions and antipathies, tyranny and persecution, intrigue and war. Most of what came from the printing-presses, and what chiefly absorbed the interest of the nation, was not literature in the stricter sense at all, but theology, mainly polemical, and controversial politics. Yet of the small number of the second series of Scottish seventeenth-century writers it may at least be said that they are wonderfully representative of the most opposite tempers and parties: the royalist Montrose who made so much of the Highlanders, the Cameronian colonel who jeered at them in verse and foiled them in the field; Rabelaisian Urquhart and ultra-Puritan Gillespie; the sainted Archbishop Leighton and the irreconcilable Presbyterian mystic Rutherford face to face with the Sempills, delineators of rude and vulgar merriment; the persecutor of the heroes of the Covenant and their panegyrist; and Fletcher, a whole party in himself. Some wrote in English almost as Englishmen understood it, some in the broadest west-country vernacular, some in parti-coloured transition between the two, while one at times wielded a language known to himself alone. Most were men of mark in their time, but none of them great men of letters. Meanwhile home-keeping Scotsmen were becoming more and more familiar with that larger literature—now no longer foreign—to which their own was contributory; English books of all kinds, religious as well as secular, were standard reading in Scotland, where Paradise Lost and the Pilgrim's Progress were not read as the work of aliens.

The Marquis of Montrose (JAMES GRAHAM; 1612-50), the brilliant royalist soldier, whose loyalty, after six meteoric victories, brought him disastrous defeat and death on the scaffold, was an apt scholar of St Andrews University, an accomplished man of the world, and the author of a few passionately loyal poems. Unhappily, by far the most memorable—containing two thrice-famous verses—was not definitely ascribed to him till 1711, when it was printed in Watson's Collection of Scots Poems, and cannot be proved his. At most it is an adaptation of an old English song.

Napier, Montrose's biographer, interprets what seems to be a spirited love-poem as a political allegory, in which King Charles I. is the lover and the kingdom the mistress.

I'll Never Love Thee More.

My dear and only love, I pray
That little world of thee
Be governed by no other sway
Than purest monarchy;
For if confusion have a part,
Which virtuous souls abhor,
And hold a synod in thine heart,
I'll never love thee more.

As Alexander I will reign,
And I will reign alone;
My thoughts did ever more disdain
A rival on my throne.
He either fears his fate too much,
Or his deserts are small,
That dares not put it to the touch
To gain or lose it all.

But I will reign and govern still,
And always give the law,
And have each subject at my will,
And all to stand in awe;
But 'gainst my batteries if I find
Thou kick, or vex me sore,
As that thou set me up a blind,
I'll never love thee more.

And in the empire of thine heart,
Where I should solely be,
If others do pretend a part,
Or dare to vie with me;
Or committees if thou erect,
And go on such a score,
I'll laugh and sing at thy neglect,
And never love thee more.

But if thou wilt prove faithful, then,
And constant of thy word,
I'll make thee glorious by my pen,
And famous by my sword;
I'll serve thee in such noble ways
Was never heard before;
I'll crown and deck thee all with bays,
And love thee more and more.

Lines written after Sentence of Death.

Let them bestow on every airt a limb, quarter of heaven
Then open all my veins, that I may swim
To Thee, my Maker, in that crimson lake;
Then place my par-boiled head upon a stake,
Scatter my ashes, strew them in the air:
Lord! since Thou know'st where all those atoms are,
I'm hopeful Thou'lt recover once my dust,
And confident Thou'lt raise me with the just!

See selections by R. S. Rait (1901), and Life by John Buchan (1913; new ed. 1928). 'I'll never love thee more' is an old Northern English tune of the reign of James I., and the oldest set of words—one of many sets to the same air—belongs to the early years of the seventeenth century:

'My dear and only love, take heed
How thou thyself expose;
And let not longing lovers feed
Upon such looks as those.
I'll marble thee around about,
And build without a door;
But if my love doth once break out,
I'll never love thee more.'

Simion Grahame, son of an Edinburgh burgess, was a competent scholar, a soldier and traveller of dissolute life, and ultimately an austere Franciscan brother. He must have been born about 1570; Dempster—a poor authority—fixes the end of his very varied career in 1614, probably too early. He spent the last years of his life in Italy. He dedicated to his patron, James VI., a collection of verses called The Passionate Sparke of a Relenting Mind in 1604, and in 1609 to the Earl of Montrose (father of the famous Marquis) his Anatomie of Humors—a dedication which may justify us in introducing him in this section along with his patron's son. The most notable thing about the Anatomie is that it has been conjectured to have given Burton more than a suggestion for his Anatomie of Melancholy. The work, interspersed with verse, gives striking pictures of typical characters—quacks, parasites, and many others—somewhat in the fashion of the 'characters' of Hall and Overbury. He wrote in what is approximately English of the period; but undisguised and unmistakable Scotticisms in words, spellings, and construction appear constantly. Love is, as usual, the humour most elaborately anatomised, and was especially fair game for a friar. This is a fragment on the lover:

Being alone in their retearing [retiring] walks they surfat the solitarie deserts with the sorrowful voice of a discontented minde, with weeping eies in splaine [spleen, a fit] of passion. O, saith he,

The furious force of love's consuming fire
No tyme can quench, nor thocht can not expell:
Such is the restles rage of my desire,
Which makes my wits within myselfe rebell:
Thus am I wrongd and ever saikles slaine, blameless
I shift my place but cannot shift my paine.

They ever esteeme their paines worse than the paines of hell; such are the sort of penitentiall lovers, who are alwaies anatomisd with humorous follie: and yet how often it coms to passe that they who taks most pains to please are most displeasd, for it is knowne be unfallable experience that the duetifull lover in a respected persute is often rejected with many ingrattfull disdains. . . . How perrillous it is to beleve a Lover, how tempting their words will be, and how they will straine them selves to speak with vehemencie. Lady Rethorick ever hants the mouth of a Lover, and with borrowed speeches of braver wits doeth enlarge their deceit, his perjured promises, his oathes, his voves, his protestations, his waiting-on, and all his iron sences drawn to feed upon the attractive humors of her Adamantall beautie. . . . Her smile is his heaven, and her frowne is his hell: she is the only idoll of his minde, for when he should serve God, he worships her; if he comes to Church, his looking on her behaviour takes away his hearing, robs him of devotion, and makes him a sencelesse blocke; with staring on her face he learns the arte of Physiognomie, his vain apprehensions will reade a woman's thought in her visage; and when he lookes on her hands, O then hee becomes a rare Palmister, for he will not spare to reade her fortunes by lynes, for heere (says hee) is the true score of death, and there goes the score of life. . . . Hee spendes the time in his Chamber with no other thing but with a great Looking-glasse, how to take off his hatt, how to make his gesture, and in a discourse how to frame the motion of his hands, to kisse his finger, to make courtesie with his legge, to set his arme, to smile, to looke aside, to walke; and then he stands gazing on the full proportion of his own bodie, which I sweare is not else but the very true image of superstitious vanitie.

There are two forms of a poem written from Italy, thus beginning, and addressed

To Scotland his Soyle,
To thee, my Soyle, where first
I did receive my breath,
These obsequies I sing
Before my Swan-like death.
My love by nature bound,
Which spotlesse love I spend,
From treasure of my hart
To Thee I recommend.

And he praised the United Kingdom in another, much longer and more elaborate, in which he takes opportunity to congratulate and compliment the king as the good genius of the now united realm:

With nine-voyc'd mouth my Delphin song I sound;
Of all the world blest bee thou, Brittaines Ile!
Thou, onely thou, within this mortall round,
On whom the heav'ns have lov'd so long to smile:
For Phoenix-like thou hast renew'd thy kinde,
In getting that which lay for thee inshrin'de.

Robert Sempill of Beltrees in the Renfrewshire parish of Lochwinnoch (1595?–1659), humorous poet, was the son of Sir James Sempill of Beltrees, himself son of Lord Sempill, and so distantly related to the older Robert Sempill, author of the Sempill Ballates (see page 232). Sir James was contemptuously called by Knox 'the dancer' from his various social accomplishments; was conspicuous at the court of James VI., whom he assisted in the preparation of the Basili-con Doron; and wrote controversial works on the Presbyterian side, as well as the satirical poem against the R. C. Church, The Packman's Paternoster. Sir James's son Robert continued this satire, wrote various pieces, but is remembered as author of the Life and Death of Habbie Simson, Piper of Kilbarchan, which gives a graphic and humorous account of old Scottish amusements. Both Ramsay and Burns were influenced by this poem, and copied the form of verse, which became characteristic of Scottish vernacular poems, especially those of facetious type.

From 'Habbie Simson.'

Kilbarchan now may say 'Alas !'
 For she hath lost her game and grace,
 Both Trixie and the Maiden Trace ; bridal march
 But what remead ? remedy
 For no man can supply his place—
 Hab Simson's dead !

Now who shall play 'The Day it daws,'
 Or 'Hunts up,' when the cock he craws ?
 Or who can for our kirk-town cause
 Stand us in stead ?
 On bagpipes now naeboddy blaws
 Sin' Habbie's dead. . . .

So kindly to his neighbours neist, next
 At Beltane and Saint Barchan's feast
 He blew, and then held up his breast,
 As he were weid ; wood, mad
 But now we need not him arrest,
 For Habbie's dead.

At fairs he played before the spearmen, halberdiers
 All gaily graithed in their gear, men, clad
 Steel bonnets, jacks, and swords so clear then,
 Like any bead.
 Now wha will play before such weir-men, warriors
 Sin' Habbie's dead ?

At clerk-plays, when he went to come, stage plays
 His pipe played trimly to the drum,
 Like bykes of bees he gart it bum, hives—hum
 And tuned his reed :
 Now all our pipers may sing dumb
 Sin' Habbie's dead.

And at horse races many a day
 Before the black, the brown, the grey,
 He gart his pipe, when he did play,
 Baith skirl and screed ;
 Now all such pastime's quite away
 Sin' Habbie's dead.

He counted was a waled wight-man, picked champion
 And fiercely at football he ran ;
 At every game the gree he wan first place
 For pith and speed ;
 The like of Habbie wasna then,
 But now he's dead.

Francis Sempill (1616?–82), Robert's son, was also a vernacular poet, who, like his father, forms a link in the almost broken chain of humorous popular Scottish poetry, a link between Peblis to the Play and Sir David Lyndsay and the vernacular revival under Allan Ramsay. Francis Sempill was also of the court party, inherited heavily burdened estates, and though he alienated some of his properties, welcomed the relief of the debtors' sanctuary at Holyrood—as recorded in his autobiographical 'Banishment of Poverty,' dedicated (with thanks rather for expected favours, apparently) to the Duke of York. He was ultimately Sheriff-Depute of Renfrewshire. He unquestionably wrote a good deal of verse ; but many of the things attributed to him are so credited on slender evidence. 'She rose and let me in' is, as we have seen, Tom Durfey's, though Sempill may have made the Scots version. The song 'Maggie Lauder,' found in most Scottish song-books, is very probably his. 'The Blythsome Bridal,' claimed also for Sir William Scott of Thirlestane, an accomplished writer of Latin verse, is more likely Sempill's. The first verse is :

Fy, let's a' to the bridal,
 For there will be liting there,
 For Jockie's to be married to Maggie,
 The lass wi' the gowden hair.
 And there will be lang kail and pottage,
 And bannocks of barley meal,
 And there will be good salt herring
 To relish a cog of good ale.

The nine stanzas of this song, rough, rude, and vulgar though they be in tone, rhymes, and words, are only more uncouth than some of Fergusson's, and are in the humour of Peblis to the Play and Christis Kirk of the Grene. The same is true of 'Hallow Fair,' generally credited to Sempill, and quite distinct in plan and rhyme from the much later poem of the same name by Fergusson. The earlier one thus begins :

There's mony braw Jockies and Jennies
 Comes weel buskit into the fair,
 Wi' ribbons on their cockernonies, topknots of hair
 And fouth o' braw flowers in their hair. wealth
 Maggie sae brawly was buskit
 When Jockie was tied to his bride,
 The pownie was ne'er better whiskit pony—whacked
 Wi' a cudgel that hung by his side.
 Sing fal de ral la de.

The following much less uncouth verses from 'The Banishment of Poverty' describe his first occupations in Edinburgh while still dogged by that unwelcome comrade, and show the Scots equivalent for 'dining with Duke Humphrey' :

We held the Lang-gate to Leith Wynd, now Princes Street
 Where poorest purses use to be ;
 And in the Calton lodgèd syne,
 Fit quarters for such company.

Yet I the High-town fain would see,
 But my comrade did me discharge ;
 He willed me Blackburn's ale to pree, taste
 And muff my beard that was right large. trim

The morn I ventured up the Wynd,
 And slunk in at the Netherbow,
 Thinking that troker for to tyne, familiar—lose
 Who does me damage what he dow. can

His company he doth bestow
 On me to my great grief and pain ;
 Ere I the thrang could wrestle through
 The loun was at my heels again. rascal

I greined to gang on the plain-stanes, longed—pavement
 To see if comrades wad me ken :
 We twa gaed pacing there our lanes,
 The hungry hour 'twixt twelve and ane.

Then I kenned no way how to sen ; send, make shift
 My guts rumbled like a hurl-barrow ; wheel-barrow
 I dined with saints and noblemen,
 Even sweet Giles and Earl of Murray.

Samuel Rutherford (1600?-61), a pectoral theologian (to use Neander's phrase) if ever there was one, was born at Nisbet, near Jedburgh, and passed M.A. at Edinburgh in 1621. In 1623 he was appointed Professor of Humanity; the scandal created by his falling into disgrace with the girl he afterwards married caused his resignation in 1626; but next year he received Episcopal ordination and was settled as minister of Anwoth. Here from the first he was a zealous student and devoted and beloved pastor; and here, within a year after his disgrace, he began that correspondence with his godly friends which has been called 'the most seraphic book in our literature.' He seems never to have fully conformed to the Perth articles, which were utterly obnoxious to all Presbyterians. Exercitationes pro divina Gratia (1636) was written against the Arminians, and brought him an invitation to a Divinity chair in Holland and a summons before the High Commission Court in July 1636, when he was forbidden to preach, and banished to Aberdeen; and there he wrote many of his most spiritual letters to his parishioners and friends in the south. There he was also free to debate with the Episcopalian-Arminian 'Aberdeen doctors.' The national uprising and the Covenant gave him the welcome opportunity of returning to his parish; but under the Covenant he was appointed Professor of Divinity at St Andrews in 1639, and in 1647 Principal of the New College; in 1643 he was sent to the Westminster Assembly. He wrote many works of controversial divinity and devotional theology, combining high Presbyterian divine right, Calvinistic orthodoxy, and fervid religion. His Due Right of Presbyteries (1644), Lex Rex (1644), Trial and Triumph of Faith (1645), Christ Dying and Drawing Sinners to Himself (1647), belong to this period. His Free Disputation against Pretended Liberty of Conscience was pronounced by Bishop Heber as 'perhaps the most elaborate defence of persecution which has ever appeared in a Protestant country;' Milton included him amongst the 'new forcers of conscience' named in his sonnet. After the Restoration his Lex Rex was burned by the hangman in Edinburgh in 1661, and its author deposed and summoned for high-treason; but he received the citation on his death-bed. Livingston said 'he had most sharp piercing wit and fruitful invention and solid judgment.' But it is by the infectious fervour of his Letters that he remained for nearly two centuries a power amongst his countrymen; the work was eminently popular in all ranks of Scotsmen, and cherished in Scotland the less conspicuous graces of Presbyterian faith and love. To many the succession of highly sensuous images under which Rutherford expresses the ecstatic mood of an exalted sense of communion with Christ and God is non-natural, extravagant, and repellent. The letters are largely a catena of scriptural fragments and phrases, a tangle of mixed metaphors, Hebraic and Scottish. Yet the command of apt words is as remarkable as the fertility in imagery. Though the letters are conceived in sound English, Rutherford makes frequent, skilful, and very effective use of peculiarly Scottish words and phrases, and does not always avoid homely and even grotesque figures. Thus he adjures an afflicted friend 'to be faithful to Him that can ride through hell and death on a windlestrae and His horse never stumble'—a windlestrae being a stalk of grass. He not merely conceives the relation of Christ to the Church according to the old allegorical interpretation of the Song of Solomon, but uses the same language of Christ and the individual believer. There is, accordingly, perpetual iteration of Christ's kisses, wooing, 'love-embracements,' of marriage with Him, even of being dandled on His knee, of the smell of His breath and of His garments; too great love of one's children is thus adultery, and the Catholic Church is 'Rome's brothel-house.' It is characteristic that in a long letter to the Countess of Kenmure, daughter of the Earl of Argyll and wife of the patron who presented him to Anwoth, Rutherford mentions as it were casually in the very last short paragraph: 'My wife now after long disease and torment for the space of a year and a month is departed this life. The Lord hath done it; blessed be His name.' The following are extracts from letters to the same Countess, of date 1628, 1630, and 1631:

Ye have lost a child: nay, she is not lost to you who is found to Christ. She is not sent away, but only sent before, like unto a star, which going out of our sight doth not die and evanish, but shineth in another hemisphere. Ye see her not, yet she doth shine in another country. If her glass was but a short hour, what she wanteth of time that she hath gotten of eternity; and ye have to rejoice that ye have now some plenishing up in heaven. Build your nest upon no tree here; for ye see God hath sold the forest to death; and every tree whereupon we would rest is ready to be cut down, to the end we may fly and mount up, and build upon the Rock, and dwell in the holes of the Rock. . . .

For this is the house of wine, where ye meet with your Well-Beloved. Here it is where He kisseth you with the kisses of His mouth, and where ye feel the smell of His garments; and they have indeed a most fragrant and glorious smell. Ye must, I say, wait upon Him, and be often communing with Him, whose lips are as lilies, dropping sweet-smelling myrrh, and by the moving thereof He will assuage your grief; for the Christ that saveth you is a speaking Christ; the Church knoweth Him by His voice, and can discern His tongue amongst a thousand. . . .

It is God's mercy to you, madam, that He giveth you your fill, even to loathing, of this bitter world, that ye may willingly leave it, and, like a full and satisfied banqueter, long for the drawing of the table. And at last, having trampled under your feet all the rotten pleasures that are under sun and moon, and having rejoiced as though ye rejoiced not, and having bought as though ye possessed not, ye may, like an old crazy ship, arrive at our Lord's harbour, and be made welcome, as one of those who have ever had one foot loose from the earth, longing for that place where your soul shall feast and banquet for ever and ever upon a glorious sight of the incomprehensible Trinity, and where ye shall see the fair face of the man Christ, even the beautiful face that was once for your cause more marred than any of the visages of the sons of men, and was all covered with spitting and blood. Be content to wade through the waters betwixt you and glory with Him, holding His hand fast, for He knoweth all the fords. Howbeit ye may be ducked, but ye cannot drown, being in His company; and ye may all the way to glory see the way bedewed with His blood who is the Forerunner. Be not afraid, therefore, when ye come even to the black and swelling river of death, to put in your foot and wade after Him. The current, how strong soever, cannot carry you down the water to hell: the Son of God, His death and resurrection, are stepping-stones and a stay to you; set down your feet by faith upon these stones, and go through as on dry land. If ye knew what He is preparing for you, ye would be too glad. He will not (it may be) give you a full draught till you come up to the well-head and drink, yea, drink abundantly, of the pure river of the water of life, that proceedeth out from the throne of God and of the Lamb. Madam, tire not, weary not; I dare find you the Son of God caution, when ye are got up thither, and have cast your eyes to view the golden city, and the fair and never-withering Tree of Life, that beareth twelve manner of fruits every month, ye shall then say, 'Four-and-twenty hours' abode in this place is worth threescore and ten years' sorrow upon earth.' If ye can but say that ye long earnestly to be carried up thither (as I hope you cannot for shame deny Him the honour of having wrought that desire in your soul), then hath your Lord given you an earnest. And, madam, do ye believe that our Lord will lose his earnest, and rue of the bargain, and change His mind, as if He were a man that can lie, or the son of man that can repent?

See Lives by Murray (1828) and Thomson (1884), Bonar's edition of the Letters, and Dr A. Whyte's Samuel Rutherford and his Correspondents (1894).

George Gillespie (1613-48), who was born and died at Kirkcaldy, studied at St Andrews, and in 1638 was ordained minister of Wemyss, was, like Rutherford, one of the heroes of the Covenant. He showed characteristic fearlessness at the Glasgow Assembly that same year; was in 1642 translated to Greyfriars Church in Edinburgh; in 1643 was sent up to the Westminster Assembly, where he took a great part in the debates on discipline and dogma, and was accounted a foeman worthy to meet Selden in debate. He represented the highest type of Covenanting theology and church government. Almost all his publications, including most of his sermons, are controversial, impartially confuting Erastians, Arminians, Independents, Episcopalians, Papists, and right and left hand defectors amongst his own brethren of the household of faith; though there is at times a lofty tone of sincerity and fervour that redeems even the barrenness of dead controversies. He had an important share in drafting the admirably clear and well-worded definitions and statements of the Westminster Confession of Faith and Shorter Catechism. His Aaron's Rod Blossoming (1646) is a masterly statement of the high Presbyterian claim for spiritual independence. In 1648 he was Moderator of the famous General Assembly. For his death, see the extract from Wodrow, page 830. The following is a fragment of his sermon in 1645 before the House of Lords in Westminster Abbey; which is diversified with scraps of Chaldee and Hebrew as well as Greek and Latin, and with quotations from authorities as well known as Cajetanus, Grotius, Socinus, Gualterus, and Bullinger, as difficult to identify as Aricularius and Ribera:

If it were not so, there should be no sure evidence of our closing in covenant with Christ; for then, and never till then, doth the soul give itself up to Christ to be his, and closeth with him in a covenant, when it renounceth all other lovers, that it may be his only. Shall a woman be married to a husband with the reservation of another lover, or upon condition that she shall ever stay in her father's house? So the soul cannot be married to Christ except it not only renounce its bosom sins, lusts, and idols, but be content also to part with the most lawful creature-comforts for his sake: 'Forget also thine own people, and thy father's house,' Psal. xlv. 10. The repudiating of creature-comforts and a covenant with Christ go hand in hand together, Isa. lv. 2, 3. Nahash would not make a covenant with the men of Jabesh-Gilead, unless they would pluck out their right eyes, intending (as Josephus gives the reason) to disable them from fighting or making war; for the buckler or shield did cover their left eye when they fought, so that they had been hard put to it, to fight without the right eye. This was a cruel mercy in him; but it is a merciful severity in Christ, that he will make no covenant with us, except the right eye of the old man of sin in us be put out.

From 'Aaron's Rod Blossoming.'

I have often and heartily wished that I might not be distracted by, nor engaged into, polemic writings, of which the world is too full already, and from which many more learned and idoneous have abstained; and I did accordingly resolve that in this controversial age I should be slow to write, swift to read and learn. Yet there are certain preponderating reasons which have made me willing to be drawn forth into the light upon this subject; for beside the desires and solicitations of divers Christian friends, lovers of truth and peace, seriously calling upon me for an answer to Mr Prynne's Vindication of his Four Questions concerning excommunication and suspension, the grand importance of the Erastian controversy and the strong influence which it hath into the present juncture of affairs doth powerfully invite me.

Among the many controversies which have disquieted and molested the Church of Christ, those concerning ecclesiastical government and discipline are not the least, but among the chief, and often managed with the greatest animosity and eagerness of spirit, whence there have grown most dangerous divisions and breaches, such as this day there are, and for the future are to be expected, unless there shall be (through God's mercy) some further composing and healing of these church-consuming distractions, which, if we shall be so happy as once to obtain, it will certainly contribute very much toward the accommodation of civil and state-shaking differences; and, contrariwise, if no healing for the church, no healing for the state. Let the Gallios of this time (who care for no intrinsical evil in the church) promise to themselves what they will, surely he that shall have cause to write with Nicolaus de Clemangis a book of lamentation, de corrupto ecclesie statu, will find also cause to write with him de lapsu et reparatione justitie.

As the thing is of high concernment to these so much disturbed and divided churches, so the elevation is yet higher by many degrees. This controversy reacheth up to the heavens, and the top of it is above the clouds. It doth highly concern Jesus Christ himself, in his glory, royal prerogative, and kingdom, which he hath and exerciseth as Mediator and Head of his church. The crown of Jesus Christ, or any part, privilege, or pendicle thereof, must needs be a noble and excellent subject. This truth, that Jesus Christ is a king, and hath a kingdom and government in his church distinct from the kingdoms of this world, and from the civil government, hath this commendation and character above all other truths, that Christ himself suffered to the death for it, and sealed it with his blood; for, it may be observed from the story of his passion, this was the only point of his accusation, which was confessed and avouched by himself, was most aggravated, prosecuted, and driven home by the Jews, was prevalent with Pilate as the cause of condemning him to die, and was mentioned also in the superscription upon his cross.

Nicolaus de Clemangis, a pupil and friend of Gerson, wrote books with the titles cited in 1414 and 1421 respectively. There are some fifteen publications set to Gillespie's account; but his Works (1843-46) were comprised in two volumes. The use of the word 'creature-comforts' in the first extract is much earlier than the earliest recorded in the great Oxford Dictionary.

Archbishop Leighton (1611-84) was the son of a Scottish physician settled in London, Alexander Leighton, who was barbarously treated by the Star Chamber of Charles I. A tract against Catholicism and Episcopacy (1624) brought the Scots doctor into trouble, and going abroad, he was ordained to the English Church in Utrecht, a post he soon resigned, returning to London in 1630. In Holland he had published (1628) an intemperate and virulent Appeal to the Parliament; or Sion's Plea against the Prelacie, for which he was now sentenced to be publicly whipped and set in the pillory; to have his nostrils slit, his ears cut off, and his cheeks branded with a hot iron; to pay a fine of £10,000, and to suffer perpetual imprisonment in the Fleet—an imprisonment from which, after eleven years' confinement, he was liberated by the Long Parliament. His son Robert, educated at the University of Edinburgh, resided for some time at Douay, where his intercourse with French friends and relations amongst the Catholic clergy not merely taught him perfect French, but broadened his theological views. He became also an accomplished Latinist, Hellenist, and Hebraist. In December 1641 he was ordained minister of Newbattle, near Edinburgh, and there he delivered the sermons composing his celebrated Commentary on the First Epistle of St Peter. In 1653 he resigned his parish of Newbattle to become Principal of the University of Edinburgh. Soon after the Restoration Leighton was induced by the king himself to become one of the new bishops; chose Dunblane, the poorest of all the dioceses; and for the next ten years he laboured to build up the shattered walls of the Church. His aim was to preserve what was best in Episcopacy and Presbytery as a basis for comprehensive union; but he succeeded only in being misunderstood by both sides—to both he seemed incomprehensibly latitudinarian on doctrines of vital interest. Neither Wodrow nor Row conceals his dislike of Leighton's policy and suspicion of his designs; and Leighton, too, spoke of the extreme Covenanters at times with considerable asperity. Weary at length of his uncomfortable position, he went to London in 1665 to resign his see, but Charles persuaded him to return. Again in 1669 he went to London to advocate his scheme of 'accommodation,' and immediately after accepted the archiepiscopal see of Glasgow, his predecessor being deprived for opposing the 'indulgence.' Next followed his fruitless conferences at Edinburgh (1670-71) with leading Presbyterians. In despair of success he begged for permission to retire, and at length in 1674 was allowed to lay down his archbishopric. His last ten years he spent at Broadhurst Manor, Sussex, the home of his sister, often preaching in the church of Horsted Keynes, where he lies. He died in a London inn, 25th June 1684. His often-expressed wish to die in an inn is recorded by Bishop Burnet (in whose arms he died) in his sketch of Leighton's character, quoted on page 32, Vol. II. Burnet said of him that he had 'the greatest elevation of soul, the largest compass of knowledge, the most mortified and most heavenly disposition that he ever saw in mortal.' The famous reply to zealous brethren asking whether he preached to the times, that surely they might 'permit a poor brother to preach Jesus Christ and eternity,' is quite in his spirit, but does not seem well authenticated. Coleridge held him, among all our theologians, as best deserving 'the title of a spiritual divine;' and based the Aids to Reflection on aphorisms culled from Leighton—surely a remarkable compliment to the modest divine. In one passage in the first chapter of the Commentary, Coleridge says we have 'religion, the spirit: the philosophy, the soul; and poetry, the body and drapery, united; Plato glorified by St Paul!' The pregnant passage is this:

As in religion, so in the course and practice of men's lives the stream of sin runs from one age into another, and every age makes it greater, adding somewhat to what it receives, as rivers grow in their course by the accession of brooks that fall into them; and every man when he is born, falls like a drop into the main current of corruption, and so is carried down with it, and this by reason of its strength and his own nature, which willingly dissolves unto it and runs along with it.

The sermon on Psalm cxii. 7, called 'The Believer a Hero,' was read 'very often, and always with pleasure,' by Carlyle's friend, Erskine of Linlathen, who earnestly commended it to his friends. The following are extracts:

The Fear of God a Resting in His Love.

All the passions are but several ebblings and flowings of the soul, and their motions are the signs of its temper; which way it is carried, that is mainly to be remarked by the beating of its pulse. If our desires and hopes and fears be in the things of this world and the interest of flesh, this is their distemper and disorder: the soul is in a continual fever. But if they move God-wards, then is it composed and calm in a good temper and healthful point, fearing and loving Him, desiring Him and nothing but Him, waiting for Him and trusting in Him. And when any one affection is right, and in a due aspect to God, all the rest are so too; for they are radically one, and He is the life of that soul that is united to Him; and so in Him it moves in a peculiar spiritual manner, as all do naturally in the dependence of their natural life on Him that is the Fountain of Life.

Thus we have here this fear of God, as often elsewhere, set out as the very substance of holiness and evidence of happiness. And, that we may know there is nothing either base or grievous in this fear, we have joined with it delight and trust; Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord, that delighteth greatly in His commandments, which is that badge of love to Him, to observe them, and that with delight, and with great, exceeding delight. So then, the fear is not that which love casts out, but that which love brings in. This fear follows and flows from love, a fear to offend, whereof nothing so tender as love, and that, in respect of the greatness of God, hath in it withal a humble reverence. . . .

The fear of God is not, you see, a perplexing doubt and distrust of His love; on the contrary, 'tis a fixed resting and trust on His love. Many that have some truth of grace are, through weakness, filled with disquieting fears; so possibly, though they perceive it not, it may be in some a point of wilfulness, a little latent undiscerned affectation of scrupling and doubting, placing much of religion in it. True, where the soul is really solicitous about its interest in God, that argues some grace; but being vexingly anxious about it, it argues that grace is low and weak. A sparkle there is even discovered by that smoke; but the great smoke still continuing and nothing seen but it, argues there is little fire, little faith, little love. And this as it is unpleasant to thyself, so to God, as smoke to the eyes. . . .

This is the blessed and safe estate of believers. Who can think they have a sad, heavy life? Oh! it is the only lightsome, sweet, cheerful condition in the world! The rest of men are poor, rolling, unstead things, every report shaking them as the leaves of trees are shaken with the wind, yea, lighter than so, as the chaff that the wind drives to and fro at its pleasure. Would men but reflect and look in upon their own hearts, 'tis a wonder what vain childish things the most would find there, glad and sorry at things as light as the toys of children, at which they laugh and cry in a breath; how easily puffed up with a thing or word that pleaseth us, bladder-like, swelled with a little air, and it shrinks again in discouragements and fear upon the touch of a needle point, which gives that air some vent. What is the life of the greatest part but a continual tossing betwixt vain hopes and fears, all their days spent in these? Oh! how vain a thing is a man even in his best estate, while he is nothing but himself, his heart not united and fixed on God, disquieted in vain! How small a thing will do it; he needs no other but his own heart, it may prove disquietment enough to itself; his thoughts are his tormentors.

I know some men are, by a stronger understanding and moral principles, somewhat raised above the vulgar, and speak big of a constancy of mind; but these are but flourishes, an acted bravery. Somewhat there may be that will hold out in some trials, but far short of this fixedness of faith. Troubles may so multiply as to drive them at length from their posture, and come on so thick with such violent blows, as will smite them out of their artificial guard, disorder all their Seneca and Epictetus, and all their own calm thoughts and high resolves. The approach of death, though they make a good mien and set the best face on it, or if not, yet some kind of terror, may seize on their spirits, which they are not able to shift off. But the soul trusting in God is prepared for all, not only for the calamities of war, pestilence, famine, poverty, or death, but in the saddest apprehensions of soul, above hope believes under hope; even in the darkest night casts anchor in God, reposes on Him, when he sees no light. Yea, though He slay me, says Job, yet will I trust in Him; not only though I die, but though He slay me, when I see His hand lifted up to destroy me, yet from that same hand will I look for salvation. . . .

Well, choose you; but, all reckoned and examined, I had rather be the poorest believer than the greatest king on earth. How small a commotion, small in its beginning, may prove the overturning of the greatest kingdom! But the believer is heir to a kingdom that cannot be shaken. The mightiest and most victorious prince, that hath not only lost nothing, but hath been gaining new conquests all his days, is stopt by a small distemper in the middle of his course. He returns to his dust, then his vast designs fall to nothing, in that very day his thoughts perish. But the believer in that very day is sent to the possession of his crown; that is his coronation day; all his thoughts are accomplished. . . .

'Tis the godly man alone who by this fixed consideration in God looks the grim visage of death in the face, with an unappalled mind. It damps all the joys, and defeats all the hopes of the most prosperous, proudest, and wisest worldlings. . . . Though riches, honours, and all the glories of this world are with a man, yet he fears, yea, he fears the more for these, because here they must end. But the good man looks death out of countenance, in the words of David: Though I walk through the valley and shadow of death, yet will I fear no evil, for Thou art with me.

None of Archbishop Leighton's writings were published during his lifetime. They consist of the Commentary on St Peter's Sermons, preached at Newbattle; Lectures and Addresses, delivered (mostly in Latin) before the University of Edinburgh; and Spiritual Exercises, Letters, &c. There are editions of his works by Fall (1692-1708), Doddridge (1748), Jerment (1805-8), Pearson (1825), Aikman (1831), and West (6 vols. 1869-75, unfinished). There are Selections (1883) by Blair; and the Aids to Reflection contain very many short passages most admired by Coleridge.

John Ogilby (1600-76) attained a sad eminence as a bad poet not so much from the extraordinary demerit of his verses as from the sneers of Dryden (who groups him with Flecknoe) and—later—of Pope in the Dunciad. He was born near Edinburgh, and, while his father lay in the Fleet Prison, reached perfection in the art of dancing-master, figured as a dancer in court-masques, but becoming lame, was employed by Strafford when Lord Deputy in Ireland to teach his children and serve him in his house as amanuensis. The Civil War ruined his prospects, but after 1641 he acquired Latin and Greek, and took to translating. At the Restoration fortune became kinder, and he was made Master of the Revels in Ireland for a year or two; but before the Great Fire of 1666, by which he suffered, was a printer and publisher—apparently prosperous—in London. He produced a series of handsome folios on China, Japan, Africa, America, Britannia (Part i.), &c., with maps and fine illustrations by Hollar. His principal poetic achievements were translations of Virgil in heroic verse, and of the Iliad and the Odyssey; also a rhyming paraphrase of Æsop, and some imitations of his own. Of these also magnificent folio editions were issued with engravings by Hollar and others. A play and three epic or narrative poems by him seem never to have been printed. Pope tells us he read Homer in this form with joy when a schoolboy. Ogilby's verses are utterly unpoetic, but they scan tolerably, and are perhaps hardly bad enough to justify the place that has been assigned him in the very lowest depths of the poetical inferno. As poor poetasters have been more leniently judged.

Thus Ogilby renders the Odyssey's picture (Book vi.) of the island king's daughter Nausicaa and her companions, on their washing expedition (a sort of 'Caledonian washing') to the river by the shore, just before the shipwrecked Ulysses presents himself to them:

When to the pleasant Fountain they drew near Where they might wash all seasons of the year,
Where cleansing streams like purest Crystal spout;
There they alight and sweating Mules take out,
And on the Margents of the purling Flood
Drove to sweet Grass; their Chariot next unload,
And foul Weeds throw into the Crystall Spring,
Which in full Troughs they trample in a ring,
Each the Buck plying with a tab'ring Foot.
All clear from Spots, discolouring Stains and Smut,
They spread them forth in order near the Shore,
Where they small Stones and Gravel 'spy most store.
Themselves then bath'd, perfum'd, and neatly deckt
To Dinner went, where sitting they expect,
Until the Sun whiten their Weeds and dry.
When feasted well, they lay their Chaplets by,
To play at Ball. Amidst her virgin-train
The Princess first warbled a pleasant Strain.

Sir Thomas Urquhart of Cromarty (1611–60), the translator of Rabelais, was a man of somewhat remarkable accomplishments and not a little curious learning, but eminently conceited and eccentric, if not on some points hopelessly crazed. He traces the genealogy of his family up to Adam, from whom he was the 153rd in descent, and by the mother's side he ascends to Eve. The first of the family who settled in Scotland was one Nomostor, married to Diosia (daughter of Alcibiades), who took his farewell of Greece and arrived at Cromarty, or Portus Salutis, in 389 B.C. The preposterous succession of fabulous personages, if not expressly and deliberately invented, seems to have come from the same sources as the fictitious lists of old Celtic Scottish kings. Sir Thomas, having studied at King's College, Aberdeen, and travelled in France, Spain, and Italy, continued strenuously to support the court and oppose the Covenant. He was knighted by Charles I. in 1641, and even after he succeeded to his father (also Sir Thomas), in the same year, was much plagued by creditors—for Sir Thomas the elder had recklessly and hopelessly embarrassed the family property, and, probably on that account, had been violently seized and imprisoned 'within an upper chamber [chamber] callit the Inner Dortour' by his undutiful sons. The second Sir Thomas accompanied Charles II. into England, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Worcester (1651). He is said to have died of an inordinate and unrestrainable fit of joyful laughter on hearing of the Restoration.

It is often said that the heaven-born translator must be a spiritual brother and compeer of his original, that it needs a profound humourist to render another profound humourist, and that Urquhart was the northern Rabelais. Had we nothing but the translation of Rabelais to judge by, we might have been unable to dispute this so far as Urquhart is concerned. But he left us other works, and in none of them is there a single gleam of real humour, but abundance of the very contrary. Fantastical they are, eccentric, quaint, sometimes clever, copious, apt in vocables, and pointedly satirical; but usually merely verbose, magniloquent, pretentious, and tedious, save where the author's vanity and perverse foolishness make us laugh at him rather than with him. In truth, he is precisely one of the types Rabelais most constantly makes fun of—Rabelais, Cervantes, and all the humourists—an inaccurate pedant, full of ill-digested learning, whose conceit, vanity, and vaingloriousness lay him open to incessant ridicule and satire, and rise to the level of sheer hallucination. No doubt Urquhart had some points in common with the creator of Gargantua and Pantagruel—hatred of the conventional, contempt for ascetic ideals, an affinity for mythical genealogies and exhaustive lists of nearly synonymous words, and a prodigious command of language, especially of out-of-the-way words, very familiar and very unfamiliar slang, archaisms, and neoterisms, not to speak of a free exercise of the privilege of coining. But the copiousness in Urquhart's case is not from spontaneous suggestion; it is rather the outcome of the laborious or quasi-scientific imagination, and a painful dependence on the synonyms of Cotgrave's Dictionary, which he discharges at the reader in sheaves and armfuls. He makes odd mistakes, wholly missing the meaning of his original, and trying very wild shots. He constantly takes extraordinary liberties with the text—abridges, alters, and greatly expands. Thus, in a famous list of animal-cries, where Rabelais had been content with nine, his translation gives us no less than seventy-one, and suggests that he knew the Complaynt of Scotlande (page 215). His style, though far from perfect, is comparatively free from Scotticism, though Scots words (such as laird and lairdship) and idioms do at times appear. His continuator, Motteux, follows him in this, making fiers comme Escossois 'as stout as any Scotch laird.' Motteux, whose translation is naturally more accurate, also arrogates to himself Urquhart's freedom in introducing locutions quite unknown to France of the sixteenth century; referring freely in the translation to Poor Pilgarlick, to Hans Carvel, and other characters equally unknown to the curé of Meudon.

Besides his unparalleled translation of (part of) Rabelais, the eccentric knight was author of a treatise on Trigonometry (1650); Epigrams, Divine and Moral (1646); Logopandectiesion, or an Introduction to the Universal Language (1653); Ekskubalauron, or the Discovery of a most exquisite Jewel, which is described on the title-page as 'more precious than Diamonds incased in Gold, the like whereof was never seen in any age; found in the Kennel of Worcester Streets the day after the Fight and six before the Autumnal Equinox, anno 1651.' This Jewel is a vindication of the honour of Scotland from the 'infamy' cast upon it by the rigid Presbyterian party, and from all false accusations of whatever sort, and is a panegyric on the Scots nation; it records the exploits of the Scot abroad—of learned doctors in foreign universities, and of gallant colonels who earned renown in France, Spain, Italy, Flanders, Holland, Dutchland, Denmark, Pole, Hungary, Swedland, and elsewhere, under 'Gustavus Cæsaromastix' and other equally glorious commanders. This affords him a chance of giving at great length the (highly embellished) adventures of the Admirable Crichton and others. He set himself to show that it is the 'kirkomanetick philarchaists' of the Covenant who by their malignancy and narrow-mindedness have brought on the nation the charge of covetousness. There are others, too, who are to blame! and of them he speaks with a vehemency evidently bred of personal affliction at their hands, in a breathless (but quite grammatical) paragraph of one huge denunciatory sentence:

Another thing there is that fixeth a grievous scandal upon that nation in matter of philargyrie or love of money, and it is this: there hath been in London and repairing to it for these many years together a knot of Scottish bankers, collybists, or coine-coursers, or traffickers in merchandize to and againe, and of men of other professions who by hook and crook, fas et nefas, slight and might, all being as fish their net could catch, having feathered their nests to some purpose, look so idolatrously upon their Dagon of wealth, and so closely, like the earth's dull center, hug all unto themselves, that for no respect of vertue, honor, kinred, patriotism, or whatever else, be it never so recommendable, will they depart from one single penny, whose emission doth not, without any hazard of loss, in a very short time superlucrate beyond all conscience an additional increase to the heap of that stock which they so much adore; which churlish and tenacious humor hath made many that were not acquainted with any else of that country to imagine all their compatriots affected with the same leprosie of a wretched peevishness, whereof these quomodocunquizing cluster-fists and rapacious varlets have given of late such cannibal-like proofs, by their inhumanity and obdurate carriage towards some whose shoestrings they are not worthy to unty, that were it not that a more able pen than mine will assuredly not faile to jerk them on all sides, in case by their better demeanor for the future they endeavour not to wipe off the blot wherewith their native country by their sordid avarice and miserable baseness hath been so foully stained, I would this very instant blaze them out in their names and surnames, notwithstanding the vizard of Presbyterian zeal wherewith they maske themselves, that like so many wolves, foxes, or Athenian Timons, they might in all times coming be debarred the benefit of any honest conversation.

The following paragraph, apologising for the plainness of his style in the Jewel, suddenly breaks away from comparative verbal reasonableness, and displays Urquhart in his most fantastic mood as phrase-maker. It illustrates the same perverse fecundity of words, pedantic and otiose rather than witty or amusing, put to happier use in the Rabelais:

I could truly, having before mine eyes some known treatises of the authors whose muse I honour and the straine of whose pen to imitate is my greatest ambition, have enlarged this discourse with a choicer variety of phrase, and made it overflow the field of the reader's understanding, with an inundation of greater eloquence; and that one way, tropologetically, by metonymical, ironical, metaphorical, and synecdochical instruments of elocution, in all their several kinds, artificially affected, according to the nature of the subject, with emphatical expressions in things of great concernment, with catachrestical in matters of meaner moment; attended on each side respectively with an epiplectick and exegetick modification; with hyperbolical, either epitatically or hypocoristically, as the purpose required to be elated or extenuated, with qualifying metaphors, and accompanied by apostrophes; and lastly, with allegories of all sorts, whether apologetical, affabulatory, parabolary, ænigmatick, or paræmial. And on the other part, schematologetically adorning the proposed theam with the most especial and chief flowers of the garden of rhetorick, and omitting no figure either of diction or sentence, that might contribute to the ear's enchantment, or perswasion of the hearer. I could have introduced, in case of obscurity, synonymal, exargastick, and palilogetick elucidations; for sweetness of phrase, antimetathetick commutations of epithets; for the vehement excitation of a matter, exclamation in the front, and epiphonemas in the reer. I could have used, for the promptyer stirring up of passion, apostrophal and prosopopœial diversions; and, for the appeasing and settling of them, some epanorthotick revocations, and aposiopetick restraines. I could have inserted dialogismes, displaying their interrogatory part with communicatively pysmatick and sustentative flourishes; or proleptically, with the refutative schemes of anticipation and subjection, and that part which concerns the responsory, with the figures of permission and concession. Speeches extending a matter beyond what it is, auxetically, digressively, transitively, by ratiocination, ætiology, circumlocution, and other wayes, I could have made use of; as likewise with words diminishing the worth of a thing, tapinotically, periphrastically, by rejection, translation, and other meanes, I could have served myself.

His verse is cumbrous and commonplace, the following being a fair specimen:

The way to vertue's hard, uneasie, bends
Aloft, being full of steep and rugged alleys;
For never one to a higher place ascends,
That always keeps the plaine, and pleasant valleyes:
And reason in each human breast ordaines
That precious things be purchased with paines.

Only the first two books of the History of Gargantua and Pantagruel were translated by Sir Thomas Urquhart in 1653. These were published in his lifetime; and Peter Anthony Motteux (1660-1718)—by birth a French Huguenot, but known as a dramatic writer in English—republished them in 1693, and added the third from Urquhart's papers. In 1708 he published a complete translation, the fourth and fifth books being his own. This joint production was again published in 1737 by John Ozell (d. 1743), with corrections and notes. The standard edition is that in the 'Tudor Translations' (3 vols. 1900), by Charles Whibley. The Maitland Club published Urquhart's original works (2 vols. 1834); there is an excellent monograph on Urquhart's life and works (1899) by the Rev. John Willcock.

Sir George Mackenzie (1636-91) was a native of Dundee, nephew of the Earl of Seaforth. He was educated at St Andrews and Aberdeen, and studied civil law at Bourges, in France. In 1660 he published Aretine; or the Serious Romance, a tedious Egyptian story in a stilted style. He seems to have been almost the only learned man of his time in Scotland who maintained an acquaintance with the lighter departments of contemporary English literature. He was a friend of Dryden, by whom he is mentioned with great respect; and he himself composed poetry, which, if it has no other merit, is at least in good English, and appears to have been fashioned after the best models of the time. He also wrote some moral essays, and deserves to be remembered as one of the first Scots authors to write English with purity. In 1665 he published at Edinburgh A Moral Essay, preferring Solitude to Public Employment, which drew forth an answer from John Evelyn. The writer who contended for solitude was busily employed in public life, being the principal law-officer of the crown, the King's Advocate for Scotland; while Evelyn, whose pursuits were principally those which ornament retirement—who longed to be 'delivered from the gilded impertinences of life'—stood forward as the champion of public and active employment. Other essays deal with the religion of the Stoic, moral gallantry, the moral history of frugality, reason, and the like. The literary efforts of 'the noble wit of Scotland,' as Dryden called him, were but holiday recreations—his business was law and politics. He was author of Institutions of the Law of Scotland, and Laws and Customs in Matters Criminal; Jus Regium, treatises against the Covenanters, and a vindication of the government of Charles II. in its severe treatment of them; also A Defence of the Antiquity of the Royal Line of Scotland, in which he gravely supports the story of the forty fabulous kings deduced from Gathelus, son-in-law of Pharaoh, and his spouse Scota (see page 256). His work on Heraldry was long a standard; but an important historical work, entitled Memoirs of the Affairs of Scotland, from the Restoration of Charles II., lay in manuscript till 1821. Mackenzie, who in 1661 defended the Marquis of Argyll, unhappily disgraced himself by subservience to the court, and by the inhumanity and cruelty with which, as Lord Advocate (after 1677), he conducted the prosecutions and persecutions of the Covenanters; and he lives in the memory of the Scottish people as 'Bluidy Mackenzie.' There is, it need hardly be said, no bloodthirstiness in his poems, essays, or even law-books; he appears as an accomplished gentleman, a kindly philosopher, and an orthodox and even earnest Christian; and all his moral arguments were in favour of sweet reasonableness, though somewhat strenuous against fanatics and fanaticism. He was a friend of the pious Robert Boyle, to whom he dedicated his Essay on Reason. Yet as a name of evil omen for cruelty, the accomplished advocate and public prosecutor ranks as the Scottish counterpart of Judge Jeffreys. He himself said none had screwed the king's prerogative higher than he; and he is mainly responsible for directing the savage persecution which Claverhouse had the ignoble task of seeing carried out. He it was who founded the Library of the Faculty of Advocates in Edinburgh—now the National Library of Scotland; and so all workers in literature in Scotland owe Sir George Mackenzie a deep debt of gratitude. At the Revolution he retired to England. In one of his few poems he thus chaunted the Praise of a Country Life.

O happy country life, pure like its air;
Free from the rage of pride, the pangs of care.
Here happy souls lie bathed in soft content,
And are at once secure and innocent.
No passion here but love: here is no wound
But that by which lovers their names confound
On barks of trees, whilst with a smiling face
They see those letters as themselves embrace.
Here the kind myrtles pleasant branches spread;
And sure no laurel casts so sweet a shade.
Yet all these country pleasures, without love,
Would but a dull and tedious prison prove.
But oh! what woods [and] parks [and] meadows lie
In the blest circle of a mistress' eye!
What courts, what camps, what triumphs may one find
Displayed in Cælia, when she will be kind!
What a dull thing this lower world had been,
If heavenly beauties were not sometimes seen!
For when fair Cælia leaves this charming place,
Her absence all its glories does deface.

Against Envy.

We may cure envy in ourselves either by considering how useless or how ill these things were for which we envy our neighbours; or else how we possess as much or as good things. If I envy his greatness, I consider that he wants my quiet: as also I consider that he possibly envies me as much as I do him; and that when I began to examine exactly his perfections, and to balance them with my own, I found myself as happy as he was. And though many envy others, yet very few would change their condition even with those whom they envy, all being considered. And I have oft admired why we have suffered ourselves to be so cheated by contradictory vices, as to condemn this day him whom we envied the last; or why we envy so many, since there are so few whom we think to deserve as much as we do. Another great help against envy is, that we ought to consider how much the thing envied costs him whom we envy, and if we would take it at the price. Thus, when I envy a man for being learned, I consider how much of his health and time that learning consumes: if for being great, how he should flatter and serve for it; and if I would not pay his price, no reason I ought to have what he has got. Sometimes, also, I consider that there is no reason for my envy: he whom I envy deserves more than he has, and I less than I possess. And by thinking much of these, I repress their envy, which grows still from the contempt of our neighbour and the overrating ourselves. As also I consider that the perfections envied by me may be advantageous to me; and thus I check myself for envying a great pleader, but am rather glad that there is such a man, who may defend my innocence: or to envy a great soldier, because his valour may defend my estate or country. And when any of my countrymen begin to raise envy in me, I alter the scene, and begin to be glad that Scotland can boast of so fine a man; and I remember, that though now I am angry at him when I compare him with myself, yet if I were discoursing of my nation abroad, I would be glad of that merit in him which now displeases me. Nothing is envied but what appears beautiful and charming; and it is strange that I should be troubled at the sight of what is pleasant. I endeavour also to make such my friends as deserve my envy; and no man is so base as to envy his friend. Thus, whilst others look on the angry side of merit, and thereby trouble themselves, I am pleased in admiring the beauties and charms which burns [sic] them as a fire, whilst they warm me as the sun.

(From Essays on Happiness.)

The True Path to Esteem.

I have remarked in my own time that some, by taking too much care to be esteemed and admired, have by that course missed their aim; whilst others of them who shunned it, did meet with it, as if it had fallen on them whilst it was flying from the others; which proceeded from the unfit means these able and reasonable men took to establish their reputation. It is very strange to hear men value themselves upon their honour, and their being men of their word in trifles, when yet that same honour cannot tie them to pay the debts they have contracted upon solemn promise of secure and speedy repayment; starving poor widows and orphans to feed their lusts; and adding thus robbery and oppression to the dishonourable breach of trust. And how can we think them men of honour, who, when a potent and foreign monarch is oppressing his weaker neighbours, hazard their very lives to assist him, though they would rail at any of their acquaintance, that, meeting a strong man fighting with a weaker, should assist the stronger in his oppression?

The surest and most pleasant path to universal esteem and true popularity is to be just; for all men esteem him most who secures most their private interest, and protects best their innocence. And all who have any notion of a Deity, believe that justice is one of His chief attributes; and that, therefore, whoever is just, is next in nature to Him, and the best picture of Him, and to be revered and loved. But yet how few trace this path! most men choosing rather to toil and vex themselves in seeking popular applause, by living high and in profuse prodigalities, which are entertained by injustice and oppression; as if rational men would pardon robbers because they feasted them upon a part of their own spoils; or did let them see fine and glorious shows, made for the honour of the giver upon the expence of the robbed spectators. But when a virtuous person appears great by his merit, and obeyed only by the charming force of his reason, all men think him descended from that heaven which he serves, and to him they gladly pay the noble tribute of deserved praises.

(From the Essay on Reason.)

Mackenzie's works were edited by Ruddiman. See his Life and Times by Andrew Lang (1909); also Thomson's edition of the Memoirs (1821); Omond, The Lord Advocates of Scotland (1883); and Taylor Innes, Studies in Scottish History (1892).

Andrew Fletcher, born in 1655, succeeded early to the family estate of Saltoun, was educated mainly by Bishop Burnet (then minister of Saltoun), and represented the shire of Lothian in the Scottish Parliament in the reign of Charles II. He opposed the arbitrary designs of the Duke of York, afterwards James II., and retired to Holland. Here he formed a close friendship with the English refugee patriots, and he returned to England with the Duke of Monmouth in 1685. Happening, in a personal quarrel, to kill another member of the expedition (one Dare), Fletcher again went abroad, travelled in Spain, and in Hungary fought with distinction against the Turks. He returned at the Revolution, and took an active part in Scottish affairs. His opinions were republican, and he was of a haughty, unbending temper; 'brave as the sword he wore,' according to a contemporary, 'and bold as a lion: a sure friend, and an irreconcilable enemy: would lose his life readily to serve his country, and would not do a base thing to save it.' Fletcher opposed the union of Scotland with England in 1707, believing, with many zealous but narrow-sighted patriots of that day, that it would eclipse the glory of ancient Caledonia. He strove for a federative, not an incorporating union, and sketched out an ingenious but doctrinaire scheme for partitioning the three kingdoms into provinces or states, each with a local capital and a large measure of home rule. So little was he merely a fanatical Conservative Scot, that Scotland was to fall into two provinces, of neither of which was Edinburgh to be capital; he thought Edinburgh very awkwardly situated for a metropolis, as being neither central, nor on the sea, nor on a navigable river. After the Union he retired from public life in disgust, and devoted himself to promoting improvements in agriculture; and he died at London in 1716.

Like his somewhat older contemporary, Sir

George Mackenzie, Fletcher wrote only in English (not Scots), and did succeed in writing a vigorous style wonderfully free from Scottish peculiarities. His Discourse of Government appeared in 1698, his Two Discourses concerning the Affairs of Scotland in the same year. The Discorso delle Cose di Spagna (1698 also) was printed only in Italian. His Speeches in the Scottish Parliament are both eloquent and sincere, though his political ideals were perverse and impractical. An Account of a Conversation concerning a Right Regulation of Governments for the common Good of Mankind (1703) is forcibly written, and contains much sound sense amidst its strong appeals in favour of Scottish independence. In this letter occurs the famous saying, so constantly quoted and so universally misinterpreted, about ballads. The conversation was supposed to be between the Earl of Cromarty, Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Christopher Musgrave, and Fletcher himself, and had nothing in the world to do with ballads such as 'Chevy Chase' or the Robin Hood series, but the unholy songs of the day, Tom Durfey's no doubt included; 'ballad' as used of romantic poems like the Border ballads is essentially a modern usage, the older custom always implying some kind of song. Fletcher's argument was on the utter inefficiency of all government regulations, according to Sir Christopher Musgrave, to put down the corruptions of London society in those days—the luxury of women, the number of prostitutes, and the debauchery of the poor of both sexes, who are daily tempted to all manner of lewdness by the infamous ballads sung in every corner of the streets. "One would think," said the Earl, "this last were of no great consequence." I said I knew a wise man so much of Sir Christopher's sentiment, that he believed if a man were permitted to make all the ballads, he need not care who should make the laws of a nation. And we find that most of the antient legislators thought they could not well reform the manners of any city without the help of a lyric, and sometimes of a dramatic, poet. But in this city [London] the dramatic poet no less than the ballad-maker has been almost wholly employed to corrupt the people, in which they have had most unspeakable and deplorable success.

Enthusiastic admiration of the Greek and Roman republics led Fletcher to praise even slavery as maintained by them. He represents the condition of the slaves as happy and useful, and by way of contrast paints the state of the lowest class in Scotland in colours that (even if they be somewhat too dark) show how frightfully disorganised the country was at that period. In the Second Discourse on the Affairs of Scotland occurs this lurid picture:

There are at this day in Scotland (besides a great many poor families very meanly provided for by the church-boxes, with others who, by living on bad food, fall into various diseases) two hundred thousand people begging from door to door. These are not only noway advantageous, but a very grievous burden to so poor a country. And though the number of them be perhaps double to what it was formerly, by reason of this present great distress, yet in all times there have been about one hundred thousand of those vagabonds, who have lived without any regard or subjection either to the laws of the land, or even those of God and nature. . . . No magistrate could ever be informed or discover which way one in a hundred of these wretches died, or that ever they were baptized. Many murders have been discovered among them; and they are not only a most unspeakable oppression to poor tenants (who, if they give not bread, or some kind of provision, to perhaps forty such villains in one day, are sure to be insulted by them), but they rob many poor people who live in houses distant from any neighbourhood. In years of plenty many thousands of them meet together in the mountains, where they feast and riot for many days; and at country-weddings, markets, burials, and the like public occasions, they are to be seen, both men and women, perpetually drunk, cursing, blaspheming, and fighting together. These are such outrageous disorders, that it were better for the nation they were sold to the galleys or West Indies than that they should continue any longer to be a burden and curse upon us.

But better than sending them to the plantations would be to keep them at home, utilising their services, and drilling them into a higher moral condition. The scheme of setting native vagabonds to work as serfs was not, as is commonly supposed, a novelty in Fletcher; it was fully recognised by a long series of Scottish laws from 1579 to 1661, and partially enforced too. Fletcher, however, went beyond the highest flight of Scots law in this department, and argued in favour of compelling all Scottish landlords to take white slaves in proportion to the size of their holdings. Fletcher's scheme may well have suggested a similar one to Defoe for London vagrants, expounded in Everybody's Business. Carlyle's views on the beneficence of the whip as a stimulus to honest industry at home and abroad have also points of affinity.

Fletcher's Political Works appeared, 'with a character of the author,' in 1732, and was reprinted in 1737, 1747, and later. There is a short and rather meagre Life by G. Omond (1897), which passes too lightly over many of Fletcher's most pregnant ideas and interesting characteristics. On Serfdom in Scotland, see the Edinburgh Review for January 1899.

William Cleland (1661?–89) showed less to advantage as a poet than as the heroic defender of Dunkeld in 1689, when the Cameronian regiment under his command stemmed and turned backward the rush of four thousand Highlanders flushed with the victory of Killiecrankie. The son of the Marquis of Douglas's gamekeeper, Cleland studied at St Andrews, became a zealous Covenanter, fought at Drumclog and Bothwell Brig (where he was a captain), and as a refugee in Holland studied law at Utrecht, and helped to negotiate the Prince of Orange's expedition. He was the first lieutenant-colonel of the regiment raised after the Revolution from amongst the westland Cameronians (afterwards the 26th), and he fell, still under thirty years of age, in the grim and bloody struggle round Dunkeld Cathedral. Scott wrongly assumed him to have been the father of Pope's friend Cleland.

But for the low ebb of literature in Scotland, Cleland would never be named amongst poets. Still, his uncouth verses—mainly satirical—record the temper of the times, and have a considerable linguistic interest. What he wrote was not old Scots, nor the Scots of Ramsay and Burns, but an imperfect English stuffed full of Scots words, forms, and locutions—gaunt (yawn), spear (ask), thir (these), kenn, lith, sverff; thou's (thou art), thou wear's (thou wearest), sawen (sown), crub'd (curbed), leugh (laughed). Further, words spelt as English ones must be pronounced as Scots in order to rhyme—thus, wool rhymes with true, dissecting with checking, enacts them with takes them (pronounced enacks them, taks them), guard with laird. Snizeing (sneeshing) is already used for snuff; in coarck his coots for 'grip his ankles' we have an odd combination of Scottish Ciceronianism and the mere vernacular; and 'makes the thrush bush [tuft of rushes] keep the cow' is an interesting echo of the famous vow of James I. (of Scotland).

Cleland's Poems and Verses appeared in a small volume in 1697, and contain nine stanzas written by him as 'An Addition to the Lines of "Hollow my Fancie" when he was a student at St Andrews.' The anonymous poem so named was well known before the middle of the century, and Cleland's addition falls far below the humble literary level of the original. The first two stanzas given below are from the earliest set of words.

From 'Hallo, my Fancy.'

When I look before me,
There I do behold
There's none that sees or knows me;
All the world's a-gadding,
Running madding;

None doth his station hold.

He that is below envieth him that riseth,
And he that is above, him that's below despiseth,
So every man his plot and counter-plot deviseth.

Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go?

Look, look, what bustling

Here I do espy;

Each another jostling,

Every one turmoiling,

Th' other spoiling,

As I did pass them by.

One sitteth musing in a dumpish passion,
Another hangs his head because he's out of fashion,
A third is fully bent on sport and recreation.

Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go?

In conceit like Phaeton,

I'll mount Phœbus' chair,

Having ne'er a hat on,

All my hair a-burning

In my journeying,

Hurrying through the air.

Fain would I hear his fiery horses neighing,
And see how they on foamy lits are playing;
All the stars and planets I will be surveying!

Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go? . . .

Hallo, my fancy, hallo,

Stay thou at home with me;

I can thee no longer follow,

Thou hast betrayed me,

And bewrayed me;

It is too much for thee.

Stay, stay at home with me; leave off thy lofty soaring;

Stay thou at home with me, and on thy books be poring;

For he that goes abroad lays little up in storing;

Thou's welcome home, my fancy, welcome home to me.

From Cleland's pen (less dexterous than his sword) we have also one or two elegies—as on the famous Covenanter M'Ward—rhymed epistles, and other occasional verses, but the bulk of the book is occupied with two 'mock poems' or satires, one 'Upon the Expedition of the Highland Host, who came to destroy the Western Shires in Winter 1678,' and another on the Episcopal clergy who 'met to consult about the Test in 1681.' The Highlanders, regarded then by all Lowlanders as savages on the level of the mere Irish, were—in spite of the earnest protest of the landed gentlemen of the west—let loose on the Covenanting shires to suppress conventicles, and to this end had free quarters amongst the country-folk, and were empowered to seize horses and ammunition, and, if necessary, 'to kill, wound, apprehend, and imprison' Nonconformists. The following (in which the 'she'll' and the 'nainsell' show that the jokes against the Highlander trying to speak Lowland Scots were early stereotyped) describes

The Highland Host.

But those who were their chief commanders,
As such who bore the pinnie standarts; parti-coloured
Who lead the van and drove the rear, led
Were right well mounted of their gear;
With brogues, and trews, and pinnie plaides,
And good blew bonnets on their heads,
Which on the one side had a flipe, fold
Adorn'd with a tobacco pipe;
With durk, and snap-work, and snuff-mill, snaphance, pistol
A bagg which they with onions fill,
And, as their strick observers say, strict
A tupe-horn filled with usquebay; ram's-horn
A slashed-out coat beneath their plaides,
A targe of timber, nails, and hides;
With a long two-handed sword,
As good's the country can afford—
Had they not need of bulk and bones,
Who fights with all these arms at once?
It's marvelous how in such weather,
Ov'r hill and hope they came together; valley
How in such stormes they came so farr;
The reason is they're smeared with tar,
Which doth defend them heel and neck,
Just us it doth their sheep protect.
But least ye doubt that this is true least
They're just the colour of tar'd wool. pron. 'oo

Nought like religion they retain,
 Of moral honesty they're clean;
 In nothing they're accounted sharp,
 Except in bagpipe and in harpe.
 For a misobling word
 She'll durk her neighbour ov'r the boord; board
 And then she'll flee like fire from flint,
 She'll scarcely ward the second dint;
 If any ask her of her thrift,
 Forsooth, her nainsell lives by thift. theft

Robert Wodrow (1679–1734), Scottish Church historian, was born at Glasgow and studied in its university, where his father was Professor of Divinity; in 1703 he became minister of Eastwood. His History of the Sufferings of the Church of Scotland 1660–88 (1721–22) was dedicated to George I. He was a zealous Presbyterian, an indefatigable collector, and an honest recorder, though not free from partisanship and credulousness; and his work is of very high value for his period. Not till next century were published his Lives of the Scottish Reformers (Maitland Club, 1834–45); Analecta, or a History of Remarkable Providences (Maitland Club, 1842–43); Correspondence (Wodrow Soc., 1842–43); and Biographical Collections (New Spalding Club, 1890). The following passages are both from the Analecta:

The Divel and the Divinity Student.

When Mr Robert Blair was minister of St Andrews, there was a youth who applied to that presbitry to be admitted to tryals. Though he was very unfit, the presbitry appoints him a text, and after he had been at all the pains he could in consulting help, yet he got nothing done, so that he turned very melancholy; and one day, as he was walking all alone in a remote place from St Andrews, there came up to him a stranger, in habite like a minister, with black coat and band, and who addressed the youth very courteously, and presently falls into discourse with him after this manner: 'Sir, you are but a young man, and yet appear to be very melancholy; pray, why so pensive?' He answered, 'It's to no purpose to communicat my mind to yow, seeing yow cannot help me.' 'How know you that? Pray let me know the cause of your pressure.' Says the youth, 'I have got a text from the presbitry. I cannot for my life compose a discourse on it, so I shall be affronted.' The stranger replied, 'Sir, I am a minister; let me hear the text.' He told him. 'O, then, I have ane excellent sermon on that text here in my pocket, which yow may peruse and commit to your memory. I engage, after yow have delivered it before the presbitry, yow shall be greatly approven and applauded;' so pulls it out and gives it to him, which he received very thankfully. Then says the stranger, 'As I have obliged yow now, sir, so yow will oblige me again in doing any peece of kindness or service when my business requires it;' which the youth promises. 'But, sir,' says the stranger, 'yow and I are strangers, and therefore I would require of yow a written promise, subscribed with your hand, in case yow forget the favour which I have done yow;' which he granted likewise, and delivered it to him subscribed with his blood. And thus they parted.

Upon the presbitry day the youth delivered ane excellent sermon upon the text appointed him, which pleased and amazed the presbitry to a degree; only Mr Blair smelt out something in it which made him call the youth aside to a corner of the church, and thus he began with him: 'Sir, yow have delivered a nate sermon, every way well pointed. The matter was profound, or rather sublime; your stile was fine and your method clear; and no doubt young men at the beginning must make use of helps, which I doubt not but yow have done.' The young man acknowledged he had. 'But,' says Mr Blair, 'besydes the use of books, I know sometimes they are obliged to consult men that are scholars and well versed in divinity, to help them in their composours. Have yow not done soe?' He said he had. Mr Blair says, 'Yow may use all freedome with me; I intend yow no hurt. Did yow not get the whole of this discourse written and ready to your hand from one who pretended to be a minister?' He acknowledged the same. Mr Blair says, 'No doubt but yow would give him thanks for his favour, and promise to do him any peece of service he called for, when his business [doth] lye in yowr way?' He answered 'Yes.' 'But yowr verbal promises would not be sufficient: did yow not give him a written promise subscribed with your blood?' All which he confessed with fear, blushing, and confusion. Then Mr Blair, with ane awful seriousness appearing in his countenance, began to tell the youth his hazard, and that the man whom he took for a minister was the Divel, who had trepanned him and brought him into his net: advised him to be earnest with God in prayer, and likewise not to give way to dispair, for there was yet hope.

In the meantime the youth was so overcome with fear and terror that he was like to fall down. Mr Blair exhorts him to take heart, and brings him in with him into the presbitry: and when all except the ministers were removed, Mr Blair recalls the whole story to them. They were all strangely affected with it, and resolved unanimously to dispatch the presbitry business presently, and to stay all night in town, and on the morrow to meet for prayer in one of the most retired churches of the presbitry, acquainting none with there busines, but taking the youth alongst with them, whom they kepted alwise close by them. Which was done, and after the ministers had prayed all of them round, except Mr Blair, who prayed last, in time of his prayer then came a violent rushing of wind upon the church, so great that they all thought the church should have fallen down about there ears, and with that the youth's paper and covenant droops down from the roof of the church among the ministers. I heard no more of the story.

Gillespie's End.

It came to that, he kept his chamber still to his death, wearing and wasting, hoasting [coughing] and sweating. Ten dayes before his death his sweating went away, and his hoasting lesned, yet his weaknes still encreased. His wife seeing the time draw near, spake to him and said, 'The time of your releife is nou near and hard at hand!' He answered, 'I long for that time! O happy they that are there!' This was the last word he was heard sensibly to speak. Mr Frederick Carmichael being there, they went to prayer, expecting death so suddenly. In the midst of prayer he left his ratling, and the pangs and fetches of death began; thence his senses went away. Wherupon they rose from prayer, and beheld till in a very gentle manner the pinns of his tabernacle wer loosed.

WELSH, IRISH, AND COLONIAL CONTRIBUTIONS.

IN the first section, the influence of the Celtic temperament and culture has been recognised as stimulating and modifying the trend of early English intellectual life; but in this work it is not possible directly to take cognisance of the literatures of the races other than Anglic who have contributed essential elements to the mixed people now inhabiting the British Islands. Besides English in its various dialects and successive stages, at least five languages have been spoken by those at home within this area even if we arrange the Celtic tongues in two groups only—Irish, Manx, and Scottish Gaelic; Welsh and Cornish. The lingua Latina rustica was spoken in the Roman colonies for four centuries at least; and in the Middle Ages Church and Law Latin was the literary vehicle of some of the greatest Englishmen, and practically the vernacular of synods and of monasteries. From the Norman Conquest to the days of Edward III., as we have seen, Norman French was the language of literature. And it should be remembered that for generations the old Norse in some shape was spoken and written not merely in Shetland and Orkney and at the court of the Jarls of Caithness, but in the Western Islands of Scotland, in the Danelagh of England, and in the Danish kingdoms of Dublin, Limerick, and Waterford: good authorities hold that considerable portions of the collection called the Corpus Poeticum Boreale were written by the Scandinavians of Ireland. Other languages were doubtless spoken in Britain before the arrival of the first Celtic invaders, those of the Ivernian or other prehistoric inhabitants; and some Celtic philologists now trace the peculiarities of Irish, Welsh, and the neo-Celtic tongues to the old pre-Aryan language, characteristics they share with other languages of the old Mediterranean stock, ancient Egyptian and modern Berber. In Wales, as in France, the best authorities hold that the vast majority of the present inhabitants are sprung—not from the Celts or any of the successive invaders—but from the race or races who held the land before the coming of the Aryans. A fortiori, this is even truer of Ireland and the Highlands. The first Celts to invade Britain were the Goidels, who became incorporated with their non-Aryan subjects; a like process took place when the later Brythonic conquerors established themselves in Britain. Nowhere in the 'Celtic fringe' are the people of pure Celtic descent; and it may well be that what is especially characteristic of Irish literature and is interpreted as the true 'Celtic note' is not of Celtic origin at all, but reflects the moods of the earlier non-Aryan inhabitants of Erin, from whom the conquering Gael, invaders from Britain, learnt the manner of the gods of the land, the really autochthonous legends and folklore.

The Cymric literature of Wales has a history of nine or ten centuries and still flourishes; and for three or four hundred years men of Welsh blood have been contributors to English literature. Such Welshmen have not been very numerous nor of the first importance. They have not been regarded as wholly aliens in England; and as they wrote in the literary English of their time, it has not been thought necessary to treat them in a separate division of this work. Vaughan the Silurist and his brother are amongst the most unmistakable; James Howell, cosmopolitan though he was in temper, was Welsh by birth as he was in name and blood. John Davies of Hereford was a Welshman born just outside the principality; Sir John Davies may have been of Welsh blood. The Pembroke Herberts were a great Welsh house, and Lord Herbert of Cherbury and George Herbert were apparently both born at their father's home of Montgomery Castle. John Donne, a power in English literature, was said to be of Welsh descent; and the great Puritan, John Owen, is known, apart from his Welsh name, to have been of an old Welsh family. Roger Williams—in Milton's words, 'that noble confessor of religious liberty,' and founder of Rhode Island—was a fiery Welshman. And earlier, Asser, Geoffrey of Monmouth, Walter Map, and the rationalist Bishop Pecock by their writings left their mark deep enough on mediæval Latin, Anglo-French, and English thought. These are all notable figures in the history of our literature before the end of the seventeenth century, and are treated in their proper chronological places. Guillim, in virtue of his great folio Display of Heraldrie (1610), the eponym of the science, was born at Hereford of Welsh family. And dozens of others might be named, from the voluminous Giraldus Cambrensis to John Owen the Latin epigrammatist, whose interest as authors, however great, is inconsiderable in connection with the story of English letters.

From the Anglo-Norman Conquest of Ireland—which was both the continuation and the completion of the Norman Conquest of England—there had been much writing from Ireland and about Ireland by Englishmen for a longer or shorter time resident in Ireland, but not much that ranks as literature. Spenser wrote his book on Ireland and most of the Faerie Queene at Kilcolman, his home from 1589 on, but his connection with Ireland is wholly external. Sir John Davies, Sir William Temple, and Sir William Petty were Englishmen who lived for a time in Ireland and wrote about Ireland. Richard Stanyhurst, on the other hand, was born at Dublin (1547; see page 332) of a family settled in Ireland for three centuries; he was but a feeble forerunner of the glorious company which was in the eighteenth century to include Steele and Swift, Burke and Goldsmith. Stanyhurst's nephew, Archbishop Ussher, is a noble representative of Anglo-Irish Churchmanship, and was also born in Dublin (1581). Sir John Denham was born (1615) at Dublin, the son of an Irish judge, but was in no other sense an Irishman. But the Hon. Robert Boyle (born at Lismore Castle in 1627) bears the name of a great Anglo-Irish house. Roger Boyle (page 787), Earl of Cork and dramatist, was also born at Lismore. The Earl of Roscommon was Irish born, but lived most of his life out of Ireland. Tate and Brady both, as well as the dramatists Southerne and Farquhar, were Irishmen born and bred; but their work, like that of other notable Anglo-Irishmen—Swift, Toland, Steele, Parnell, and Berkeley—born before the Revolution, belongs mainly to the next period, and will be dealt with in the next volume. Of the Irish contributors to English literature before the Revolution it may be said generally that though some of them, like Ussher, thoroughly identified themselves with the land of their birth, the Irish tone and temper is rather conspicuous by its absence. The growth of that temper and the beginning of the Irish question are associated with the name of William Molyneux (died 1698), whose Case of Ireland being bound by Acts of Parliament passed in England, published in the same year, and burned by the order of the English House of Commons, marks him as the forerunner of Swift and Grattan.

In the English colonies in North America there was hardly any literature of consequence till about the middle of the eighteenth century. The books of travel, poems, sermons, and the like in the seventeenth century were largely the work of men and women English born, and, except for their change of residence, to all intents and purposes Britons of the native type. Captain John Smith, who told—if he did not also invent—the tale of Pocahontas, was a grown man when in 1605 he joined the Virginia expedition, spent only a small part of his life on American soil, and died in London. But his True Relation of Occurrences in Virginia (1608) ranks as the first book in American literature, though judged from the point of literature it has no great value. In Virginia, George Sandys (see page 450) completed that translation of Ovid which he dedicated to King Charles I. Richard Ligon in his History of the Barbadoes (1657) furnished the materials out of which Richard Steele spun his famous novelette of Inkle and Yarico; but Ligon was a broken London merchant of sixty when in 1647 he sailed to begin life anew in the West Indies. Roger Williams, though he became heart and soul a colonial, was a Welshman, and was also thirty years of age ere he arrived (1631) on the shores where he was to found the state of Rhode Island, and to be remembered for his vehement discourse against The Bloody Tenent of Persecution. John Eliot, 'the apostle of the Indians,' who went to America in the same year, was four years younger when he left his native Hertfordshire. Anne Bradstreet (1612-72), 'the first professional poetess of New England,' was a woman grown ere she left her home in Old England. The works of all these authors were sent to England to be published. The Bay Psalm Book, printed at Cambridge in Massachusetts in 1640, was the first book in English that issued from the press in America; it was largely the production of John Eliot and of Richard Mather, a Lancashire Puritan, who emigrated to the colony in 1635, and was father of Increase Mather and grandfather of Cotton Mather.

Such were the slender beginnings of the vast and varied American literature, now one of the two great branches of literature in the English tongue. For a century and a half it has uttered the thoughts and feelings of a nation of marked characteristics, of strong originality, in which the English element has been the dominant constituent; and its history must be traced in another volume of this work. Written in English—though English with a difference—the daughter literature in some respects rivals the parent, and has in many ways influenced, both in substance and in form, what is said and sung on the other side of the Atlantic. The people of the United States are now by far the largest section under one government of those who speak English. In America some English books find their widest circle of readers. The older English literature is by Americans justly regarded as an inheritance common to them with us; and much helpful work towards the better understanding of the English language and of the triumphs of English letters has been done by American writers and in the United States.

D. P.

INDEX TO
VOLUMES I., II. AND III.

DATE LOANED

Acc. No. _____

[illegible]

INDEX

- A BECKETT, GILBERT ABBOTT, III. 400.
A Man's a Man for a' that, by Burns, II. 825.
Aaron's Rod, by Gillespie, I. 821.
Abbey Theatre, Dublin, III. 709, 722, 850.
ABBOTT, EVELYN, III. 841.
Abdelazer, by Aphra Behn, II. 68.
ABERCROMBIE, JOHN, III. 242.
ABERCROMBIE, LASCELLES, III. 715, 722.
ABERCROMBY, PATRICK, II. 301.
Abide with me, by H. F. Lyte, III. 271.
Abraham Lincoln, by Lowell, III. 804; by Drinkwater, III. 848.
Absalom and Achitophel, by Dryden, I. 793, 795, 796, 798.
Absentee, by Maria Edgeworth, II. 735; by T. H. Bayly, III. 241.
Abstract of Melancholy, The Author's, by Burton, I. 440.
Acharnians, trans. by Frere, II. 676, 677.
Acrasia's Bower of Bliss, by Spenser, I. 299.
Across the Plains, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 697, 702.
Active Powers, Essays on, by Reid, II. 388.
ACTON, LORD, III. 684.
Actor, by Robert Lloyd, II. 612.
Ad Amicos, by Richard West, II. 422.
ADAIR, SIR ROBERT, II. 670.
ADAM, G. M., III. 726.
ADAM, JEAN, II. 523.
Adam Bede, by George Eliot, III. 529, 530.
Adam Blair, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250.
ADAMNAN, I. 171.
ADAMS, ARTHUR H., III. 729.
ADAMS, F. W. L., III. 730.
ADAMSON, ROBERT, III. 843.
ADDISON, JOSEPH, II. 3, 212.
Addison, Elegy on, by T. Tickell, II. 251.
Addison, Life of, by Lucy Aikin, III. 178.
ADE, GEORGE, III. 855.
ADELER, MAX. See CLARK, III. 825.
Admirable Crichton, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
Admiral Guinea, by Henley and Stevenson, III. 695, 699.
Admirals, Lives of the, by Dr J. Campbell, II. 387.
Admonition to the True Lords, by George Buchanan, I. 224.
Adonais, by Shelley, III. 111, 115.
Advancement of Learning, by Bacon, I. 381.
Adventurer, The, II. 410.
Adventures of Mr Verdant Green, by Rev. E. Bradley, III. 624.
Adversaria, by Porson, II. 637.
Advice to a Lady, by Lyttelton, II. 340.
Advice to an Author, by Shaftesbury, II. 167, 168-170.
Advice to Julia, by Henry Luttrell, II. 755.
Advocates' Library, Edinburgh, I. 826.
ADV, MRS HENRY, III. 851.
'A. E.' (George W. Russell), III. 710.
Ae Fond Kiss, by Burns, II. 827.
ÆLFRED, I. 10, 22.
ÆLFRIC, I. 26.
Ælla, by Thomas Chatterton, II. 515.
Æneid, trans. by Caxton, I. 96; by Pitt, I. 250; by Harrington, I. 620; by Conington, III. 634; by Morris, III. 665; by Gavin Douglas into Scots, I. 202.
Æolian Harp, by Thoreau, III. 798.
Æschylus, trans. by Edward FitzGerald, III. 425; by J. S. Blackie, III. 490; ed. by T. Stanley, I. 746.
Æsop's Fables, trans. by L'Estrange, I. 742.
Afar in the Desert, by T. Pringle, II. 790.
Afghanistan, The War in, by Sir J. W. Kaye, III. 482.
Africa, Travels in the Interior of, by Mungo Park, II. 651.
African Farm, by Mrs Schreiner, III. 733.
African Sketches, by T. Pringle, II. 789; III. 733.
After Dark, by Wilkie Collins, III. 620.
After Days, by Austin Dobson, III. 689.
After London, or Wild England, by R. Jefferies, III. 640.
Age of Dryden, by R. Garnett, III. 668.
Age of Queen Anne, II. 119.
Age of Reason, by Thomas Paine, II. 559.
Agincourt, by Drayton, I. 341, 343.
Agnostic's Apology, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
Agreeable Surprise, by O'Keefe, II. 656.
AGUILAR, GRACE, III. 850.
Aidé, HAMILTON, III. 839.
Aids to Reflection, by Coleridge, III. 62, 63.
AIKEN, CONRAD, III. 856.
AIKIN, LUCY, III. 178.
AINGER, ALFRED, III. 681.
AINSWORTH, WILLIAM HARRISON, III. 377.
AIRD, THOMAS, III. 312.
Ajax and Ulysses, by Shirley, I. 487.
AKENSIDE, MARK, II. 372.
Alastor, by Shelley, III. 107.
Albania, edited by John Leyden, II. 440.
Albert Nyanza, by Sir S. W. Baker, III. 610.
ALBERRY, JAMES, III. 841.
Albigenses, by Maturin, II. 753.
Albion's England, by W. Warner, I. 330.
Alcæus, An Ode in Imitation of, by Sir W. Jones, II. 616.
Alchemist, by Ben Jonson, I. 404, 407.
Alciphron, by Berkeley, II. 266.
ALCOTT, AMOS BRONSON, III. 756.
ALCOTT, LOUISA MAY, III. 757.
ALCUIN, I. 19; by C. Brockden Brown, III. 743.
ALDINGTON, RICHARD, III. 849.
ALDINGTON, MRS RICHARD (Hilda Doolittle), III. 856.
ALDRICH, HENRY, II. 61.
ALDRICH, THOMAS BAILEY, III. 824.
ALEXANDER, CECIL FRANCES, III. 583.
ALEXANDER, SAMUEL, III. 718, 844.
ALEXANDER, W. (Earl of Stirling), I. 509.
ALEXANDER, WILLIAM, III. 839.
ALEXANDER, DR WILLIAM, III. 584.
Alexander the Great, by N. Lee, II. 88.
Alexander's Feast, by Dryden, I. 795.
Alexandre, Alisaander, I. 51, 178.
ALFORD, HENRY, III. 396.
ALFRED. See ÆLFRED.
Alfred, by H. J. Pye, II. 686; by Thomson and Mallet, II. 321, 328, 329.
Algonquin Legends, by Leland, III. 784.
Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, by Lewis Carroll, III. 648.
ALISON, ARCHIBALD, II. 639.
ALISON, SIR ARCHIBALD, III. 288.
All Fools, by Chapman, I. 377, 378.
All for Love, by Dryden, I. 796, 807, 808.
All Sorts and Conditions of Men, by Sir W. Besant, III. 650.
All the Year Round, by Dickens, III. 465.
Allan Quatermain, by Sir Rider Haggard, III. 703.
ALLEN, CHARLES GRANT, III. 726, 727.
ALLEN, HERVEY, III. 850.
ALLEN, JAMES LANE, III. 831.
ALLINGHAM, WILLIAM, III. 605.
Alliterative Poems, I. 53, 174; Early English, I. 173, 174; Scottish, I. 172, 173.
Alliterative Romances, I. 51, 172-173.
All's Well that Ends Well, by Shakespeare, I. 365.
ALLSTON, WASHINGTON, III. 853.
Alma, by Matthew Prior, II. 114, 118.
Almayer's Folly, by Conrad, III. 711.
A.L.O.E. (M. C. Tucker), III. 850.
Alone in London, by R. Buchanan, III. 656.
Alonso the Brave and the Fair Imogene, by M. G. Lewis, II. 751.
Alphonsus, by Robert Greene, I. 324, 325.
Alps, Through the, by Forbes, III. 400.
Althea, To, by Richard Lovelace, I. 638.
Altiora Peto, by L. Oliphant, III. 636.
Alton Locke, by Charles Kingsley, III. 513.
Amadis de Gaul, trans. by Rose, II. 760.
Amazing Marriage, by Meredith, III. 658.
Ambassadors, by Henry James, III. 830.
Ambrosio, or the Monk, by M. G. Lewis, II. 748, 749.
Anælia, by Fielding, II. 341; by Coventry Patmore, III. 602.
America, History of, by Robertson, II. 382, 384; by W. Russell, II. 388; by J. Fiske, III. 828.
America, Men and Manners in, by Thomas Hamilton, III. 254.
America, Society in, by Harriet Martineau, III. 388.
America, Travels in North, by Basil Hall, III. 227.
America, Wanderings in South, by C. Waterton, III. 173.
American Civil War, by J. W. Draper, III. 825; by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
American Commonwealth, by Lord Bryce, III. 686.
American Conflict, by Horace Greeley, III. 811.
American Humour, by Haliburton, III. 726.
American Literature, III. 734.
American Literature, by Julian Hawthorne, III. 831.
American Note-Books, Hawthorne's, III. 780.
American Notes, by Dickens, III. 465, 769.
American Ornithology, by Alexander Wilson, II. 812.
American Revolution, by Sir G. O. Trevelyan, III. 687.
American Scholar, by Emerson, III. 761.
American Taxation, by Burke, II. 544.
American Tragedy, by Theodore Dreiser, III. 835.
American Wives and English Husbands, by Mrs Atherton, III. 834.
Americans, Domestic Manners of the, by Frances Trollope, III. 270.
Among my Books, by J. R. Lowell, III. 802.
Among the Millet, by A. Lampman, III. 728.
Amoretti, by Spenser, I. 296, 302.
Amorous War, by J. Mayne, I. 633.
AMORY, THOMAS, Memoirs, II. 280.
Amos Barton, by George Eliot, III. 529, 532.
Amwell, by John Scott, II. 456.
Amy Wentworth, by Whittier, III. 775.
Amynta, by Sir Gilbert Elliot, II. 423.
Anacreon, trans. by F. Fawkes, II. 421.
Anacreontiques, by Cowley, I. 643, 645.
Anahuac, or Mexico and the Mexicans, by Sir E. B. Tylor, III. 663.
Analecta, by Robert Wodrow, I. 830.
Analogy of Religion, by J. Butler, II. 269.
Anastasis, by Thomas Hope, II. 745, 746.
Anatomie of Humors, by Grahame, I. 818.
Anatomy of Melancholy, by Burton, I. 435.
Ancient Inhabitants of Scotland, Critical Essay on the, by Thomas Innes, II. 302.
Ancient Mariner, by Coleridge, III. 58, 63.
Ancient Mysteries, by W. Hone, II. 759.
Ancient Sea Margins, by Robert Chambers, III. 316.
Ancient Spanish Ballads, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250.
Ancien Riwle, I. 39.
ANCRUM, EARL OF, I. 500.
ANDERSON, ALEXANDER, III. 841.
ANDERSON, SHERWOOD, III. 855.
Andreas, poem in the Vercelli Book, I. 14.
ANDREWES, LANCELOT, I. 388.
Aneurin, I. 3.
Angel Court, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
Angel in the House, by Coventry Patmore, III. 602.
Angel of the Doves, by Stephens, III. 732.
Anglican Difficulties, by J. H. Newman, III. 338.
Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, I. 24, 26, 29.
Anglo-Saxon Literature, I. 4-29.
Anglo-Saxons, History of the, by Sharon Turner, II. 639.
ANGUS, MARION, III. 851.
Anima Poetæ, by Coleridge, III. 62, 71.
Annabel Lee, by E. A. Poe, III. 787, 789.
Annales, by Archbishop Ussher, I. 441.
Annals of Peterborough, I. 29.

- Annals of the Parish, by John Galt, III. 296, 298.
 Annals of Winchester, I. 29.
 Annals of Worcester, I. 29.
 Ann Veronica, by H. G. Wells, III. 712.
 Annie Weir, by David Wingate, III. 608.
 Annual Register, II. 13, 301, 543.
 Annuity, by George Outram, III. 414.
 Annus Mirabilis, by Dryden, I. 792, 796.
 Anonymous Early Scottish Pieces, I. 208.
 Anster Fair, by William Tennant, III. 307.
 ANSTEV, CHRISTOPHER, II. 434.
 ANSTEV, F. (T. Anstey Guthrie), III. 844.
 Anthea, To, by Robert Herrick, I. 562.
 Anthologies, Elizabethan, I. 257.
 ANTHONY, C. L. (Dodie Smith), III. 852.
 Anthropology, by Sir E. Tylor, III. 663.
 Anti-Jacobin, II. 668, 669, 670, 672, 673.
 Antient Metaphysics, by Lord Monboddo, II. 435.
 Antiquary, by Scott, III. 34, 39, 41.
 Antonio and Mellida, by J. Marston, I. 463.
 Antony and Cleopatra, by Shakespeare, I. 371.
 Ants, Bees, and Wasps, by Lord Avebury, III. 664.
 Aphorisms, Moral and Religious, by Benjamin Whichcote, I. 603.
 Apologia pro Vita Sua, by J. H. Newman, III. 338, 339.
 Apologie for Poetrie, by Sir Philip Sidney, I. 289, 291.
 Apology, Barclay's, II. 53.
 Apology for his Life, by Colley Cibber, II. 273.
 Apostolic Age, by Bishop Lightfoot, III. 625.
 Appearance and Reality, by F. H. Bradley, III. 703.
 Appius and Virginia, by Webster, I. 426.
 Apple Cart, by G. B. Shaw, III. 706.
 Apple Dumplings and a King, by Wolcot, II. 664.
 Approaching Age, by Crabbe, II. 698.
 Arabia, A Year's Journey through, by W. G. Palgrave, III. 609.
 Arabia Deserta, Travels in, by C. M. Doughty, III. 693.
 Arabian Nights, trans. by Sir R. F. Burton, III. 610.
 Arabic Lexicon, by Edward William Lane, III. 327.
 Aratra Pentelici, by Ruskin, III. 571.
 ARBER, EDWARD, III. 840.
 ARBUTHNOT, JOHN, II. 145.
 Arcades, by Milton, I. 687.
 Arcadia, by Sir Philip Sidney, I. 288, 290, 292; New, by Madame Duclaux, III. 704.
 ARCHER, WILLIAM, III. 844.
 Arden of Feversham, I. 334; by George Lillo, II. 270.
 Areopagitica, by Milton, I. 688, 707, 709.
 Arethusa, by Shelley, III. 112.
 Argenis, by John Barclay, I. 159; trans. by Clara Reeve, II. 420.
 ARGYLL, THE DUKE OF, III. 613.
 Ariadne Florentina, by Ruskin, III. 571.
 Arians of the Fourth Century, by J. H. Newman, III. 337.
 Ariosto, trans. by Sir John Harington, I. 391; by W. S. Rose, II. 760.
 Aristocracy and Evolution, by W. H. Mallock, III. 703.
 Aristophanes, trans. by Hookham Frere, II. 676.
 Aristotle's Poetics, trans. by H. J. Pye, II. 685.
 Arms and the Man, by G. B. Shaw, III. 706.
 ARMSTRONG, JOHN, II. 350.
 ARNOLD, MATTHEW, III. 10, 591; Book on, by Prof. Saintsbury, III. 693.
 ARNOLD, SIR EDWIN, III. 663.
 ARNOLD, THOMAS, III. 202; Life of, by Stanley, III. 394.
 Arrah-na-Pogue, by D. Boucicault, III. 585.
 Arrangement of Paris, by Peele, I. 240, 321.
 Arrows of the Chace, by Ruskin, III. 572.
 Arrowsmith, by Sinclair Lewis, III. 836.
 Art Journal founded, III. 281.
 Art of Dining, by A. Hayward, III. 327.
 Art of Politics, by J. Bramston, II. 209, 210.
 Art of Preserving Health, by Armstrong, II. 350.
 Arte of English Poesie, by G. Puttenham, I. 266.
 Arte of Rhetorique, by Sir Thomas Wilson, I. 143.
 Artemus Ward, III. 826.
 Arthur Bonnicastle, by J. G. Holland, III. 778.
 Arthur Coningsby, by J. Sterling, III. 270.
 Arthur (Le Morte D'Arthur), by Sir Thomas Malory, I. 92.
 Arthurian Legend, I. 35; Beginning of, I. 3.
 Artists of Spain, by Sir W. Stirling-Maxwell, III. 499.
 Arundel, by Richard Cumberland, II. 562.
 As I Lay A-Thynkynge, by R. H. Barham, III. 167.
 As Slow our Ship, by Moore, III. 348.
 As You Like It, by Shakespeare, I. 367.
 ASCHAM, ROGER, I. 120, 144, 237.
 ASCILL, JOHN, II. 100.
 ASHMOLE, ELIAS, I. 590.
 Ashtaroth, by A. L. Gordon, III. 731.
 Asiatic Studies, by Lyall, III. 681.
 Ask me no more, by Tennyson, III. 546.
 Asolando, by R. Browning, III. 557, 566.
 ASQUITH, HENRY HERBERT, EARL OF OXFORD AND ASQUITH, III. 843.
 Assembly, by Archibald Pitcairne, II. 103.
 Astræa Redux, by Dryden, I. 792, 795.
 Astrolabe, by Chaucer, I. 81.
 Astrological Prognostication, by Thomas Nash, I. 329.
 Astrophel, by Spenser, I. 297, 308; by A. C. Swinburne, III. 674.
 Astrophel and Stella, by Sir Philip Sidney, I. 287, 292.
 At Last, by Charles Kingsley, III. 514.
 At the Mid Hour of Night, by Moore, III. 348.
 Atalanta in Calydon, by Swinburne, III. 670-672, 676-677.
 Atalantis, by Mrs Manley, II. 96.
 Atheist's Tragedy, by Tourneur, I. 430.
 ATHELARD OF BATH, I. 34.
 Athelstane, by John Brown, II. 392.
 Athenæ Oxonienses, by A. Wood, I. 749.
 Athenæum established by J. S. Buckingham, III. 224; edited by C. W. Dilke, III. 259.
 Athenaid, by Richard Glover, II. 351.
 Athenian Captive, by Sir T. N. Talfourd, III. 272.
 ATHERSTONE, EDWIN, III. 146.
 ATHERTON, GERTRUDE FRANKLIN, III. 834.
 Atlantic Monthly, III. 772, 791, 797, 800, 801, 802, 829.
 Atossa, Character of, by Pope, II. 183.
 Attaché, by T. C. Haliburton, III. 726.
 ATTERBURY, FRANCIS, II. 158.
 Atticus, Character of, by Pope, II. 179, 183.
 AUBREY, JOHN, I. 747.
 Aucassin and Nicolette, trans. by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 AUDEN, WYNSTAN HUGH, III. 724, 849.
 Audrey, by Mary Johnston, III. 834.
 Augusta, Stanzas to, by Byron, III. 131.
 Augustan Age of English Literature, II. 119.
 Auld Lang Syne, by Ramsay, II. 315.
 Auld Licht Idylls, by Sir J. Barrie, III. 705.
 Auld Reekie, by Robert Fergusson, II. 806.
 Auld Robin Forbes (in Cumbrian), by Susanna Blamire, II. 802.
 Auld Robin Gray, by Lady Anne Barnard, II. 803, 804.
 Aurengzebe, by Dryden, I. 797, 807.
 Aurora Floyd, by Miss Braddon, III. 690.
 Aurora Leigh, by Mrs Browning, III. 554, 557, 558, 561.
 AUSTEN, JANE, II. 774.
 AUSTIN, ALFRED, III. 681.
 AUSTIN, DR ADAM, II. 810.
 AUSTIN, JOHN, III. 373.
 AUSTIN, MRS JOHN, III. 373.
 AUSTIN, LUCIE (Lady Duff Gordon), III. 373, 733.
 Australasian Literature, III. 729.
 Author's Farce, by Fielding, II. 339.
 Autocrat of the Breakfast Table, by O. W. Holmes, III. 791, 792, 794.
 Autumn, Ode to, by Keats, III. 101, 105.
 AVEBURY, LORD, III. 663.
 Avillion, by Mrs Craik, III. 536.
 Ayenbyte of Inwytt, I. 49.
 Aylmers, by T. H. Bayly, III. 241.
 Aylwin, by T. Watts-Dunton, III. 668.
 Ayrshire Legatees, by Galt, III. 297, 298.
 AYTON, SIR ROBERT, I. 508.
 AYTON, WILLIAM EDMONSTOUNE, III. 475.
 Azores, by Raleigh, I. 305, 311.
 Bab Ballads, by W. S. Gilbert, III. 694.
 Babbitt, by Sinclair Lewis, III. 836.
 Babe Christabel, The Ballad of, by Gerald Massey, III. 608.
 Babylon, by Grant Allen, III. 727.
 Baby's Debut, by James Smith, III. 161.
 BACHELLER, IRVING, III. 855.
 Back to Methuselah, by Shaw, III. 706.
 BACON, FRANCIS, I. 380; Letters and Life, by Spedding, III. 397; Personal History, by Hepworth Dixon, III. 578.
 BACON, ROGER, I. 34.
 Baddington Peerage, by G. A. H. Sala, III. 625.
 BÆDA—'The Venerable Bede,' I. 18.
 BAGE, ROBERT, II. 572.
 BAGEHOT, WALTER, III. 630.
 BAILEY, PHILIP JAMES, III. 507.
 BAILLIE, JOANNA, II. 729.
 BAILLIE, LADY GRIZEL, II. 311.
 BAILLIE, ROBERT, I. 516.
 BAIN, ALEXANDER, III. 407.
 BAKER, SIR R.—his Chronicle, I. 589.
 BAKER, SIR SAMUEL WHITE, III. 610.
 Balade of Charitie, by Chatterton, II. 512.
 Balder, by Sydney Dobell, III. 603.
 Balder Dead, by Matthew Arnold, III. 592.
 BALE, JOHN, I. 154.
 BALFOUR, EARL OF, III. 842.
 BALL, SIR ROBERT STAWELL, III. 841.
 Ball, by Shirley and Chapman, I. 486.
 Ballad, by C. S. Calverley, III. 639.
 Ballad of Agincourt, by Drayton, I. 341, 343.
 Ballad of East and West, by Rudyard Kipling, III. 708.
 Ballad of Good Counsel, by James I., I. 183.
 Ballad of the Revenge, by Tennyson, III. 542.
 Ballad Poetry of Ireland, by Sir C. G. Duffy, III. 579, 583.
 Ballad upon a Wedding, by Sir J. Suckling, I. 631.
 Ballade of the Scottyshe Kynge, by John Skelton, I. 115.
 Ballades in Blue China, by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 Ballades of Books, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 Ballads, I. 520.
 Ballads, Ancient Spanish, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250.
 Ballads, by John Davidson, III. 706.
 Ballads, 'Dagonet,' by G. R. Sims, III. 694.
 Ballads, Hans Breitmann, III. 784.
 Ballads, Poetry of Wonder in Romantic, III. 4.
 Ballads and Lyrics of Old France, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 Ballads and Metrical Sketches, by Lord de Tabley, III. 650.
 Ballads of Ireland, III. 579.
 BALLANTINE, JAMES, III. 377.
 BALLANTYNE, ROBERT MICHAEL, III. 623, 725.
 BANCROFT, GEORGE, III. 755.
 BANCROFT, HUBERT HOWE, III. 854.
 Bangorian Controversy, II. 42, 245.
 BANIM, JOHN, III. 353.
 BANIM, MICHAEL, III. 353.
 Banishment of Poverty, by Sempill, I. 819.
 Banker's Wife, by C. G. F. Gore, III. 279.
 Bankis of Helicon, by Alexander Montgomerie, I. 233.
 Banks o' Doon, by Burns, II. 825.
 BANNATYNE, RICHARD, I. 231.
 Barbarossa, by John Brown, II. 392.
 BARBAULD, ANNA LETITIA, II. 581.
 BARBELLION, W. N. P. (B. F. Cummings), III. 849.
 BARBOUR, JOHN, I. 166, 175.
 Barchester Towers, by A. Trollope, III. 487.
 BARCLAY, ALEXANDER, I. 116.
 BARCLAY, JOHN, I. 510.
 BARCLAY, ROBERT, II. 53.
 Bard, by Thomas Gray, II. 359, 364.
 Bardomachia, by Alex. Geddes, II. 799.
 Bard's Epitaph, by Burns, II. 821.
 Barefoot Boy, by Whittier, III. 775.
 BARHAM, RICHARD HARRIS, III. 166.
 BARING-GOULD, SABINE, III. 664.
 BARKER, GRANVILLE, III. 847.
 BARLOW, JANE, III. 851.
 BARLOW, JOEL, III. 736, 743.
 Barnabæ Itinerarium, or Barnabee's Journal, by Brathwaite, I. 488.
 Barnaby Rudge, by Dickens, III. 464.
 BARNARD, LADY ANNE, II. 803; III. 733.
 BARNES, BARNABE, I. 278.
 BARNES, WILLIAM, III. 412.
 Barneveld, Life of, by Motley, III. 816.
 Barney Mahoney, by C. Croker, III. 412.
 BARNFIELD, RICHARD, I. 399.
 Baron Munchausen, by Rudolf Erich Raspe, II. 714.
 BARR, ROBERT, III. 842.
 Barrack-Room Ballads, by Rudyard Kipling, III. 708.
 BARRIE, SIR JAMES MATTHEW, III. 705, 722.
 Barriers Burned Away, by Roe, III. 825.
 BARROW, ISAAC, I. 757.
 BARROW, SIR JOHN, II. 754.
 BARRY, WILLIAM FRANCIS, III. 842.
 Barry Lyndon, by Thackeray, III. 456.

- Bartholomew Fair, by Ben Jonson, I. 404.
 BARTON, BERNARD, III. 230.
 Bas Bleu, by Hannah More, II. 577, 579.
 Basilicon Doron, by James I., I. 506.
 Bastard, by Richard Savage, II. 283.
 Battle Day, by Ernest Jones, III. 505.
 Battle Hymn of the Republic, by Julia Ward Howe, III. 827.
 Battle of Beal' an Duine, by Scott, III. 37.
 Battle of Blenheim, by Southey, III. 52.
 Battle of Otterburn, ballad, I. 537.
 Battle of the Baltic, by Campbell, II. 766, 769.
 Battle of the Books, by Swift, II. 123, 126, 139.
 Battlefield, by Bryant, III. 753, 755.
 Baviad, by William Gifford, II. 667.
 BAXTER, ARTHUR BEVERLEY, III. 726.
 BAXTER, RICHARD, I. 664.
 Bay Leaves, by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
 Bay of Biscay, by Andrew Cherry, II. 758.
 Bay Psalm Book, III. 734.
 BAYLY, ADA ELLEN (Edna Lyall), III. 851.
 BAYLY, THOMAS HAYNES, III. 241.
 BAYNTON, BARBARA, III. 851.
 Beachy Head, by Charlotte Smith, II. 593.
 BEACONSFIELD, LORD, III. 435.
 Beating of my Own Heart, by Lord Houghton, III. 382.
 BEATTIE, JAMES, II. 525.
 Beau Austin, by Henley and Stevenson, III. 695, 699.
 Beauchamp's Career, by Meredith, III. 658.
 BEAUMONT, FRANCIS, I. 468.
 BEAUMONT, SIR JOHN, I. 448.
 Beaux' Stratagem, by Farquhar, II. 90.
 BEAZLEY, SIR CHARLES RAYMOND, III. 847.
 Bechuana Boy, by Thomas Pringle, II. 790.
 BECKE, LOUIS, III. 730.
 Becket, by Tennyson, III. 542.
 BECKFORD, WILLIAM, II. 620.
 BEDDOES, THOMAS LOVELL, III. 237.
 BEDE, CUTHBERT (Rev. Edward Bradley), III. 624.
 'BEDE, THE VENERABLE,' I. 18.
 Bedouin Love-Song, by Bayard Taylor, III. 822.
 Bee, by Goldsmith, II. 479, 490.
 BEECHER, HENRY WARD, III. 813.
 BEECHING, HENRY CHARLES, III. 844.
 BEERBOHM, MAX, III. 847.
 BEESLY, EDWARD SPENCER, III. 840.
 Beggar Man, by Thomas Moss, II. 617.
 Beggar's Opera, by Gay, II. 173, 175.
 BEHN, APHRA, II. 68.
 Being and Attributes of God, by Samuel Clarke, II. 160.
 BEITH, JOHN HAY, III. 847.
 BELASCO, DAVID, III. 855.
 Beleaguered City, by Mrs Oliphant, III. 538.
 Belford Regis, by Mary Russell Mitford, III. 177.
 Belgium and Western Germany, by Frances Trollope, III. 276.
 BELL, HENRY GLASSFORD, III. 415.
 BELL, HENRY THOMAS MACKENZIE, III. 843.
 BELLAMY, EDWARD, III. 831.
 BELLENDEN, JOHN, I. 215.
 BELLOC, HILAIRE, III. 847.
 Bells, by E. A. Poe, III. 786, 787.
 Bells and Pomegranates, by R. Browning, III. 553, 562.
 Belshazzar, by H. H. Milman, III. 208, 211.
 Belvedere, or the Garden of the Muses, I. 258.
 Ben Hur, by Lew Wallace, III. 823.
 Bending of the Bough, by G. Moore, III. 707.
 BENÉT, STEPHEN VINCENT, III. 856.
 BENNETT, ARNOLD, III. 712, 719.
 BENNETT, WILLIAM COX, III. 548.
 BENSON, ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER, III. 845.
 BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC, III. 846.
 BENSON, STELLA, III. 852.
 BENTHAM, JEREMY, II. 700.
 Benthamiana, by John Hill Burton, III. 398.
 Bentinck, Life of Lord George, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 438, 440.
 BENTLEY, RICHARD, II. 105.
 Beowulf, I. 4, 5; trans. by William Morris, III. 665.
 Beppo, by Lord Byron, III. 129, 132.
 BERESFORD, JAMES, II. 740.
 BERESFORD, JOHN DAVYS, III. 847.
 BERKELEY, GEORGE, II. 265.
 Bermudas, Emigrants in the, by Marvell, I. 712.
 BERNERS, DAME JULIANA, I. 99.
 BERNERS, LORD, I. 103.
 BESANT, MRS ANNIE, III. 850.
 BESANT, SIR WALTER, III. 650.
 Besom Ben Stories, by E. Waugh, III. 492.
 Bessy Bell and Mary Gray, by Ramsay, II. 315.
 Beth Gélert, by W. R. Spencer, II. 740.
 BETHAM-EDWARDS, MATILDA BARNARD, III. 850.
 Betsy Lee, by Thos. E. Brown, III. 634.
 Bevis of Hampton, I. 51.
 Bewick (Thomas), by Dobson, III. 688.
 Beyond the Veil, by H. Vaughan, I. 682, 684.
 Bible, Brown's Self-interpreting, II. 646.
 Bible, Catholic Thoughts on the, by Myers, III. 691.
 Bible, Matthew's, I. 132; Cranmer's, I. 132; Geneva, I. 133, 134; 'Bishops', I. 133, 134, 242; Douay, I. 133; Tyndale's, I. 129, 134; Coverdale's, I. 131, 134; Great, I. 132, 139; of 1611, I. 252.
 Bible, Pictorial, by John Kitto, III. 374.
 Bible, The English, I. 128.
 Bible in Spain, by Borrow, III. 430, 432.
 BICKERSTAFFE, ISAAC, II. 400.
 BIERCE, AMBROSE, III. 832.
 BIGELOW, POULINEY, III. 854.
 Biglow Papers, by J. R. Lowell, III. 801, 802, 803.
 BILLINGS, JOSH (H. W. Shaw), III. 835.
 Billow and the Rock, by Harriet Martineau, III. 388.
 BINYON, LAURENCE, III. 713, 722.
 Biographia Britannica Literaria, by Thomas Wright, III. 411.
 Biographia Literaria, by Coleridge, III. 61, 63, 70.
 Biographia Presbyteriana, by P. Walker, II. 101.
 Biographical and Critical Essays, by Abraham Hayward, III. 327.
 Biographical History of England, by James Granger, II. 388.
 Biography, Contemporary, by Bryce, III. 687.
 Biography, Dictionary of National, III. 662, 707.
 BIRD, ROBERT MONTGOMERY, III. 853.
 Birks of Invermay, by D. Mallet, II. 330.
 BIRRELL, AUGUSTINE, III. 842.
 Birth of Balder, by Buchanan, III. 656.
 Birth of Merlin, by Rowley, I. 478.
 Birth-night Ball, Elegy on the, by Catherine Maria Fanshawe, II. 739.
 BISHOP, MRS ISABELLA L., III. 850.
 BISHOP, SAMUEL, II. 533.
 Bishops of Scotland, Catalogue of the, by Robert Keith, II. 305.
 Bit o' Writin', by John Banim, III. 354.
 Bitter-Sweet, by J. G. Holland, III. 778.
 BLACK, WILLIAM, III. 691.
 Black Arrow, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 690.
 Black Rock, by Ralph Connor, III. 728.
 Black-eyed Susan, by John Gay, II. 174, 176; by Douglas Jerrold, III. 328.
 BLACKIE, JOHN STUART, III. 490.
 BLACKLOCK, THOMAS, II. 438.
 BLACKMORE, RICHARD DODDRIDGE, III. 622.
 BLACKMORE, SIR RICHARD, I. 732; II. 107.
 BLACKSTONE, SIR WILLIAM, II. 438.
 BLACKWOOD, ALGERNON, III. 847.
 BLAIR, HUGH, II. 534.
 BLAIR, ROBERT, II. 305.
 Blake, Robert, by Hepworth Dixon, III. 578.
 BLAKE, WILLIAM, II. 717; III. 6.
 Blake (William), a Critical Essay, by Swinburne, III. 671.
 BLAMIRE, SUSANNA, II. 801.
 BLANCHARD, EDWARD LAMAN, III. 331.
 BLANCHARD, LAMAN, III. 331.
 Blank Verse introduced by Surrey, I. 162.
 Bleak House, by Dickens, III. 465.
 Blessed Damozel, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 641, 643.
 BLESSINGTON, THE COUNTESS OF, III. 278.
 BLIND, MATHILDE, III. 850.
 Blind Beggar of Alexandria, by Chapman, I. 377.
 Blind Beggar of Bednal Green, by John Day, I. 420.
 Blind Boy, by T. G. Hake, III. 384.
 BLIND HARRY, I. 166, 186.
 Blithedale Romance, by Hawthorne, III. 781.
 BLOOMFIELD, ROBERT, II. 687.
 Blot in the 'Scutcheon, by R. Browning, III. 553, 559.
 Blue Fairy Book, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 Blue-beard, by Reginald Heber, III. 213.
 BLUNDEN, EDMUND CHARLES, III. 849.
 BLUNT, WILFRID SCAWEN, III. 691.
 Blythsome Bridal, by Sempill, I. 819.
 Bob Burke's Duel, by William Maginn, III. 260, 261.
 BODLEY, J. T. C., III. 843.
 BOECE, HECTOR, I. 212.
 Boer War, by Sir Conan Doyle, III. 707.
 Boethius's De Consolatione Philosophiae, trans. by Elfric, I. 21; trans. by Chaucer, I. 63, 82.
 BOKER, GEORGE HENRY, III. 853.
 BOLDREWOOD, ROLF (T. A. Brown), III. 730, 732.
 BOLINGBROKE, LORD, HENRY ST JOHN, II. 202.
 Bombastes Furioso, by Rhodes, II. 710.
 Bon Gaultier Ballads, III. 476, 477.
 Bonduca, by Fletcher, I. 468, 471.
 Book of Days, by R. Chambers, III. 316.
 Book of Martyrs, Foxe's, I. 251.
 Book of Nonsense, by E. Lear, III. 657.
 Book of Pluscarden, I. 208.
 Book of St Albans, by Dame Juliana Berners, I. 99.
 Book of the Beginnings, by G. Massey, III. 608.
 Book of the Native, by Sir C. G. D. Roberts, III. 728.
 Book-Hunter, by J. H. Burton, III. 398.
 Books and Bookmen, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 Books and Libraries, by Lowell, III. 805.
 BOORDE, ANDREW, I. 148.
 BOOTH, BARTON, II. 290.
 BOOTHBY, GUY, III. 730.
 Border Minstrelsy, by Scott, III. 7, 31, 33.
 Borough, by G. Crabbe, II. 694, 697.
 BORROW, GEORGE HENRY, III. 429.
 BOSTON, THOMAS, II. 302.
 BOSWELL, JAMES, II. 10, 468.
 BOSWELL, SIR ALEXANDER, II. 830.
 Botanic Garden, by Erasmus Darwin, II. 572, 573.
 Bothie of Tober-na-Vuolich, by A. H. Clough, III. 511.
 Bothwell, by A. C. Swinburne, III. 671.
 BOTTOMLEY, GORDON, III. 714, 722.
 BOUCICAULT, DION, III. 585.
 Bouquet of Dainty Conceits, I. 257.
 BOURINOT, SIR JOHN GEORGE, III. 726, 727.
 BOWDLER, THOMAS, II. 753.
 BOWER, ARCHIBALD, II. 387.
 BOWER, WALTER, I. 182.
 BOWES-LYON, LILIAN, III. 852.
 BOWLES, CAROLINE ANNE (Mrs Southey), III. 55.
 BOWLES, WILLIAM LISLE, II. 721.
 Bow-Meeting Songs, by Reginald Heber, III. 213.
 BOWRING, SIR JOHN, III. 271.
 BOYD, ANDREW KENNEDY HUTCHISON, III. 624.
 BOYD, ZACHARY, I. 514.
 Boy David, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 BOYES, ABEL, II. 387.
 BOYLE, ROBERT, I. 720.
 BOYLE, ROGER, I. 787.
 Boyne Water, by Michael and John Banim, III. 353.
 Bracebridge Hall, by Irving, III. 745, 746.
 BRACKEN, THOMAS, III. 729.
 BRACTON, HENRY DE, I. 34.
 BRADDON, MARY ELIZABETH, III. 690.
 BRADLEY, ANDREW CECIL, III. 707.
 BRADLEY, EDWARD, III. 624.
 BRADLEY, FRANCIS HERBERT, III. 703.
 BRADLEY, KATHARINE H. ('Michael Field'), III. 704.
 BRADY, NICHOLAS, II. 60.
 Braes o' Balquhither, by Tannahill, II. 829.
 Braes o' Gleniffer, by Tannahill, II. 829.
 Braes of Yarrow, by W. Hamilton, II. 310; by John Logan, II. 532.
 Braid-Clait, by Robert Fergusson, II. 806.
 Bramble Flower, To the, by Ebenezer Elliot, III. 232.
 BRAMSTON, JAMES, II. 209.
 BRATHWAITE, RICHARD, I. 488.
 Brave New World, by Aldous Huxley, III. 716.
 Bravo of Venice, by Lewis, II. 748, 749.
 BRAY, MRS, III. 279.
 Bread-Winners, III. 825.
 Break, break, break, by Tennyson, III. 541, 545.
 Bredfield Hall, by E. FitzGerald, III. 428.
 BREITMANN, HANS. See LELAND.
 BRETON, NICHOLAS, I. 275.
 BREWSTER, SIR DAVID, III. 242.
 Bric-à-brac, by W. E. Henley, III. 605.
 Bridal, by Tennyson, III. 540, 543.
 Bride of Lammermoor, by Scott, III. 30, 31.
 Bride's Tragedy, by T. L. Beddoes, III. 237.
 Bridge of Sighs, by Hood, III. 138.
 BRIDGES, ROBERT, III. 693, 722.
 BRIDIE, JAMES (Dr O. H. Mavor), III. 848.
 Brief Discourse concerning the Different Wits of Men, by Walter Charleton, I. 744.

- Brief History of the Times, by L'Estrange, I. 741, 743.
 Brigadier Gerard, by Sir Conan Doyle, III. 707.
 BRIGHT, JOHN, III. 839.
 Bristowe Tragedie, by Chatterton, II. 513.
 Britannia, by Camden, I. 268.
 Britannia's Pastorals, by William Browne, I. 489, 490.
 British Georgics, by Grahame, II. 689, 690.
 British India, History of, by James Mill, II. 757.
 British Painters, Lives of, by Allan Cunningham, III. 303.
 British Palæozoic Fossils, by Sedgwick, III. 202.
 British Poets, Specimens of the, by Campbell, II. 766.
 British Prison-ship, by P. Freneau, III. 736.
 British Quarterly founded, III. 271.
 Broad Grins, by Colman, II. 656, 659-661.
 BROKE, ARTHUR, I. 237, 263.
 Broken Heart, by John Ford, I. 481, 482.
 BROME, RICHARD, I. 487.
 BRONTË, ANNE, III. 526.
 BRONTË, CHARLOTTE, III. 520.
 BRONTË, EMILY JANE, III. 525.
 Brontë, Emily, by Mme. Duclaux, III. 704.
 Brontë, Life of Charlotte, by Mrs Gaskell, III. 527.
 Brook Farm, III. 777, 778, 781.
 BROOKE, CHARLOTTE, II. 396.
 BROOKE, HENRY, II. 396.
 BROOKE, LORD, I. 354.
 BROOKE, RUPERT, III. 848.
 BROOKE, STOPFORD AUGUSTUS, III. 662.
 BROOKS, C. W. SHIRLEY, III. 492.
 BROOKS, PHILLIPS, III. 825.
 BROOKS, VAN WYCK, III. 836.
 BROOME, WILLIAM, II. 199.
 Brothers, by Wordsworth, III. 16.
 BROUGHAM, LORD, III. 189.
 BROUGHTON, RHODA, III. 690.
 BROWN, CHARLES BROCKDEN, III. 743.
 BROWN, DR JOHN, III. 449.
 BROWN, GEORGE DOUGLAS, III. 847.
 BROWN, JOHN, II. 391.
 BROWN, JOHN, of Haddington, II. 646.
 BROWN, PETER HUME, III. 842.
 BROWN, THOMAS, II. 761.
 BROWN, THOMAS EDWARD, III. 634.
 BROWN, TOM, II. 78.
 Brown Jug, by Francis Fawkes, II. 421.
 BROWNE, CHARLES FARRAR, III. 826.
 BROWNE, ISAAC HAWKINS, II. 287.
 BROWNE, SIR THOMAS, I. 590.
 BROWNE, THOMAS ALEXANDER, III. 732.
 BROWNE, WILLIAM, I. 489.
 BROWNELL, WILLIAM CRARY, III. 854.
 Brownie of Blednoch, by William Nicholson, III. 306.
 BROWNING, ELIZABETH BARRETT, III. 549, 557.
 BROWNING, OSCAR, III. 840.
 BROWNING, ROBERT, III. 9, 549, 558.
 BRUCE, JAMES, II. 649.
 BRUCE, MICHAEL, II. 528.
 Bruce, by Barbour, I. 176.
 Bruce, by John Davidson, III. 706.
 Brunanburh, Battle of, I. 23, 26.
 BRUNTON, MARY, II. 772.
 Brut, by Layamon, I. 3, 35.
 Brut d'Angleterre, by Wace, I. 35.
 Brutus Ultor, by Michael Field, III. 704.
 BRYANT, JACOB, II. 391.
 BRYANT, WILLIAM CULLEN, III. 753.
 BRYCE, GEORGE, III. 726.
 BRYCE, LORD, III. 680.
 BRYDGES, SIR SAMUEL EGERTON, II. 714.
 Brythonic Invasion of England, I. 2, 831.
 Bubbles from the Brunnens of Nassau, by Sir Francis Bond Head, III. 266.
 Bubbles of the Day, by Douglas Jerrold, III. 328, 329.
 Buccaneer, by Mrs S. C. Hall, III. 280.
 BUCHAN, ANNA, III. 852.
 BUCHAN, JOHN, III. 847.
 BUCHANAN, GEORGE, I. 166, 222.
 BUCHANAN, ROBERT, III. 655.
 BUCKINGHAM, DUKE OF (George Villiers), I. 788.
 BUCKINGHAM, DUKE OF (John Sheffield), II. 106.
 BUCKINGHAM, JAMES SILK, III. 224.
 BUCKLAND, FRANCIS TREVELYAN, III. 590.
 BUCKLE, HENRY THOMAS, III. 611.
 BUDGELL, EUSTACE, II. 242.
 Budget of Paradoxes, by A. de Morgan, III. 308.
 Bulk of Alexander, by Barbour (?), I. 178.
 Buke of the Howlat, by Holland, I. 174.
 Bull, John, by Arbuthnot, II. 145; by Colman, II. 656.
 BULLEN, ARTHUR HENRY, III. 844.
 BULLEN, FRANK THOMAS, III. 844.
 Bulletin School, III. 729.
 BULWER, EDWARD. See LYTTON, LORD.
 BULWER, HENRY LYTTON, III. 336.
 Buncle, John, by Thomas Amory, II. 280.
 Bundle of Letters, by Henry James, III. 830.
 BUNNER, HENRY CUYLER, III. 855.
 BUNYAN, JOHN, I. 719, 734.
 BURCKHARDT, JOHN LEWIS, III. 266.
 Burden of Nineveh, by Rossetti, III. 643.
 Bürger's Lenore, trans. by Taylor, II. 712.
 BURGHCLERE, LADY, III. 851.
 BURGIN, GEORGE B., III. 843.
 BURGOYNE, GENERAL, II. 670.
 Burial March of Dundee, by W. E. Aytoun, III. 476.
 Burial of Sir John Moore, by Charles Wolfe, II. 788, 789.
 BURKE, EDMUND, II. 543; Life of, by Morley, III. 686.
 BURNAND, SIR FRANCIS COWLEY, III. 694.
 BURNET, DR THOMAS, II. 28.
 BURNET, GILBERT, II. 30.
 BURNETT, FRANCES HODGSON, III. 833.
 BURNEY, FANNY (Madame D'Arblay), II. 586; Life of, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 Burning Babe, by Southwell, I. 337, 338.
 BURNS, ROBERT, II. 814; III. 6; Life and Works of, by Robert Chambers, III. 316; Life of, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250; ed. by Henley and Henderson, III. 695; To the Memory of, by Campbell, II. 771; by Sir A. Boswell, II. 832; Wordsworth on, III. 28.
 Burnt Njal, Saga of, trans. by Sir G. W. Dasent, III. 499.
 BURROUGHS, JOHN, III. 824.
 BURTON, JOHN HILL, III. 398.
 BURTON, ROBERT, I. 435.
 BURTON, SIR RICHARD FRANCIS, III. 609; Life of, by Lady Burton, III. 610.
 BURY, JOHN B., III. 845.
 BURY, LADY CHARLOTTE, II. 772.
 BURY, RICHARD DE, I. 34.
 Bush aboon Traquair, by R. Crawford, II. 317.
 Bush Ballads, by A. L. Gordon, III. 731.
 BUTLER, JOSEPH, II. 269.
 BUTLER, SAMUEL, I. 731, 735.
 BUTLER, SAMUEL, III. 624, 730.
 BUTLER, SIR WILLIAM FRANCIS, III. 841.
 Bylow Hill, by G. W. Cable, III. 830.
 By Proxy, by James Payn, III. 634.
 BYRD, WILLIAM, III. 735.
 BYROM, JOHN, II. 278.
 BYRON, HENRY JAMES, III. 637.
 BYRON, LORD, III. 8, 118; Life of, by Moore, III. 347; by Henry Lytton Bulwer, III. 336; Conversations with, by the Countess of Blessington, III. 278.
 BYSSET, ABRAHAM, I. 231.
 Byzantine Empire, by G. Finlay, III. 217.
 Ca' the Yowes to the Knowes, by Isobel Pagan, II. 810.
 Cabbages and Kings, by O. Henry (W. S. Porter), III. 833.
 CABELL, JAMES BRANCH, III. 836.
 CABLE, GEORGE WASHINGTON, III. 829.
 Cadenus and Vanessa, by Swift, II. 128.
 CÆDMON, I. 9, 12.
 Cæsar, a Sketch, by J. A. Froude, III. 502.
 CAFFYN, KATHLEEN MANNINGTON, III. 851.
 CAINE, SIR HALL, III. 843.
 CAIRD, EDWARD, III. 625.
 CAIRD, JOHN, III. 625.
 CAIRD, MRS MONA, III. 851.
 Calamus, by Walt Whitman, III. 807.
 CALAMY, EDMUND, I. 586.
 CALDERWOOD, DAVID, I. 513.
 Caleb Stukely, by Samuel Phillips, III. 482.
 Caleb Williams, by W. Godwin, II. 702, 704.
 Caledonia, by George Chalmers, II. 636.
 Call to the Unconverted, by Baxter, I. 665.
 Caller Herrin', by Lady Nairne, II. 828.
 Callirrhœe, by Michael Field, III. 704.
 Callista, by John Henry Newman, III. 337.
 CALVERLEY, CHARLES STUART, III. 638.
 CAMBRIDGE, ADA, III. 730, 732.
 Cambridge Modern History, planned by Lord Acton, III. 684, 718.
 CAMDEN, WILLIAM, I. 268.
 CAMERON, GEORGE FREDERICK, III. 726.
 Cameronian's Dream, by J. Hyslop, III. 310.
 Camoens, trans. by W. J. Mickle, II. 522, 524; by Sir R. F. Burton, III. 610.
 Campaign, by Addison, I. 213, 216.
 Campaspe, by Lyly, I. 315.
 CAMPBELL, DR JOHN, II. 387.
 CAMPBELL, GEORGE, II. 427.
 CAMPBELL, JAMES DYKES, III. 841.
 CAMPBELL, JOHN FRANCIS, III. 585.
 CAMPBELL, LEWIS, III. 661.
 CAMPBELL, LORD, III. 191.
 CAMPBELL, ROY DUNNACHIE, III. 733, 849.
 CAMPBELL, THOMAS, II. 765.
 CAMPBELL, WILLIAM WILFRED, III. 726, 728.
 CAMPION, THOMAS, I. 274, 400.
 Canada, English Literature in, III. 725.
 Canada, History of, by W. Kingsford, III. 727.
 Canada, Old Régime in, by Parkman, III. 818.
 Canada, Political Destiny of, by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
 Canada's Intellectual Strength and Weakness, by Bourinot, III. 727.
 Canadian Boat Song, III. 298, 725.
 CANFIELD, DOROTHY (Dorothea Frances Canfield Fisher), III. 834.
 CANNAN, GILBERT, III. 848.
 CANNING, GEORGE, II. 672.
 Canoe and Saddle, by Winthrop, III. 823.
 Canterbury, Historical Memorials of, by A. P. Stanley, III. 394.
 Canterbury Tales, by Chaucer, I. 62, 64, 68, 70, 71-74, 81; fac-simile, I. 73.
 Canterbury Tales, by Sophia and Harriet Lee, II. 653, 654.
 Canute the Great, by Michael Field, III. 704.
 Cape Cod, by H. D. Thoreau, III. 796.
 CAPES, BERNARD, III. 847.
 CAPGRAVE, JOHN, I. 89.
 Captain Digby Grand, by G. J. Whyte-Melville, III. 585.
 Captain Macklin, by R. H. Davis, III. 832.
 Captain Masters's Children, by T. Hood, III. 668.
 Captain's Toll-gate, by F. R. Stockton, III. 824.
 Caractacus, by William Mason, II. 426, 427.
 Cardiphonia, by John Newton, II. 614.
 Careless Content, by John Byrom, II. 279.
 Carew, Lady Elizabeth. See CAREY, LADY ELIZABETH.
 CAREW, RICHARD, I. 353.
 CAREW, THOMAS, I. 568.
 CAREY, HENRY, II. 330.
 CAREY, HENRY CHARLES, III. 853.
 CAREY, LADY ELIZABETH, I. 490.
 CAREY, SIR ROBERT, I. 396.
 Carissima, by Mrs Harrison, III. 704.
 CARLETON, WILLIAM, III. 852.
 CARLYLE, ALEXANDER, II. 414; his autobiography, II. 414.
 CARLYLE, DR JOHN, III. 402.
 CARLYLE, THOMAS, III. 401.
 Carlyle, Letters and Memorials of Jane Welsh, III. 404, 405.
 Carlyle, Letters to Mrs, by G. E. Jewsbury, III. 520.
 Carlyle Personally and in his Writings, by Masson, III. 633.
 Carlyle's Reminiscences, by J. A. Froude, III. 502.
 CARMAN, WILLIAM BLISS, III. 726, 728.
 Carmina Votiva, by A. Dobson, III. 688.
 Carols from the Coalfields, by Skipsey, III. 608.
 CARPENTER, EDWARD, III. 841.
 CARR, JOSEPH WILLIAMS COMYNS, III. 842.
 CARRINGTON, NOEL THOMAS, II. 760.
 CARROLL, LEWIS (C. L. Dodgson), III. 648.
 CARRUTHERS, ROBERT, III. 315.
 CARTE, THOMAS, II. 244.
 CARTER, MRS ELIZABETH, II. 417.
 CARTON, R. C. (Richard Claude Critchett), III. 717.
 CARTWRIGHT, JULIA (Mrs Ady), III. 851.
 CARTWRIGHT, WILLIAM, I. 634.
 CARY, ALICE, III. 827.
 CARY, HENRY FRANCIS, II. 755.
 CARY, PHOEBE, III. 827.
 CARY (CAREY), SIR ROBERT, I. 396.
 Casaubon, by Mark Pattison, III. 480.
 Cash, Corn, and Catholics, Odes on, by Moore, III. 347, 349.
 Cashel Byron's Profession, by G. B. Shaw, III. 705.
 Castara, by William Habington, I. 571.
 Castaway, by Cowper, II. 602, 609.
 Caste, by T. W. Robertson, III. 637.
 Castell of Perseverance, Morality Play, I. 111.
 Casti's Animali Parlanti, trans. by William Stewart Rose, II. 760.
 CASTLE, EGERTON, III. 844.
 Castle of Indolence, by Thomson, II. 321, 326-328.

- Castle of Otranto, by Walpole, II. 411, 414.
 Castle Rackrent, by Maria Edgeworth, II. 735.
 Castle Spectre, by M. G. Lewis, II. 748.
 Catarina to Camoens, by E. B. Browning, III. 557, 560.
 Catechism, Archbishop Hamilton's, I. 218.
 Cathedral, by J. R. Lowell, III. 802.
 CATHER, WILLA SIBERT, III. 834.
 Catherine, by Thackeray, III. 455.
 Catholicism in England; Catholics, Present Position of, by John Henry Newman, III. 339.
 Catiline, by Ben Jonson, I. 402, 405.
 Cato, by Addison, II. 213, 217.
 Catriona, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699.
 Caudle's Curtain Lectures, Mrs, by Douglas Jerrold, III. 329.
 CAVE, EDWARD, II. 244.
 CAVENDISH, GEORGE, I. 140.
 CAXTON, WILLIAM, I. 95.
 Caxton's Successors, I. 101.
 Caxtons, by Lord Lytton, III. 332, 335.
 Cecil, by C. G. F. Gore, III. 279.
 Cecilia, by Fanny Burney, II. 587.
 Celestial Passion, by R. W. Gilder, III. 831.
 Celt, Roman, and Saxon, by Thomas Wright, III. 411.
 Celtic Influences on English Literature, I. 1, 831; III. 709.
 Celtic Languages, Divisions of, I. 2.
 Celtic Literature, On the Study of, by M. Arnold, III. 593, 598.
 Celtic Scotland by W. F. Skene, III. 399.
 Celtic Twilight, by W. B. Yeats, III. 709.
 Cenci, by P. B. Shelley, III. 109.
 CENTLIVRE, SUSANNAH, II. 96.
 Central Africa, by Bayard Taylor, III. 821.
 Centuries of Meditations, by T. Traherne, I. 776.
 Century After, by Stoddard, III. 823.
 Century Magazine, III. 778.
 Century of Roundels, by Swinburne, III. 674.
 Century of Science, by Fiske, III. 820.
 Cevennes, Travels with a Donkey in the, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 697.
 Ceylon, Eight Years' Wanderings in, by Sir S. W. Baker, III. 610.
 CHADWICK, JOHN WHITE, III. 854.
 CHAILLU, PAUL BELLONI DU, III. 840.
 Chaldee MS., III. 292.
 CHALKHILL, JOHN, I. 443.
 CHALMERS, GEORGE, II. 636.
 CHALMERS, THOMAS, III. 187.
 CHALONER, SIR THOMAS, I. 265.
 Chambered Nautilus, by O. W. Holmes, III. 792.
 CHAMBERLAYNE, WILLIAM, I. 744.
 CHAMBERS, CHARLES HADDON, III. 730, 845.
 CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM, III. 832.
 CHAMBERS, WILLIAM AND ROBERT, III. 315.
 Chambers's Cyclopædia of English Literature, I. preface; III. 315.
 Chambers's Encyclopædia, III. 315.
 Chambers's Journal, III. 285, 288, 315, 658, 678.
 Chameleon, by James Merrick, II. 420.
 CHAMIER, FREDERICK, III. 259.
 Chance, by Conrad, III. 711.
 Chance Acquaintances, by W. D. Howells, III. 829.
 Chancellors, Lives of the, by Lord Campbell, III. 191.
 Changeling, by T. Middleton, I. 459, 471.
 CHANNING, WILLIAM ELLERY, III. 743.
 Channings, by Mrs H. Wood, III. 520.
 Chansons de Geste, I. 37.
 CHAPMAN, GEORGE, I. 377.
 Chapman (George), a Critical Essay, by Swinburne, III. 674.
 CHAPONE, HESTER, II. 418.
 Chapter of Accidents, by Sophia Lee, II. 653.
 Character of a Trimmer, by the Marquis of Halifax, I. 756.
 Character of the Happy Warrior, by Wordsworth, III. 13, 16, 25.
 Characteristics, by Shaftesbury, II. 167, 168.
 Characters, Hall's, I. 417; Overbury's, I. 442; Earle's, I. 577.
 Charles I., Memoirs of the Court of, by Lucy Aikin, III. 178.
 Charles O'Malley, by Lever, III. 359, 362.
 Charles V., History of the Reign of, by William Robertson, II. 382, 383, 387; III. 766.
 Charles V., The Cloister Life of, by Sir W. Stirling-Maxwell, III. 499.
 CHARLETON, WALTER, I. 743.
 Chartism, by Carlyle, III. 404.
 Chase, by William Somerville, II. 300.
 Chastelard, by A. C. Swinburne, III. 670, 674.
 CHATHAM, THE EARL OF (WILLIAM PITT), II. 389.
 Chatham, Essay on the Earl of, by Macaulay, III. 371.
 CHATTERTON, THOMAS, II. 512; III. 6.
 CHAUCER, GEOFFREY, I. 50.
 Chaucer, Life of, by William Godwin, II. 702.
 Chaucer's Influence on Scottish Literature, I. 166, 504.
 Chaucer's Prose, I. 81.
 Chaucer's Successors, I. 76.
 Cheer, Boys! Cheer! by C. Mackay, III. 481.
 Cheerful Yesterdays, by T. W. Higginson, III. 811.
 CHEKE, SIR JOHN, I. 142.
 Chemical History of a Candle, by Faraday, III. 243.
 Cherrie and the Slae, by Alexander Montgomerie, I. 233.
 CHERRY, ANDREW, II. 758.
 Cherry Ripe, by Campion, I. 401; by Herrick, I. 561, 563.
 CHESNEY, SIR GEORGE TOMKYN, III. 840.
 Chess, Game of, by Caxton, I. 95.
 CHESTERFIELD, EARL OF, II. 291; Johnson's Letters to, II. 458.
 CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH, III. 711, 718, 724.
 CHETTER, HENRY, I. 334.
 CHEYNE, THOMAS KELLY, III. 841.
 Child, LYDIA MARIA, III. 757.
 Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, by Byron, III. 120, 121, 122, 126, 135.
 Childe-hood, by Henry Vaughan, I. 684.
 Child of Nature, by R. Buchanan, III. 656.
 Child of Quality, To a, by Matthew Prior, II. 115.
 Children of Adam, by Whitman, III. 806, 808.
 Child's Garden of Verse, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 698.
 CHILLINGWORTH, WILLIAM, I. 586.
 Chimney Corner, by E. Waugh, III. 492.
 Chimney-Sweeper, by Blake, II. 719.
 Chips from a German Workshop, by Max-Müller, III. 661.
 Chivalry and Romance, Letters on, by Richard Hurd, II. 428.
 Choice, by John Pomfret, II. 112.
 CHOLMONDELEY, MARY, III. 851.
 CHORLEY, HENRY FOTHERGILL, III. 273.
 Chris of all Sorts, by Baring-Gould, III. 664.
 Christabel, by Coleridge, III. 7, 58, 61, 65.
 Christiad, by Henry Kirke White, II. 729.
 Christian Doctrine, by Milton, I. 691.
 Christian Evidences, by Porteus, II. 646.
 Christian Hero, by Steele, II. 228.
 Christianity, Evidences of, by Paley, II. 643; by Baden Powell, III. 323.
 Christianity, Importance of, by Price, II. 428.
 Christianity, Practical View of, by William Wilberforce, II. 646.
 Christianity not Mysterious, by Toland, II. 161.
 Christian Poetry, Beginning of, I. 9.
 Christian Year, by John Keble, III. 215.
 CHRISTIE, ROBERT, III. 726.
 Christie Johnstone, by Reade, III. 483.
 Christmas, by G. Wither, I. 499, 501.
 Christopher North, Recreations of, by John Wilson, III. 247.
 Christ's Kirk on the Green. See CHRYSTIS KIRK OF THE GRENE.
 Christ's Victorie and Triumph, by Giles Fletcher, I. 446, 447.
 Chronicle of England, by Capgrave, I. 89.
 Chronicles and Romances, I. 42.
 Chronicles of Holinshed, I. 255.
 Chronologia Sacra, by Ussher, I. 441.
 Chrononhotonthologos the Great, by Henry Carey, II. 330, 331.
 Chrysal, by Johnstone, II. 410.
 Chrysaor, by Longfellow, III. 770, 771.
 Chrystis Kirk of the Grene, I. 210, 211; not by James I., I. 183; continuation of, by Allan Ramsay, II. 313, 316.
 CHUBB, THOMAS, II. 165.
 CHURCH, RICHARD WILLIAM, III. 577.
 Church Government, by Milton, I. 688, 704.
 CHURCHILL, CHARLES, II. 405.
 CHURCHILL, WINSTON, III. 832.
 CHURCHILL, Rt. Hon. WINSTON SPENCER, III. 714.
 CHURCHYARD, THOMAS, I. 265.
 CIBBER, COLLEY, II. 272.
 Cicero, Life of, by Middleton, II. 246.
 Cicero's Letters, trans. by Melmoth, II. 391.
 Cid and the Leper, by Lockhart, III. 251.
 Circle, by Somerset Maugham, III. 715.
 Cities of the Past, by F. P. Cobbe, III. 537.
 Citizen of the World, by Goldsmith, II. 479, 491-493.
 City: its Sins and Sorrows, by Thomas Guthrie, III. 342.
 City Dead-House, by Whitman, III. 816.
 City Madam, by Massinger, I. 464, 466.
 City Match, by Mayne, I. 633.
 City Mouse and Country Mouse, by Prior and Montagu, II. 113.
 City Night-Piece, by Goldsmith, II. 490.
 City of Dreadful Night, by James Thomson, III. 654, 655.
 City of the Plague, by John Wilson, III. 246.
 City of the Saints, by Sir R. F. Burton, III. 610.
 City Poems, by Alexander Smith, III. 604.
 Civil Liberty and the War with America, by Price, II. 428-430.
 Civil Society, Essay on, by Ferguson, II. 430.
 Civil War, Causes of the, by Motley, III. 815.
 Civil War and the Commonwealth, I. 542.
 Civil Wars between York and Lancaster, History of the, by S. Daniel, I. 339, 340.
 Civilisation, Origin of, by Lord Avebury, III. 664.
 Civilisation and Progress, by J. B. Crozier, III. 727.
 Civilisation in England, History of, by Buckle, III. 611.
 Clan Albin, by Christian Isobel Johnstone, II. 772.
 CLANVOWE, SIR THOMAS, I. 80.
 CLARE, JOHN, III. 233.
 CLARENDON, LORD, I. 652.
 Clarissa, by Richardson, II. 295, 297.
 CLARK, CHARLES HEBER, III. 825.
 CLARKE, EDWARD DANIEL, II. 714.
 CLARKE, FRANCES E. (Sarah Grand), III. 851.
 CLARKE, MARCUS, III. 730, 731.
 CLARKE, SAMUEL, II. 159.
 Clayhanger, by Arnold Bennett, III. 712.
 Cleanness, alliterative poem, I. 54, 174.
 Cleansing Fires, by Adelaide Ann Procter, III. 528.
 CLELAND, WILLIAM, I. 828.
 CLEMENS, SAMUEL LANGHORNE, III. 826.
 Clement Lorimer, by A. B. Reach, III. 505.
 Cleomenes, by Dryden, I. 796, 806, 807.
 CLERK OF TRARENT, I. 174.
 Clerk Saunders, I. 535.
 CLEVELAND, JOHN, I. 636.
 CLIFFORD, MRS W. K., III. 851.
 CLIFFORD, WILLIAM KINGDON, III. 841.
 Clockmaker, by T. C. Haliburton, III. 726.
 Cloister and the Hearth, by Reade, III. 483.
 Cloister Life of the Emperor Charles V., by Sir W. Stirling-Maxwell, III. 499.
 Cloud, by Shelley, III. 112.
 Cloud Confines, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 645.
 Cloudesley, by William Godwin, II. 703.
 CLOUGH, ARTHUR HUGH, III. 511.
 Clough Fionn, by Michael Banim, III. 353.
 Clovenook Papers, by Alice Cary, III. 827.
 Clyde, by John Wilson, II. 440.
 Clytemnestra, by the Earl of Lytton, III. 638.
 COBBE, FRANCES POWER, III. 536.
 COBBETT, WILLIAM, II. 681.
 Cobden, Life of, by Lord Morley, III. 686.
 Cock Lane and Common Sense, by A. Lang, III. 602.
 COCKBURN, HENRY, III. 313.
 COCKBURN, MRS, II. 796.
 Cockelbie's Sow, I. 209.
 COCKTON, HENRY, III. 490.
 Cœlebs in Search of a Wife, by Hannah More, II. 577, 579-581.
 Cœlum Britannicum, by T. Carew, I. 560.
 COFFEY, CHARLES, II. 338.
 Cola Monti, by Mrs Craik, III. 536.
 COLENZO, BISHOP, III. 452.
 COLERIDGE, ERNEST HARTLEY, III. 842.
 COLERIDGE, HARTLEY, III. 72.
 COLERIDGE, MARY E., III. 851.
 COLERIDGE, SAMUEL TAYLOR, III. 7, 56.
 COLERIDGE, SARA, III. 72.
 COLET, JOHN, I. 120.
 Colin and Lucy, by T. Tickell, II. 251, 252.
 Colin and Phebe, by John Byrom, II. 279.
 Colin Clout's come Home again, by Spenser, I. 294, 296, 301.
 Colin's Complaint, by N. Rowe, II. 95.
 Collar, by George Herbert, I. 407.
 Colleen Bawn, by Dion Boucicault, III. 357, 585.
 Collegians, by Gerald Griffin, III. 357.
 COLLIER, JEREMY, I. 734; II. 47.
 Collier Lad, by Joseph Skipsey, III. 608.
 COLLINS, ANTHONY, II. 163.
 COLLINS, JOHN, II. 708.

- COLLINS, JOHN CHURTON, III. 842.
 COLLINS, MORTIMER, III. 632.
 COLLINS, WILLIAM, II. 11, 367; III. 5.
 COLLINS, WILLIAM WILKIE, III. 620.
 COLMAN, GEORGE, 'The Elder,' II. 561.
 COLMAN, GEORGE, 'The Younger,' II. 656.
 Colonel Enderby's Wife, by Mrs Harrison, III. 704.
 Colonel Jacque, History of, by Defoe, II. 151, 154.
 Colour of Life, by Alice Meynell, III. 704.
 COLQUHOUN, JOHN, III. 839.
 COLTON, CHARLES CALER, III. 172.
 Columbiad, by Joel Barlow, III. 736, 743.
 Columbus, Life of, by Washington Irving, III. 745, 746.
 COLVIN, SIR SIDNEY, III. 693, 697.
 Colyn Cloute, by John Skelton, I. 114, 116.
 COMBE, GEORGE, III. 265.
 COMBE, WILLIAM, II. 661.
 Come under my plaidie, by Hector Macneill, II. 802.
 Come whom to the childer an' me, by E. Waugh, III. 492.
 Comedy of Errors, by Shakespeare, I. 358.
 Cometh up as a Flower, by Miss Broughton, III. 690.
 Coming of Love, by Watts-Dunton, III. 668.
 Coming of the Messiah, by Edward Irving, III. 268.
 Commemoration Ode, by J. R. Lowell, III. 802, 804.
 Commentaries, Blackstone's, II. 439.
 Commentary on the Bible, by Matthew Henry, II. 60.
 Commercial Discourses, by Thomas Chalmers, III. 188.
 Common Lot, by Montgomery, II. 744.
 Common Sense, by Paine, II. 559.
 Commonwealth, History of the, by Godwin, II. 703; by Sir F. Palgrave, III. 265.
 Commonwealth and Protectorate, by S. R. Gardiner, III. 631.
 Companion, edited by Leigh Hunt, III. 148.
 Companions of my Solitude, by Sir A. Helps, III. 478.
 Complaint of Deor, I. 4, 5.
 Complaint of Nature, by J. Logan, II. 531.
 Complaints, by Spenser, I. 295.
 Complaynt of Scotlande, I. 214.
 Complaynt to the King, by Sir David Lyndsay, I. 205.
 Compleat Angler, by Izaak Walton, I. 613, 616.
 Complaynt of Mars, by Chaucer, I. 62.
 Complaynt to his Purs, by Chaucer, I. 66.
 Compromise, by Lord Morley, III. 686.
 Comte and Positivism, by Mill, III. 443.
 Comte's Positive Philosophy, trans. by Harriet Martineau, III. 389.
 Comus, by Milton, I. 687, 688, 694, 695.
 Conary, by Sir Samuel Ferguson, III. 362.
 Conciliation with America, by Burke, II. 544, 545.
 Concordance of Histories, by Robert Fabyan, I. 105.
 Condé, Life of, by Stanhope, III. 374.
 Condensed Novels, by Bret Harte, III. 827, 828.
 Conduct of the Understanding, by Locke, II. 18.
 Confessio Amantis, of John Gower, I. 35, 74.
 Confessions of a Fanatic, III. 202.
 Confessions of an Inquiring Spirit, by Coleridge, III. 62, 63, 71.
 Confessions of an Opium-Eater, by De Quincey, III. 93.
 Confessions of a Thug, by Meadows Taylor, III. 415.
 Conflict, by Miss Braddon, III. 690.
 CONGREVE, WILLIAM, II. 82; Life of, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
 Coningsby, by Beaconsfield, III. 437, 438.
 CONINGTON, JOHN, III. 634.
 Connaught, A Tour in, by Caesar Otway, III. 345.
 CONNELLY, MARC, III. 722, 856.
 CONNOR, RALPH (Charles William Gordon), III. 728.
 Conquest of Granada, by Dryden, I. 797, 806, 807, 814; by Washington Irving, III. 745, 746.
 Conquest of Syria, Persia, and Egypt, by Simon Ockley, II. 211.
 CONRAD, JOSEPH, III. 711, 710, 721.
 Conscious Lovers, by Sir R. Steele, II. 229.
 Consolation for Catholics, by Southwell, I. 337.
 Consolations in Travel, by Sir Humphry Davy, II. 761, 763.
 Conspiracy of Pontiac, by Parkman, III. 818.
 CONSTABLE, HENRY, I. 278.
 Constant Wife, by Somerset Maugham, III. 715.
 Constitution of England, by Jean Louis De Lolme, II. 541.
 Constitution of Man, by Combe, III. 265.
 Contarini Fleming, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 435.
 Contemplation, by Richard Gifford, II. 441.
 Contemporary Thought and Thinkers, by R. H. Hutton, III. 632.
 Content, Hymn to, by Mrs Barbauld, II. 583.
 Contentment of Ajax and Ulysses, by Shirley, I. 487.
 Convention of Cintra, by Wordsworth, III. 14, 17, 28.
 Conversation, by Cowper, II. 603, 605.
 Conversations with Lord Byron, by the Countess of Blessington, III. 278.
 Conversations with some of the Old Poets, by J. R. Lowell, III. 801.
 Convict Once, by J. B. Stephens, III. 732.
 Convict Ship, by Clark Russell, III. 691.
 CONWAY, MONCURE DANIEL, III. 854.
 CONWAY, WILLIAM MARTIN, BARON, III. 844.
 COOK, ELIZA, III. 528.
 COOKE, JOHN ESTEN, III. 853.
 COOKE, THOMAS, II. 290.
 COOLIDGE, SUSAN (Sarah Chauncey Woolsey), III. 836.
 COOPER, ANTHONY ASHLEY. See SHAFTESBURY, EARL OF.
 COOPER, EDITH EMMA ('Michael Field'), III. 704.
 COOPER, JAMES FENIMORE, III. 750.
 COOPER, THOMAS, III. 376.
 Cooper's Hill, by Sir J. Denham, I. 639.
 Copperhead, by Harold Frederic, III. 832.
 Coral Island, by Ballantyne, III. 624.
 CORBET, RICHARD, I. 456.
 CORELLI, MARIE, III. 850.
 Corinna's going a-Maying, by Herrick, I. 563.
 Coriolanus, by Shakespeare, I. 371.
 Corn, by Sidney Lanier, III. 825.
 Corn-law Rhymes, by Ebenezer Elliott, III. 231, 233.
 CORNWALL, BARRY (Bryan Waller Procter), III. 227.
 Cornwall, Footsteps of Former Men in, by R. S. Hawker, III. 381.
 Cornwall, Survey of, by R. Carew, I. 353.
 Coronach, from The Lady of the Lake, III. 37.
 Coronation, On the, by Dryden, I. 792.
 Corruptions of Christianity, by Priestley, II. 540.
 Corsica, by Boswell, II. 468, 469.
 CORY, WILLIAM JOHNSON, III. 576.
 CORVATE, THOMAS, I. 452; Coryat's Crudities, I. 452.
 COSTELLO, LOUISA STUART, III. 324.
 COTES, MRS EVERARD, III. 726.
 Cottagers of Glenburnie, by Elizabeth Hamilton, II. 808, 809.
 COTTON, CHARLES, I. 613, 616, 731, 774.
 COTTON, NATHANIEL, II. 532.
 COTTON, SIR ROBERT BRUCE, I. 271.
 Council of Trent, by J. A. Froude, III. 503.
 Count Julian, by W. S. Landor, III. 141.
 Counterblast against Tobacco, by James I., I. 500, 507.
 Country Contentments, by Gervase Markham, I. 398.
 Country Justice, by Dr John Langhorne, II. 521.
 Country Parson, by Herbert, I. 496, 497.
 Country Wife, by W. Wycherley, II. 65.
 County Guy, by Scott, III. 33, 37.
 Courage, brother! do not stumble, by Norman Macleod, III. 307.
 Courant, Daily, II. 2, 12.
 Course of Time, by Robert Pollok, II. 702-704.
 COURTHOPE, WILLIAM JOHN, III. 684.
 Court of Death, by John Gay, II. 174, 175.
 Courtship of Miles Standish, by Longfellow, III. 768, 770.
 Courtyer, trans. by Sir Thomas Hoby, I. 258.
 COVERDALE, MILES, I. 131.
 COWARD, NOEL, III. 710, 840.
 COWLEY, ABRAHAM, I. 642, 731, 732.
 COWPER, WILLIAM, II. 601; III. 6.
 Cowper, Letters of, II. 610-612.
 Cowper, Life of, by William Hayley, II. 614.
 Cowper's Grave, by E. B. Browning, III. 549, 559.
 COXE, WILLIAM, II. 630.
 CRABBE, GEORGE, II. 693.
 CRADDOCK, CHARLES EGBERT (Mary Noailles Murfree), III. 833.
 Cradle Song, by William Blake, II. 720.
 CRAIG, JOHN, I. 230.
 CRAIGIE, MRS (John Oliver Hobbes), III. 834.
 CRAIK, GEORGE LILLIE, III. 291.
 CRAIK, GEORGINA MARION, III. 291.
 CRAIK, MRS (Dinah Maria Mulock), III. 536.
 CRAIK, SIR HENRY, III. 842.
 CRANCH, CHRISTOPHER PEARSE, III. 853.
 CRANE, STEPHEN, III. 832.
 Cranford, by Mrs Gaskell, III. 527.
 CRANMER, THOMAS, Archbishop of Canterbury, I. 138.
 CRASHAW, RICHARD, I. 676; Elegy on, by Cowley, I. 644.
 CRAWFORD, FRANCIS MARION, III. 831.
 CRAWFORD, ISABELLA VALANCY, III. 726.
 CRAWFORD, ROBERT, II. 317.
 Crazy Maiden's Song, by Crabbe, II. 699.
 CREASY, SIR EDWARD SHEPHERD, III. 839.
 Creation by Sir R. Blackmore, II. 108, 109.
 Creed, Exposition of, by Pearson, I. 623.
 CREIGHTON, MANDELL, III. 687.
 Creoles of Louisiana, by G. W. Cable, III. 829.
 Crescent and the Cross, by Eliot Warburton, III. 274.
 Crimea, Invasion of the, by A. W. Kinglake, III. 421.
 Criminal Law, by Sir A. Alison, III. 289.
 Criminal Trials in Scotland, by J. H. Burton, III. 398.
 Criminals, Idiots, Women, and Minors, by F. P. Cobbe, III. 537.
 CRIPPS, ARTHUR S., III. 733.
 Cripps the Carrier, by R. D. Blackmore, III. 622.
 Crisis, by Thomas Paine, II. 559.
 Crist, by Cynewulf, I. 13.
 CRITCHETT, RICHARD CLAUDE, III. 843.
 Critic, by Sheridan, II. 564, 565.
 Critic, Papers of a, by C. W. Dilke, III. 529.
 Critical Kit-Kats, by Sir E. Gosse, III. 696.
 Critical Miscellanies, by Lord Morley, III. 686.
 Critical Review, II. 13, 442.
 Criticism, History of, by Saintsbury, III. 694.
 CROCKETT, SAMUEL RUTHERFORD, III. 845.
 CROKER, JOHN WILSON, III. 170.
 CROKER, THOMAS CROFTON, III. 412.
 CROLE, ROBERT. See CROWLEY.
 CROLY, GEORGE, III. 171.
 Cromarty, Traditional History of, by Hugh Miller, III. 285.
 Cromwell, Discourse concerning the Government of, by Cowley I. 648, 651.
 Cromwell (Oliver), by Lord Morley, III. 686.
 Cromwell's Letters and Speeches, by Carlyle, III. 404, 405, 406.
 CRONIN, ARCHIBALD JOSEPH, III. 849.
 Crook in the Lot, by Boston, II. 302.
 Crookit Meg, by Sir J. Skelton, III. 635.
 Cross of Snow, by Longfellow, III. 770, 772.
 Crossing the Bar, by Tennyson, III. 547.
 Crotchet Castle, by Thomas Love Peacock, III. 150, 153-155.
 CROWE, CATHERINE, III. 280.
 CROWE, WILLIAM, II. 616.
 CROWLEY, ROBERT, I. 150.
 CROWNE, JOHN, II. 80.
 Crown of Wild Olive, by Ruskin, III. 571, 572, 575.
 CROZIER, JOHN BEATTIE, III. 726, 727.
 Cruise of the Betsy, by H. Miller, III. 286.
 Cruise of the Midge, by M. Scott, III. 254.
 Cry of the Children, by E. B. Browning, III. 550, 560.
 Cuckoo, To the, by Bruce or Logan, II. 528-531.
 Cuckoo and Nightingale, by Clanvowe, I. 81.
 CUDWORTH, RALPH, I. 670.
 Culprit Fay, by J. R. Drake, III. 752.
 Culture and Anarchy, by M. Arnold, III. 594, 599.
 CUMBERLAND, BISHOP, II. 59.
 CUMBERLAND, RICHARD, II. 561.
 CUMMINGS, BRUCE F., III. 849.
 CUMMINS, MARIA SUSANNA, III. 827.
 Cunnor Hall, by W. J. Mickle, II. 522, 523.
 CUNNINGHAM, ALLAN, III. 303.
 CUNNINGHAM, FRANCIS, III. 305.
 CUNNINGHAM, JOHN, II. 455.
 CUNNINGHAM, JOSEPH DAVEY, III. 305.
 CUNNINGHAM, PETER, III. 305.
 CUNNINGHAM, SIR ALEXANDER, III. 305.
 CUNNINGHAM, THOMAS MOUNSEY, III. 305.
 CUNNINGHAM GRAHAM, R. B., III. 724, 843.
 Cup, by Tennyson, III. 542.
 Curiosities of Literature, by Isaac D'Israeli, II. 715.

Curiosities of Natural History, by Buckland, III. 590.
 CURRAN, JOHN PHILPOT, II. 681.
 CURRIE, LADY MARY MONTGOMERIE, III. 850.
 Curse of Kehama, by Southey, III. 48, 49, 51.
 Cursor Mundi, I. 40.
 CURTIS, GEORGE WILLIAM, III. 784.
 CURZON, LORD, III. 844.
 CUSHING, PAUL (R. A. Wood-Seys), III. 854.
 Cushla-ma-chree, by J. F. Waller, III. 364.
 Custom and Myth, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 Cyclical Miracle-Plays, I. 47.
 Cyclopædia, Knight's English, III. 266; Lardner's, III. 266; Penny, III. 266; of English Literature, I. preface, III. 315.
 Cymbeline, by Shakespeare, I. 371.
 CYNEWULF, I. 8, 10, 12.
 Cynthia's Revels, by Jonson, I. 404, 409.
 Cypress Grove, by Drummond, I. 510, 512.
 Cyril Thornton, by T. Hamilton, III. 254.
 Cyril's Success, by H. J. Byron, III. 637.

DACRE, LADY, II. 771.
 Dæmonology, by James I., I. 506.
 Daft Days, by R. Fergusson, II. 805, 806.
 'Dagonet' Ballads, by G. R. Sims, III. 694.
 Daily Courant, II. 2, 12.
 Daisy Miller, by Henry James, III. 830.
 DALEY, VICTOR J., III. 729.
 Daltons, by C. J. Lever, III. 359.
 DAMPIER, WILLIAM, II. 103.
 DANA, RICHARD HENRY, III. 752.
 DANA, RICHARD HENRY, JUN., III. 752.
 Dance of the Seven Deidly Synnis, by Dunbar, I. 197.
 DANE, CLEMENCE, III. 852.
 Dancesbury House, by Mrs Henry Wood, III. 520.
 DANIEL, SAMUEL, I. 339.
 Daniel, in Exeter Book, I. 11, 12.
 Daniel, Lectures on, by Edward Bouverie Pusey, III. 337.
 Daniel Deronda, by George Eliot, III. 530.
 Danites in the Sierras, by Miller, III. 828.
 Dante, trans. by Henry Francis Cary, II. 756; by C. E. Norton, III. 822; by John Carlyle, III. 402.
 Dante and his Circle, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 641.
 Dante's Divina Commedia, trans. by Longfellow, III. 768, 771.
 Daphnald, by Spenser, I. 206.
 D'ARBLAY, MADAME (Fanny Burney), II. 586.
 Darien, by Elliot Warburton, III. 274.
 Darkness and Dawn, by Farrar, III. 661.
 Dark Rosaleen, by J. C. Mangan, III. 358.
 DARLEY, GEORGE, III. 235.
 DARMESTER, MADAME (Duclaux), III. 704.
 Darnley, by G. P. R. James, III. 327.
 Dartmoor, by Noel T. Carrington, II. 760.
 DARWIN, CHARLES ROBERT, III. 416; Life of, by Grant Allen, III. 727.
 DARWIN, ERASMUS, II. 572.
 Darwinism, by A. R. Wallace, III. 614; by J. Fiske, III. 828; by F. P. Cobbe, III. 537.
 Darwinism and Language, by W. D. Whitney, III. 824.
 DASENT, SIR GEORGE WEBB, III. 499.
 Data of Ethics, by Spencer, III. 588.
 Dauber, by John Masefield, III. 710.
 Daughter of Heth, by Wm. Black, III. 691.
 D'AVENANT, SIR WILLIAM, I. 628, 729.
 David, Song to, by Smart, II. 424-426.
 David and Bethsabe, by Peele, I. 322.
 David Copperfield, by Dickens, III. 465, 467, 473.
 David Elginbrod, by George Macdonald, III. 606.
 David Grieve, by Mrs H. Ward, III. 704.
 David Harum, by E. N. Westcott, III. 831.
 David Simple, by Sarah Fielding, II. 417.
 Davideis, by Cowley, I. 643, 644.
 DAVIDSON, JOHN, III. 706.
 DAVIES, HUBERT HENRY, III. 847.
 DAVIES, JOHN, I. 396.
 DAVIES, SIR JOHN, I. 394.
 DAVIES, WILLIAM HENRY, III. 847.
 DAVIOT, GORDON (Elizabeth Mackintosh), III. 852.
 DAVIS, JOHN, I. 300.
 DAVIS, RICHARD HARDING, III. 832.
 DAVIS, THOMAS OSBORNE, III. 364; Lament for, by Sir S. Ferguson, III. 363; Life of, by Sir C. G. Duffy, III. 583.
 DAVY, SIR HUMPHRY, II. 761.
 DAWSON, GEORGE M., III. 726.
 DAWSON, SIR JOHN WILLIAM, III. 726.
 DAY, JOHN, I. 420.
 DAY, THOMAS, II. 738.
 Day and Night Songs, by W. Allingham, III. 605.

Day of Doom, by Michael Wigglesworth, III. 734, 735.
 Days and Hours, by F. Tennyson, III. 530.
 Deacon Brodie, by Henley and Stevenson, III. 695, 699.
 Dead Letter, by Austin Dobson, III. 689.
 Dear Lady Disdain, by McCarthy, III. 660.
 Death Comes for the Archbishop, by Willa Cather, III. 834.
 Death of Lincoln, by Whitman, III. 810.
 Death of the Flowers, by W. C. Bryant, III. 753, 754.
 Deathbed, by Thomas Hood, III. 140.
 Death's Jest-book, by Beddoes, III. 237.
 Declaration of Independence, III. 736, 742.
 De Clifford, by R. P. Ward, II. 754.
 Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, by Gibbon, II. 550, 553-558.
 De Consolatione Philosophiæ of Boethius, trans. by Ælfred, I. 21; by Chaucer, I. 63, 82.
 Deerbrook, by Harriet Martineau, III. 388.
 Defence of Guenevere, by W. Morris, III. 665, 667.
 Defence of Poesie, by Sir P. Sidney, I. 289.
 DEFOE, DANIEL, II. 5, 149; Life of, by W. Minto, III. 693.
 DEHAN, RICHARD, III. 733.
 Deirdre, by Sir S. Ferguson, III. 362; by W. B. Yeats, III. 709; by G. W. Russell, III. 710.
 Deistical Controversy, II. 121.
 Deist's Bible, by M. Tindal, II. 162.
 Dejection, an Ode, by Coleridge, III. 59, 66.
 DEKKER, THOMAS, I. 422.
 DELAFIELD, E. M., III. 852.
 DE LA MARE, WALTER, III. 714.
 DE LA ROCHE, MAZO, III. 852.
 DELAND, MARGARET, III. 833.
 Deliciæ Poetarum Scotorum, I. 519.
 Della Crusca, II. 473, 667.
 DE LOIME, JEAN LOUIS, II. 541.
 DELONEY, THOMAS, I. 333.
 Democracy, by J. R. Lowell, III. 801, 802.
 Democracy and Liberty, by Lecky, III. 682.
 Democracy in Europe, by Sir T. E. May, III. 490.
 Democratic Vistas, by Whitman, III. 808.
 De Montfort, by Joanna Baillie, II. 729, 732, 734.
 DE MORGAN, AUGUSTUS, III. 308.
 DE MORGAN, WILLIAM F., III. 709.
 DENHAM, SIR JOHN, I. 639.
 DENIHY, DANIEL H., III. 729.
 DENNIS, JOHN, II. 196.
 DENT, J. C., III. 726.
 Departmental Ditties, by Kipling, III. 708.
 DE QUINCEY, THOMAS, III. 92; book on, by David Masson, III. 633.
 De Religione Gentilium, by Lord Herbert, I. 491.
 DERMODY, THOMAS, II. 759.
 Dermot and the Earl, I. 34.
 Descent into Hell, by J. A. Heraud, III. 268.
 Descent into the Maelstrom, by E. A. Poe, III. 788.
 Descent of Man, by Darwin, III. 417, 418.
 Descent of Odin, by Gray, II. 359, 361.
 Descriptive Sketches, by Wordsworth, III. 13.
 Deserted Village, by Goldsmith, II. 480, 484-486, 494.
 Destiny, by Susan Edmondstone Ferrier, III. 300.
 Dethe of Blanche the Duchesse, by Chaucer, I. 61, 67.
 Dethe of Pitee, by Chaucer, I. 61, 62, 68.
 De Tocqueville, Correspondence and Conversations with, by N. W. Senior, III. 343.
 DE VERE, AUBREY, III. 581.
 DE VERE, EDWARD, Earl of Oxford, I. 277.
 De Vere, by R. P. Ward, II. 754.
 De Veritate, by Lord Herbert, I. 491.
 Devil to Pay, by Charles Coffey, II. 338.
 Devill's Inquest, by Dunbar, I. 198.
 Devil's Dream on Mount Aksbeck, by Thomas Aird, III. 312.
 Dial, III. 757, 760, 763.
 Dialogues on Sincerity, by R. Hurd, II. 428.
 Diana, a Collection of Sonnets, by Henry Constable, I. 278.
 Diana of the Crossways, by G. Meredith, III. 658.
 Diaries of a Lady of Quality, ed. by Abraham Hayward, III. 327.
 Diary, Evelyn's, I. 733, 765; Pepys's, I. 733, 770; Sewall's, III. 732.
 Diary and Letters of Fanny Burney, II. 587, 590-593.
 Diary by Lady Charlotte Bury, II. 772.
 Diary of a Late Physician, by Samuel Warren, III. 344.
 DIBDIN, CHARLES, II. 708.

DICKENS, CHARLES, III. 464.
 Dickens, Life of, by Forster, III. 474.
 DICKINSON, EMILY, III. 833.
 Dialects and Sayings of the Philosophers, printed by Caxton, I. 96.
 Dictionary, General, by G. Sale, II. 388.
 Dictionary, Johnson's, II. 457, 462.
 Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities, by Sir W. Smith, III. 479.
 Dictionary of National Biography, III. 662, 707.
 Dictionary of Slang, by Henley and Farnor, III. 695.
 Dictionary of the Bible, by John Brown, II. 646.
 Diderot and the Encyclopædists, by Morley, III. 686.
 Dies Iræ, Version of, by the Earl of Roscommon, I. 778.
 DIGBY, SIR KENELM, I. 579.
 Digby Grand, by Whyte-Melville, III. 585.
 DILKE, CHARLES WESTWORTH, III. 259.
 DILKE, SIR CHARLES WESTWORTH, III. 841.
 DILLON, WESTWORTH, See Roscommon, THE EARL OF.
 Dipsychus, by A. H. Clough, III. 511, 512.
 Directions to Servants, by Swift, II. 127.
 Dirge, by Dunbar, I. 198; by H. King, I. 568.
 Dirge of Owen Roe O'Neill, by Aubrey de Vere, III. 582.
 Discipline, by Mary Brunton, II. 772.
 Discourse concerning the Government of Oliver Cromwell, by Cowley, I. 648, 651.
 Discourse on the Original and Progress of Satire, by Dryden, I. 816.
 Discourses on Government, by Algernon Sidney, I. 716.
 Discoveries, by Ben Jonson, I. 412.
 Discovery of a New World, by John Wilkins, I. 685.
 Discovery of Beautiful Guiana, by Sir Walter Raleigh, I. 305.
 Dispensary, by Sir Samuel Garth, II. 109.
 DISRAELI, BENJAMIN, III. 435.
 D'ISRAELI, ISAAC, II. 715.
 Distressed Mother, by Philips, II. 239.
 Diversions of Purley, by H. Tooke, II. 633.
 Divine Dialogues, by Dr H. More, I. 611.
 Divine Emblems, by Quarles, I. 566, 567.
 Divine Legation of Moses, by Warburton, II. 271.
 Divine Tragedy, by Longfellow, III. 770.
 Divine Weeks, trans. by Sylvester, I. 345.
 DIXON, RICHARD WATSON, III. 840.
 DIXON, WILLIAM HEFORTH, III. 578.
 DOBELL, SYDNEY THOMPSON, III. 603.
 DOBSON, HENRY AUSTIN, III. 688.
 Doctor, by Southey, III. 48, 50.
 Dr Nikola, by Guy Boothby, III. 730.
 Doctor's Dilemma, by Shaw, III. 706.
 Doctor Thorne, by A. Trollope, III. 487, 488.
 DODD, DR WILLIAM, II. 456.
 DODDRIDGE, PHILIP, II. 332.
 DODGSON, CHARLES LUTWIDGE, III. 648.
 DODSLEY, ROBERT, II. 301.
 Dodsworth, by Sinclair Lewis, III. 836.
 Dolly Dialogues, by Anthony Hope (Sir A. H. Hawkins), III. 708.
 Dolores, by A. C. Swinburne, III. 672.
 Domain of Arnheim, by E. A. Poe, III. 787.
 Dombey and Son, by Dickens, III. 465, 467, 471.
 Domestic Annals of Scotland, by Robert Chambers, III. 316.
 Domestic Manners of the Americans, by Frances Trollope, III. 276.
 DOMETT, ALFRED, III. 729, 732.
 Dominic's Legacy, by A. Picken, III. 308.
 Dominion of Dreams, by Fiona Macleod, III. 705.
 Don John of Austria, by Sir W. Stirling-Maxwell, III. 499.
 Don Juan, by Byron, III. 123, 127, 130, 133-135.
 Don Quixote in England, by Fielding, II. 339, 342.
 Don Sebastian, by Dryden, I. 706, 810; by Miss Porter, II. 772.
 Don Simonides, by B. Rich, I. 238, 333.
 DONNE, JOHN, I. 413.
 Donne, Dr, Life of, by Izaak Walton, I. 613; Life and Letters of, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
 DOOLITTLE, HILDA, III. 856.
 DORAN, JOHN, III. 331.
 Dorian Gray, by Oscar Wilde, III. 707.
 Dorothy Forster, by Besant, III. 650.
 DORSET, EARL OF (Charles Sackville), I. 781.
 DORSET, EARL OF (Thomas Sackville), I. 237, 245.
 Dorset Dialect, Poems in the, by W. Barnes, III. 412.

- DOS PASSOS, JOHN RODRIGO, III. 720, 856.
 Double Dealer, by Congreve, II. 82, 85.
 DOUCE, FRANCIS, II. 713.
 DOUGALL, LILY, III. 726.
 DOUGHTY, ARTHUR, III. 726.
 DOUGHTY, CHARLES M., III. 695, 722.
 DOUGLAS, GAVIN, I. 166, 202.
 DOUGLAS, GEORGE (G. D. Brown), III. 847.
 DOUGLAS, JAMES, III. 847.
 DOUGLAS, NORMAN, III. 847.
 Douglas, by John Home, II. 453-455.
 DOUGLASS, FREDERICK, III. 853.
 Dover Beach, by M. Arnold, III. 506.
 DOWDEN, EDWARD, III. 687.
 DOWSON, ERNEST, III. 847.
 DOYLE, JOHN A., III. 841.
 DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN, III. 707.
 Dragon of Wantley, by O. Wister, III. 832.
 DRAKE, JOSEPH RODMAN, III. 752.
 Drama, Development of the Secular, I. 150.
 Drama in the Eighteenth Century, II. 12.
 Dramatic Lyrics and Romances, by R. Browning, III. 553.
 Dramatist, by F. Reynolds, II. 710.
 DRAPER, JOHN WILLIAM, III. 825.
 Drapier's Letters, by Jonathan Swift, II. 125, 127.
 DRAYTON, MICHAEL, I. 341.
 Dream-Children, by Lamb, III. 76.
 Dream Life, by Donald Grant Mitchell, III. 821.
 Dream of Gerontius, by J. H. Newman, III. 338, 341.
 Dream of John Ball, by W. Morris, III. 665.
 Dream of the Rood, I. 15.
 Dream-Pedlary, by T. L. Beddoes, III. 237.
 Dred, by Mrs H. B. Stowe, III. 813.
 DREISER, THEODORE, III. 835.
 Dreme, by Sir David Lyndsay, I. 205.
 DRENNAN, WILLIAM, III. 344.
 Drink, by Charles Reade, III. 483.
 DRINKWATER, JOHN, III. 848.
 DRUMMOND, HENRY, III. 842.
 DRUMMOND, WILLIAM, I. 510.
 DRUMMOND, W. H., III. 727.
 Drummond of Hawthornden, Life of, by Masson, III. 633.
 Drum-Taps, by Walt Whitman, III. 807.
 Drunken Barnaby's Four Journeys, by Brathwaite, I. 488.
 Drury Lane, A Tale of, by Horace Smith, III. 162.
 DRYDEN, JOHN, I. 730, 731, 732, 734, 791; III. 3; by Saintsbury, III. 693; The Age of, by Richard Garnett, III. 668.
 Drythelm, Story of, I. 169.
 DU CHAILLU, PAUL BELLONI, III. 840.
 Duchess of Malfi, by J. Webster, I. 426, 428.
 DUCLAUX, MADAME, III. 704.
 Duenna, by Sheridan, II. 564, 565.
 DUFF, SIR MOUNTSTUART GRANT, III. 840.
 DUFFERIN, LORD, III. 839.
 DUFFERIN, THE COUNTESS OF, III. 385.
 DUFFY, SIR CHARLES GAVIN, III. 583, 730.
 DUGDALE, SIR WILLIAM, I. 590.
 DUKE, RICHARD, II. 111.
 DU MAURIER, GEORGE, III. 840.
 DUNBAR, PAUL L., III. 855.
 DUNBAR, WILLIAM, I. 166, 191.
 DUNCAN, SARA JEANNETTE (Mrs Everard Cotes), III. 726.
 Dunciad, by Pope, II. 179, 183, 190.
 DUNLOP, JOHN, II. 808.
 DUNLOP, JOHN COLIN, III. 219.
 DUNNE, FINLEY PETER, III. 855.
 DUNTON, JOHN, II. 112.
 Durandarte and Belerma, by M. G. Lewis, II. 751.
 D'URFEY, THOMAS, I. 732, 782.
 Dutch Courtesan, by John Marston, I. 462.
 Dutchman's Fireside, by J. K. Paulding, III. 743.
 Dutch Republic, by J. L. Motley, III. 814, 815, 816.
 Duty, Ode to, by Wordsworth, III. 13, 10, 24.
 DWIGHT, TIMOTHY, III. 730.
 Dyalogue Concernynge Heresy, by Sir Thomas More, I. 123.
 DYCE, ALEXANDER, III. 324.
 DYER, JOHN, II. 284.
 DYER, SIR EDWARD, I. 274, 275.
 Dying Christian to his Soul, by Pope, II. 101.
 Dying Negro, by Thomas Day, II. 738.
 DYKE, HENRY VAN, III. 854.
 Dynasts, by Thos. Hardy, III. 680, 722.
 Dynasty of Theodosius, by T. Hodgkin, III. 661.
 DYSON, EDWARD, III. 720.
- EADMER OF CANTERBURY, I. 33.
 EAGLE, SOLOMON (Sir J. C. Squire), III., 848.
- Eagle's Nest, by John Ruskin, III. 571.
 EALDHLM, I. 11, 16.
 EARLE, JOHN, I. 577.
 Early English Poets, by George Ellis, I. 30; II. 678.
 Early English Romances, by Ellis, II. 678.
 Early Literary Criticism, I. 266.
 Early Minor Scottish Poets, I. 208.
 Early Primrose, To an, by H. Kirke White, II. 728.
 Early Scottish Fragments, I. 168.
 Earthly Paradise, by W. Morris, III. 665.
 East Lynne, by Mrs Henry Wood, III. 520.
 Eastern Life, by H. Martineau, III. 388.
 EASTLAKE, LADY, III. 387.
 Eastward Hoe, I. 378, 402.
 Ebb-tide, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699.
 Ecce Homo, by Sir J. R. Seeley, III. 649.
 Ecclesiastical History, by Bæda, I. 18, 169; trans. by Alfred, I. 20.
 Ecclesiastical History of Scotland, A.D. 80 to 818, by Thomas Innes, II. 302.
 Ecclesiastical Institutions, by Spencer, III. 589.
 Ecclesiastical Memorials, by John Strype, II. 148.
 Ecclesiastical Polity, by Hooker, I. 270-283.
 ECHARD, LAURENCE, II. 210.
 Echo, by Christina Rossetti, III. 647.
 Echo, by Thomas Moore, III. 348.
 Echo Sonnet, by Barnabe Barnes, I. 278.
 Eclipse of Faith, by Henry Rogers, III. 374.
 Eclogues, by Alexander Barclay, I. 118.
 Eclogues of Virgil, trans. by Warton, II. 507.
 Economy of Vegetation, by E. Darwin, II. 572, 574, 575, 576.
 EDDINGTON, SIR ARTHUR, III. 848.
 Eden Bower, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 643.
 EDGEWORTH, MARIA, II. 735.
 EDGEWORTH, RICHARD LOVELL, II. 734.
 Edinburgh, by Sir A. Boswell, II. 830, 831.
 Edinburgh: Picturesque Notes, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 700.
 Edinburgh, Old and New, by J. Grant, III. 578.
 Edinburgh, Traditions of, by Robert Chambers, III. 310.
 Edinburgh Review, III. 86, 156, 158.
 Edinburgh Sketches and Memories, by Masson, III. 633.
 Education, by Mandell Creighton, III. 687.
 Education, Thoughts concerning, by Locke, II. 18, 20; Tractate on, by Milton, I. 688, 706.
 Edward, by Dr John Moore, II. 618.
 Edward and Leonora, by Thomson, II. 321.
 Edward I., by George Peele, I. 321.
 Edward II., by Marlowe, I. 349, 351.
 EDWARDS, AMELIA B., III. 850.
 EDWARDS, JONATHAN, III. 734, 738.
 EDWARDS, RICHARD, I. 204.
 Edwin, by James Beattie, II. 526.
 Edwin and Eltruda, by Helen Maria Williams, II. 600.
 Edwin of Deira, by A. Smith, III. 604.
 EGAN, PIERCE, III. 264.
 EGAN, PIERCE, The Younger, III. 265.
 EGERTON, FRANCIS (Earl of Ellesmere), II. 791.
 EGERTON, GEORGE (Mrs Golding Bright), III. 730, 732.
 EGGLESTON, EDWARD, III. 824.
 EGLINTON, SIR HUGH OF, I. 172.
 Egoist, by George Meredith, III. 658, 659.
 Egyptians, Ancient, by Sir John Gardner Wilkinson, III. 321.
 Egyptians, Modern, by Edward William Lane, III. 327.
 Eighteenth Century in English Literature, II. 1.
 Eighteenth Century Vignettes, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 Eikon Basilike, by Gauden, I. 587, 588.
 Eikonoklastes, by Milton, I. 689.
 Eileen Aroon, by Gerald Griffin, III. 357.
 Eirenicon, by Dr Pusey, III. 337.
 El Dorado, by Bayard Taylor, III. 821.
 Election, by John Sterling, III. 271.
 Election, by Robert Fergusson, II. 806.
 Electricity, Chemical Agencies of, by Sir H. Davy, II. 761.
 Elegant Epistles, by V. Knox, II. 713.
 Elegant Extracts, by V. Knox, II. 713.
 Elegy—on the Princess Margaret, I. 208; on Crashaw, by Cowley, I. 644; on the Death of a Mad Dog, by Goldsmith, II. 486; on an Unfortunate Lady, by Pope, II. 170, 182, 187; in a Country Churchyard, by Gray, II. 11, 359, 365; III. 5; by Campbell, II. 767; by M. Bruce, II. 528; on the Death of Scots Music, by Fergusson, II. 805.
 Elements of Criticism, by Kames, II. 389.
- Eleonora, by Dryden, I. 796.
 Elfrida, by William Mason, II. 426.
 Elia, Essays of, III. 74, 76, 79.
 Eliduc, by W. C. Roscoe, III. 625.
 ELIOT, GEORGE, III. 529.
 ELIOT, THOMAS STEARNS, III. 716, 723.
 ELIZABETH, QUEEN, I. 249.
 Elizabethan and Jacobean Literature, I. 235.
 Elizabethan Seamen, by Froude, III. 503.
 Elizabethan Song-Writers, I. 273.
 Elizabethan Sonnet-Cycles, I. 286.
 ELLESMERE, EARL OF, II. 791.
 ELLIOT, JEAN, II. 796.
 ELLIOT, SIR GILBERT, II. 423.
 ELLIOT, EBENEZER, III. 231.
 ELLIS, GEORGE, II. 670, 678.
 ELLIS, SARAH, III. 388.
 ELLWOOD, THOMAS, II. 55.
 Elmer Gantry, by Sinclair Lewis, III. 836.
 Eloisa and Abelard, by Pope, II. 179, 182, 186.
 El Ombú, by W. H. Hudson, III. 711.
 ELPHINSTONE, MOUNTSTUART, III. 366.
 Elsie Venner, by O. W. Holmes, III. 791.
 ELWIN, WHITWELL, III. 490.
 ELYOT, SIR THOMAS, I. 127.
 Embargo, by W. C. Bryant, III. 753.
 EMERSON, RALPH WALDO, III. 758; Life of, by O. W. Holmes, III. 791.
 Emigrants, by Thomas Pringle, II. 790.
 Emigrants in the Bermudas, by Marvell, I. 712.
 Eminent Statesmen, by Hayward, III. 327.
 Emma, by Jane Austen, II. 774.
 Emotions and the Will, by Bain, III. 497.
 Empedocles on Etna, by M. Arnold, III. 591, 592, 596.
 Emperor Jones, by Eugene O'Neill, III. 836.
 Emperor of the East, by Massinger, I. 464, 467.
 Encyclopædia, Britannica, II. 535; Chambers's, III. 315. And see CYCLOPÆDIA.
 Endeavours after the Christian Life, by James Martineau, III. 392.
 Endimion, by Lyly, I. 315.
 Endymion, by John Keats, III. 99, 100, 102.
 England and its People, First Impressions of, by Hugh Miller, III. 285.
 England and Wales, Antiquities of, by Francis Grose, II. 629.
 England, Conquest of, by J. R. Green, III. 653; The Making of, III. 653.
 England, Expansion of, by Sir J. R. Seeley, III. 649.
 England, History of, by S. Daniel, I. 271; by T. May, I. 582; by Milton, I. 690, 700; by Echard, II. 210; by Carte, II. 244; by Kennett, II. 244; by Mrs Macaulay, II. 419; by Smollett, II. 442; by Turner, II. 630; by Lingard, II. 647; by Hallam, III. 193; by Craik and Macfarlane, III. 291; by Macaulay, III. 367, 372; by Stanhope, III. 374; by Mrs Penrose, III. 384; by May, III. 490; by Froude, III. 502; by Stubbs, III. 629; by Gardiner, III. 631; by Green, III. 652; by Lecky, III. 682; by G. M. Trevelyan, III. 715.
 England in the Age of Wycliffe, by G. M. Trevelyan, III. 715.
 England in Time of War, by S. T. Dobell, III. 603, 604.
 England my Mother, by Sir W. Watson, III. 706.
 England under Queen Anne, by G. M. Trevelyan, III. 715.
 England under Seven Administrations, by A. W. Fonblanque, III. 267.
 England's Helicon, I. 258, 276, 278.
 English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, by Byron, III. 120.
 English Chronicle, I. 20, 26, 29.
 English Constitution, by Bagehot, III. 630.
 English Garden, by W. Mason, II. 426, 427.
 English Gentleman, and English Gentlewoman, by Brathwaite, I. 488.
 English Girl, by Robert Chambers, III. 316.
 English Humorists, by Thackeray, III. 459.
 English in Ireland, by Froude, III. 502.
 English Literature, by Stopford A. Brooke, III. 662; by G. L. Craik, III. 291; by Gosse, III. 608; by Minto, III. 695; by Saintsbury, III. 693.
 English Literature before the Invasion of Britain, I. 4.
 English Literature from Edward VII. to George VI., III. 717.
 English Literature in the Nineteenth Century, III. 1.
 English Literature in the Reign of Victoria, by H. Morley, III. 633.
 English Literature in the Reigns of the German-born Georges, II. 319.

- English Mail-Coach, by De Quincey, III. 97.
 Englishman, by Eliza Cook, III. 528.
 English Misrule and Irish Misdeeds, by A. de Vere, III. 581.
 English Note-Books, by Hawthorne, III. 780, 781.
 English Past and Present, by Trench, III. 393.
 English People, History of the, by J. R. Green, III. 652.
 English Poetry, Beginning of, I. 4.
 English Poetry, History of, by Thomas Warton, II. 508-512.
 English Poets, by W. Hazlitt, III. 80, 82; by W. Minto, III. 695.
 English Poets, Lives of the, by Johnson, II. 460, 463, 464.
 English Prose, Beginning of, I. 19.
 English Prose Writers from 1380-1500, I. 81.
 English Speech-craft, by Barnes, III. 412.
 English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
 English Tongue, by Richard Carew, I. 353.
 English Traits, by Emerson, III. 760, 762.
 English Utilitarians, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
 English Words, Select Glossary of, by Trench, III. 393.
 English Writers, by Henry Morley, III. 633.
 Engraving, by Sir Sidney Colvin, III. 693.
 Enigmas of Life, by W. R. Greg, III. 400.
 Ennui, by Maria Edgeworth, II. 735, 736.
 Enoch Arden, by Tennyson, III. 542.
 Entail, by John Galt, III. 297, 298.
 Enterkin, by Dr John Brown, III. 452.
 Entertainer of Hyckescorner, I. 151.
 Envoy a Bukton, by Chaucer, I. 65, 66.
 Eöthen, by A. W. Kinglake, III. 421.
 Ephemerides, by Thomas Pringle, II. 789.
 Epic of Hades, by Sir L. Morris, III. 662.
 Epic of Women, by A. W. E. O'Shaughnessy, III. 656.
 Epicure, by Ben Jonson, I. 404, 409.
 Epictetus, trans. by Mrs Carter, II. 417.
 Epicurean, by Thomas Moore, III. 347.
 Epigoniad, by William Wilkie, II. 441.
 Epipsychidion, by Shelley, III. 111.
 Episodes in a Life of Adventure, by L. Oliphant, III. 636.
 Epistle to the Countess of Cumberland, by S. Daniel, I. 339.
 Epistles, Pope's, II. 183.
 Epistola Macaronica ad Fratrem, by Alexander Geddes, II. 799, 801.
 Epistolæ Ho-Eliañæ, by J. Howell, I. 573.
 Epistolary Correspondence in the Eighteenth Century, II. 10.
 Epithalamion, by Spenser, I. 296, 302.
 Epsom Wells, by T. Shadwell, II. 63.
 Equality, by Edward Bellamy, III. 831.
 Erasmus, Life of, by John Jortin, II. 301; by J. A. Froude, III. 503, 504.
 ERICLDOUNE, THOMAS OF, I. 43, 166.
 Erechtheus, by Swinburne, III. 671, 672.
 Erewhon, by Samuel Butler, III. 624, 730.
 ERNLE, LORD, III. 843.
 Eros and Psyche, by R. Bridges, III. 693.
 Erris and Tyranny, by C. Otway, III. 345.
 Errors of Ecstasy, by Darley, III. 235, 236.
 ERSKINE, LORD, II. 634.
 ERSKINE, THOMAS, III. 265.
 ERTZ, SUSAN, III. 852.
 ERVINE, ST JOHN, III. 848.
 ESOMD, HENRY V., III. 847.
 Esmond, by Thackeray, III. 458, 460-462.
 Essay on Man, by Pope, II. 170, 187; on Ancient and Modern Learning, by Sir William Temple, I. 754; Evolution of the, II. 3, 12; on Criticism, by Pope, II. 178, 180, 182, 188; of Dramatic Poesy, by Dryden, I. 792, 796, 797, 813; for the Press, by Asgill, II. 100; on Reason, by Sir G. Mackenzie, I. 827; on Truth, by James Beattie, II. 525.
 Essays, Bacon's, I. 381, 383; Theological and Literary, by R. H. Hutton, III. 632; from the Quarterly, by James Hannay, III. 632; on Fiction, by N. W. Senior, III. 343; on His Own Times, by Coleridge, III. 67, 68; on Happiness, by Sir G. Mackenzie, I. 826; in Criticism, by M. Arnold, III. 594, 595, 597, 598; in Verse and Prose, by Cowley, I. 643, 648.
 Essays and Reviews, III. 480.
 Essays and Reviews, by Mandell Creighton, III. 687.
 Esther, by Wilfrid S. Blunt, III. 691.
 Esther Waters, by George Moore, III. 707.
 ETHENGE, SIR GEORGE, II. 61.
 Ethical Philosophy, Dissertation on, by Sir J. Mackintosh, II. 641.
 Ethical Theory, Types of, by J. Martineau, III. 392.
 Ethics, Science of, by Sir I. Stephen, III. 662.
 Ethwald, by Joanna Baillie, II. 734.
 Etonian, III. 266, 379.
 'Ettrick Shepherd,' III. 292.
 Eugene Aram, by Hood, III. 137, 138; by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 Euphrator, by E. FitzGerald, III. 424, 427.
 Euphuus, by Lyly, I. 238, 239, 313.
 Europe, History of, by Alison, III. 288-290.
 Europe, Literature of, by H. Hallam, III. 193, 195.
 European Morals, History of, by Lecky, III. 682.
 Europe during the Middle Ages, by Henry Hallam, III. 193.
 Evadne, by Richard Lalor Sheil, III. 351.
 Evan Harrington, by G. Meredith, III. 658.
 Evangeline, by Longfellow, III. 769, 772.
 EVANS, GEORGE E., III. 729.
 Eve of St Agnes, by Keats, III. 99, 101, 104.
 Eve of St Mark, by Keats, III. 99, 102.
 Evelina, by Fanny Burney, II. 586, 588-590.
 EVELYN, JOHN, I. 733, 765.
 Evelyn Hope, by Robert Browning, III. 562.
 Evenen in the Village, by Barnes, III. 412.
 Evenings with a Reviewer, by Spedding, III. 397.
 Evergreen, ed. by Ramsay, II. 313.
 Everlasting Mercy, by Masfield, III. 710.
 Every Man in his Humour, by Ben Jonson, I. 402, 404, 406.
 Every Man out of his Humour, by Ben Jonson, I. 402, 404.
 Every-day Book, by William Hone, II. 760.
 Everyman, Moral Interlude, I. 151.
 Evolution of the Idea of God, by Grant Allen, III. 727.
 Evolutionist at Large, by Grant Allen, III. 727.
 EWING, MRS JULIA HORATIA, III. 850.
 Examiner, edited by Leigh Hunt, III. 147.
 Excursion, by Wordsworth, III. 11, 13; by Ebenezer Elliott, III. 232.
 Excursions in Criticism, by Sir W. Watson, III. 706.
 Exeter Book, I. 8, 11, 13.
 Exile of Erin, by Campbell, II. 766.
 Exile's Song, by Gilfillan, III. 311.
 Existence of God, by A. H. Clough, III. 512.
 Exodus, in Exeter Book, I. 11.
 Expostulation and Reply, by Wordsworth, III. 17.
 Eyeless in Gaza, by Aldous Huxley, III. 716.
FABER, FREDERICK WILLIAM, III. 482.
 Fable for Critics, by J. R. Lowell, III. 801, 803.
 Fable of the Bees, II. 201; Remarks on, by William Law, II. 247.
 Fables, by Henryson, I. 190; by Dryden, I. 794, 796, 803; by John Gay, II. 173, 175; by Nathaniel Cotton, II. 532.
 Fables and Tales, by Allan Ramsay, II. 313, 315.
 Fables for the Female Sex, by Edward Moore, II. 400.
 FADYAN, ROBERT, I. 105.
 Factory Folk during the Cotton Famine, by Edwin Waugh, III. 492.
 Faerie Queene, by Spenser, I. 293, 296, 299.
 FAIRHAIRN, ANDREW MARTIN, III. 841.
 Fairchild Family, by Mrs Sherwood, III. 324.
 Faire and Happy Milk-maid, by Sir T. Overbury, I. 442.
 FAIRFAX, EDWARD, I. 444.
 Fair God, by Lewis Wallace, III. 823.
 Fair Hills of Ireland, by Sir S. Ferguson, III. 363.
 Fair is my Native Isle, by T. D. Sullivan, III. 580.
 Fair Maid of the Exchange, by T. Heywood, I. 433.
 Fair Penitent, by N. Rowe, II. 93, 94.
 Fair Rosamund, by Michael Field, III. 704.
 Fair Saxon, by Justin McCarthy, III. 660.
 Fairy Mythology, by Thomas Keightley, III. 259.
 Faith Doctor, by E. Eggleston, III. 824.
 Faithful Shepherdess, by Fletcher, I. 474.
 Faithful Shepherd, by Sir Richard Fanshawe, I. 672.
 FALCONER, WILLIAM, II. 498.
 Falkner Lyle, by Mark Lemon, III. 399.
 Fall of Nineveh, by E. Atherstone, III. 146.
 False Delicacy, by Hugh Kelly, II. 571.
 Familiar Letters, by J. Howell, I. 572, 573.
 Family Legend, by Joanna Baillie, II. 729.
 Fan, On a, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 Fancy, by John Keats, III. 101, 103.
 Fancy and Desire, by E. de Vere, I. 277.
 FANE, VIOLET (Lady Mary Montgomerie Currie), III. 850.
 FANSHAWE, CATHERINE MARIA, II. 739.
 FANSHAWE, LADY, I. 673.
 FANSHAWE, SIR RICHARD, I. 672.
 Fanshawe, by N. Hawthorne, III. 778, 779.
 Far from the Madding Crowd, by Hardy, III. 679.
 FARADAY, MICHAEL, III. 242.
 Fardorougha the Miser, by W. Carleton, III. 352.
 Fare thee Well, by Lord Byron, III. 131.
 Farewell Address, by George Washington, III. 736, 742.
 Farewell to Arms, by Ernest Hemingway, III. 720, 856.
 Farewell to Ayrshire, by R. Gall, II. 827.
 Farewell to Folly, by Greene, I. 324, 327.
 Farewell to the Fairies, I. 450, 457.
 FARINGTON, JOSEPH, III. 343.
 FARJEON, BENJAMIN LEOPOLD, III. 732.
 FARMER, DR RICHARD, II. 629.
 Farmer's Boy, by Bloomfield, II. 687.
 Farmer's Calendar, by A. Young, II. 627.
 Farmer's Ingle, by Robert Fergusson, II. 806, 807.
 Farmer's Year, by Sir Rider Haggard, III. 703.
 FARNOL, JOHN JEFFERY, III. 848.
 FARQUHAR, GEORGE, II. 90.
 FARRAR, FREDERIC WILLIAM, III. 661.
 FARRELL, JOHN, III. 729.
 Fatal Curiosity, by George Lillo, II. 277.
 Fatal Sisters, by Gray, II. 359, 361.
 Father and Daughter, by Mrs Opie, II. 598.
 Father and Son, by Sir E. Gosse, III. 696.
 Father O'Flynn, by A. P. Graves, III. 694.
 Father Tom and the Pope, by Sir S. Ferguson, III. 362.
 Father's Tragedy, by M. Field, III. 704.
 FAULKNER, WILLIAM, III. 850.
 Faust, trans. by Abraham Hayward, III. 327; by J. Stuart Blackie, III. 490; by Bayard Taylor, III. 822.
 Faustine, by A. C. Swinburne, III. 670.
 Faustus, by Marlowe, I. 347.
 FAWCETT, HENRY, III. 840; Life of, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
 FAWCETT, MRS, III. 850.
 FAWKES, FRANCIS, II. 421.
 Feast for Wormes, by Quarles, I. 566, 567.
 Feast of Bacchus, by R. Bridges, III. 693.
 Feats on the Fiord, by Harriet Martineau, III. 388.
 Federal Government, History of, by E. A. Freeman, II. 626.
 Federalist, by Hamilton and Madison, III. 736.
 Felix Holt, by George Eliot, III. 530.
 Fellowship, by Lady Eastlake, III. 387.
 FELLTHAM, OWEN, I. 578.
 Felon's Dream, by G. Crabbe, II. 697.
 Female Quixote, by C. Lennox, II. 417.
 FENN, GEORGE MANVILLE, III. 840.
 FENTON, ELIJAH, II. 199.
 FERNER, EDNA, III. 856.
 Ferdinand and Isabella, by Prescott, III. 764.
 Ferdinand Count Fathom, by Smollett, II. 442, 444.
 FERGUSON, ADAM, II. 430.
 FERGUSON, SIR SAMUEL, III. 362.
 FERGUSSON, ROBERT, II. 804.
 Ferishtah's Fancies, by R. Browning, III. 556, 566.
 Ferret and Porrex, by Norton and Sackville, I. 157.
 FERRIER, JAMES FREDERICK, III. 398.
 FERRIER, SUSAN EDMONDSTONE, III. 300.
 Festus, by Philip James Bailey, III. 507-510.
 Feuerbach's 'Christianity,' trans. by George Eliot, III. 529.
 Fiction, Essays on, by N. W. Senior, III. 343.
 Fiction, History of, by Dunlop, II. 808; III. 219.
 Fidelia, by G. Wither, I. 499, 502.
 FIELD, BARRON, III. 729.
 FIELD, EUGENE, III. 831.
 FIELD, MICHAEL, III. 704.
 FIELD, NATHANIEL, I. 487.
 FIELDING, HENRY, II. 7, 339; book on, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 FIELDING, SARAH, II. 417.
 Fife at the Fair, by R. Browning, III. 556, 558, 559, 565.
 Fight about the Isles of the Azores, by Sir Walter Raleigh, I. 305, 311.
 FILMER, SIR ROBERT, I. 559.
 Finding of the Book, by W. Alexander, III. 584.

- Fingal, by James Macpherson, II. 500.
 FINLAY, GEORGE, III. 217.
 Finnsburg, Battle of, I. 4, 5.
 Firdausi in Exile, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 606.
 Fireside, by N. Cotton, II. 533.
 Firmilian, by W. E. Aytoun, III. 475, 477.
 First Principles, by Herbert Spencer, III. 586, 587, 589.
 First Sketch of English Literature, by H. Morley, III. 633.
 FIRTH, SIR CHARLES HARDING, III. 844.
 FISHER, DOROTHEA FRANCES CANFIELD (Dorothy Canfield), III. 834.
 FISHER, HERBERT ALBERT LAURENS, III. 846.
 FISHER, JOHN, I. 126.
 Fisher's Boy, by H. D. Thoreau, III. 799.
 FISKE, JOHN, III. 828.
 FITCH, CLYDE, III. 855.
 FITCHETT, WILLIAM HENRY, III. 730.
 FITZBALL, EDWARD, II. 783.
 FITZ-BOODLE, GEORGE (W. M. Thackeray), III. 456.
 FITZGERALD, EDWARD, III. 424.
 FITZGERALD, FRANCIS S. K., III. 856.
 Fitzgerald (Lord Edward), Life of, by Moore, III. 347.
 FITZNEAL, RICHARD, I. 34.
 FITZPATRICK, GENERAL RICHARD, II. 670.
 FITZPATRICK, SIR PERCY, III. 733.
 Five Hundredth Pointes of Good Husbandry, by Tusser, I. 249.
 Five Nations, by Kipling, III. 708.
 Flaming Heart, by Crashaw, I. 678.
 Flaming Timman, by Borrow, III. 434.
 FLATMAN, THOMAS, I. 783.
 FLAVEL, JOHN, I. 670.
 FAXIUS, by C. G. Leland, III. 784.
 FLECKER, JAMES ELROY, III. 848.
 FLECKNOE, RICHARD, I. 784.
 Fleece, by John Dyer, II. 284, 286.
 Fleet Street Eclogues, by J. Davidson, III. 706.
 Fleetwood, by William Godwin, II. 703.
 FLETCHER, ANDREW, I. 827.
 FLETCHER, ELIZA, III. 187.
 FLETCHER, GILES, I. 445.
 FLETCHER, JOHN, I. 468.
 FLETCHER, JOHN GOULD, III. 856.
 FLETCHER, PHINEAS, I. 445.
 FLINT, ROBERT, III. 840.
 Flodden Field, by Alfred Austin, III. 681.
 Flood of Years, by W. C. Bryant, III. 753.
 Floods in Morayshire, by Sir Thomas Dick Lauder, III. 305.
 Florence MacCarthy, by Lady Morgan, II. 781.
 FLORENCE OF WORCESTER, I. 33.
 FLORIO, JOHN, I. 261.
 Flotsam and Jetsam, by Domett, III. 732.
 Flower and the Leaf, I. 81.
 Flower o' Dumbane, by Tannahill, II. 830.
 Flowers from Parnassus, by Pennecuik, II. 309.
 Flowers of the Forest, by Jean Elliot, II. 796; by Mrs Cockburn, II. 796.
 Fly-Leaves, by C. S. Calverley, III. 638.
 Flyting, by Dunbar and Kennedy, I. 199.
 Fo'c's'le Yarns, by T. E. Brown, III. 634.
 Fœdera, by Thomas Rymer, I. 751.
 Foes in Law, by Miss Broughton, III. 600.
 Folle Farine, by Ouida, III. 690.
 FONBLANQUE, ALBANY W., III. 267.
 Fool of Quality, by H. Brooke, II. 396, 397-400.
 FOOTE, SAMUEL, II. 432.
 Footprints of Former Men in Cornwall, by R. S. Hawker, III. 391.
 Footprints of the Creator, by Hugh Miller, III. 285.
 Footprints on the Sea-Shore, by Hawthorne, III. 780.
 For the Fallen, by Laurence Binyon, III. 713, 714.
 For the Term of his Natural Life, by M. Clarke, III. 731.
 FORBES, ARCHIBALD, III. 841.
 FORBES, EDWARD, III. 830.
 FORBES, JAMES DAVID, III. 400.
 Forces in Nature, Various, by Faraday, III. 243.
 FORD, JOHN, I. 481.
 FORD, PAUL LEICESTER, III. 832.
 FORD, RICHARD, III. 322.
 FORDUN, JOHN, I. 182.
 Forest, by Ben Jonson, I. 408, 409.
 Foresters, by John Wilson, III. 246.
 Forest Minstrel, by James Hogg, III. 292; by William and Mary Howitt, III. 283.
 Forest Scenery, by W. Gilpin, II. 655.
 Forging of the Anchor, by Sir S. Ferguson, III. 362.
 FORMAN, HARRY BUXTON, III. 841.
 Fortaine Travel, Instructions for, by J. Howell, I. 573, 577.
 Fors Clavigera, by Ruskin, III. 571, 572.
 FORSTER, EDWARD MORGAN, III. 848.
 FORSTER, JOHN, III. 474.
 Forsyte Saga, by Galsworthy, III. 712.
 FORTESCUE, SIR JOHN, III. 845.
 FORTESQUE, SIR JOHN, I. 90.
 Forth Feasting, by Drummond, I. 510.
 Fortnightly Review founded, III. 495.
 Fortunatus, by Dekker, I. 422, 424.
 Forty-Five, by Stanhope, III. 374.
 Foscari, by Mary Russell Mitford, III. 176.
 Fossils, Palæozoic, by Sedgwick, III. 202.
 FOSTER, JOHN, II. 738.
 FOSTER, STEPHEN COLLINS, III. 823.
 FOULIS, HUGH (Neil Munro), III. 713.
 Founder of Christendom, by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
 Four Elements, Interlude of the, I. 102, 152.
 Fourfold State, by Thomas Boston, II. 302.
 Four Georges, by Thackeray, III. 459; by McCarthy, III. 660.
 Fourteen Sonnets, by W. L. Bowles, II. 721, 722.
 FOWLER, ELLEN THORNEYCROFT, III. 851.
 FOWLER, THOMAS, III. 840.
 FOX, CHARLES JAMES, II. 636; Life of, by Sir G. O. Trevelyan, III. 687.
 FOX, GEORGE, I. 716.
 Fox, Charles James, Characters of, by Samuel Parr, II. 630.
 FOXE, JOHN, I. 251.
 Foxglove Manor, by R. Buchanan, III. 650.
 Fragments of Science, by Tyndall, III. 548.
 Framley Parsonage, by Trollope, III. 487.
 France, Travels in, by Arthur Young, II. 628.
 Francis, Sir Philip (Junius), II. 518.
 Frankenstein, by Mrs Shelley, III. 519.
 FRANKLIN, BENJAMIN, III. 735, 739.
 Franklin, by Sir T. Overbury, I. 443.
 Frank Mildmay, by F. Marryat, III. 255.
 FRASER, ALEXANDER CAMPBELL, III. 839.
 FRASER, JAMES BAILLIE, II. 787.
 Fraser's Magazine begun, III. 260.
 Fraternity, by Galsworthy, III. 712.
 FRAZER, SIR JAMES GEORGE, III. 713.
 FREDERIC, HAROLD, III. 832.
 Frederick the Great, by Carlyle, III. 404, 405, 406, 411.
 Freedom of the Press, Apology for the, by Robert Hall, II. 738.
 Freedom of the Will, by Jonathan Edwards, III. 738, 739.
 Freeholder, II. 214; extract, II. 226.
 FREEMAN, EDWARD AUGUSTUS, III. 625.
 Free-thinking, by Anthony Collins, II. 163.
 Freethinking and Plain Speaking, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
 French Influence on English Literature, I. 236; III. 1.
 French Influence on the Revolution Period of English Literature, II. 16.
 French in India, by Malleson, III. 632.
 French Literature, by Dowden, III. 687.
 French Literature of England in 12th to 14th century, I. 34.
 French Revolution, by Carlyle, III. 403, 406, 408.
 French Revolution, Reflections on the, by Burke, II. 544, 547, 548.
 FRENEAU, PHILIP, III. 736.
 FRERE, JOHN HOOKHAM, II. 675.
 Friar of Orders Gray, by Percy, II. 505.
 Friar of Orders Grey, by O'Keefe, II. 656.
 Friend, edited by Coleridge, III. 60, 61, 68.
 Friendless Girls, by F. P. Cobbe, III. 537.
 Friendship's Garland, by M. Arnold, III. 594.
 Friends in Council, by Helps, III. 478.
 Frier Bacon and Frier Bungay, by Greene, I. 325.
 Froissart, by Madame Duclaux, III. 704.
 Froissart, Chronicles of, trans. by Lord Berners, I. 103.
 Frontenac and New France, by Parkman, III. 818.
 FROST, ROBERT, III. 835.
 Frost at Midnight, by Coleridge, III. 66.
 FROUDE, JAMES ANTHONY, III. 500.
 Fruits of Solitude, by W. Penn, II. 52, 53.
 Fudge Family in Paris, by Moore, III. 347.
 Fulgens and Lucre, by Medwall, I. 157.
 FULLER, SARAH MARGARET, III. 757.
 FULLER, THOMAS, I. 590.
 FULLER-MAITLAND, J. A., III. 844.
 FULLERTON, LADY GEORGINA, III. 520.
 Funeral, by Sir Richard Steele, II. 229.
 FURNESS, HORACE HOWARD, III. 825.
 FURNIVALL, FREDERICK JAMES, III. 839.
 Gaberlunzie's Wallet, by J. Ballantine, III. 377.
 Gaffer Gray, by Thomas Holcroft, II. 570.
 GAIMAR, GEOFFREY, I. 35.
 GAIRDNER, JAMES, III. 632.
 GALE, NORMAN, III. 845.
 GALL, RICHARD, II. 827.
 Gallery of Literary Characters, by William Maginn, III. 260.
 GALLIENNE, RICHARD LE, III. 846.
 GALSORTHY, JOHN, III. 712.
 GALT, JOHN, III. 296, 725.
 GALTON, SIR FRANCIS, III. 839.
 GAMBOLD, JOHN, II. 421.
 Game at Chess, by T. Middleton, I. 458.
 Game of the Chesse, by Caxton, I. 95.
 Gamekeeper at Home, by Jefferies, III. 640.
 Gamester, by Edward Moore, II. 400.
 Gammer Gurton's Needle, by William Stevenson (?), I. 155, 156.
 Gardner's Daughter, by Tennyson, III. 541.
 Garden of Cyrus, by Sir T. Browne, I. 592, 595.
 Garden of Florence, by Reynolds, III. 268.
 Garden Song, by Austin Dobson, III. 689.
 GARDINER, SAMUEL RAWSON, III. 631.
 GARLAND, HAMLIN, III. 855.
 Garmond of Ladeis, by Henryson, I. 189.
 GARNETT, RICHARD, III. 668.
 GARRICK, DAVID, II. 431.
 GARRISON, WILLIAM LLOYD, III. 774, 811.
 GARTH, SIR SAMUEL, II. 109.
 Garth, by Julian Hawthorne, III. 831.
 GASCOIGNE, GEORGE, I. 238, 247.
 GASKELL, MRS, III. 527.
 Gathering Clouds, by F. W. Farrar, III. 661.
 GAU, JOHN, I. 230.
 GAUDEN, JOHN, I. 587.
 GAUNT, MARY (Mrs L. Miller), III. 730.
 GAY, JOHN, II. 5, 172.
 Gebir, by W. S. Lander, III. 141, 143.
 GEDDES, ALEXANDER, II. 798.
 GEIKIE, SIR ARCHIBALD, III. 840.
 General Historie of the Turkes, by Richard Knolles, I. 272.
 Genesis A, I. 9, 11, 22; Genesis B, I. 22, 25.
 Gentle Craft, by Thomas Deloney, I. 338.
 Gentle Gaffer, by O. Henry (W. S. Porter), III. 833.
 Gentle Shepherd, by Ramsay, II. 313, 314.
 Gentleman's Magazine, II. 12, 244.
 GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH, I. 3, 33, 35, 37.
 Geoffry Hamlyn, by Henry Kingsley, III. 517, 518.
 Geographical Distribution of Animals, by A. R. Wallace, III. 614.
 Geology, Principles of, by Sir Charles Lyell, III. 317.
 Geology of Russia in Europe and the Urals, by Sir R. I. Murchison, III. 267.
 GEORGE, DAVID LLOYD, III. 845.
 GEORGE, HENRY, III. 854.
 GEORGE, WALTER LIONEL, III. 848.
 George Barnwell, by George Lillo, II. 276.
 George III., English Literature under, II. 475.
 George III., Memoirs of, by Walpole, II. 411.
 George IV., King William IV., and Queen Victoria, Journal of the Reigns of, by Charles Greville, III. 319-321.
 George-a-Greene, by Greene, I. 324.
 Georgics, trans. by Thomas May, I. 582; by Joseph Warton, II. 507; by William Sotheby, II. 713.
 GERALD DE BARY (Giraldus Cambrensis), I. 33.
 GERARD, ALEXANDER, II. 388.
 German Poetry, by William Taylor, II. 712.
 Gertrude of Wyoming, by Campbell, II. 766, 767.
 Gesta Romanorum, I. 34.
 Giaour, by Byron, III. 122.
 GIBBON, EDWARD, II. 9, 550.
 GIBBON, LEWIS GRASSIE (J. L. Mitchell), III. 849.
 GIBBON, PERCEVAL, III. 733.
 GIBBONS, STELLA, III. 852.
 GIBBS, SIR PHILIP, III. 847.
 GIBSON, WILFRID WILSON, III. 715, 723.
 GIFFORD, RICHARD, II. 441.
 GIFFORD, WILLIAM, II. 666.
 GILBERT, SIR WILLIAM SCHWENCK, III. 694.
 GILDAS, historian, I. 3.
 GILDER, RICHARD WATSON, III. 831.
 GILDON, CHARLES, II. 196.
 GILFILLAN, GEORGE, III. 480.
 GILFILLAN, ROBERT, III. 311.
 GILLESPIE, GEORGE, I. 821.
 GILLETTE, WILLIAM, III. 855.

- GILLIES, JOHN, II. 636.
 GILPIN, WILLIAM, II. 655.
 Gipsies, by Crabbe, II. 698; by Wordsworth, III. 24.
 GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS, I. 33.
 Gisippus, by Gerald Griffin, III. 357.
 GISSING, GEORGE, III. 711.
 Gitanjali, by Tagore, III. 710.
 Glaciers of the Alps, by Tyndall, III. 548.
 Glaciers, Theory of, by Forbes, III. 400.
 GLADSTONE, WILLIAM EWART, III. 447;
 Life of, by McCarthy, III. 660; by Lord Morley, III. 686.
 GLANVIL, RANULPH DE, I. 34.
 GLAPTHORNE, HENRY, I. 487.
 GLASCOCK, WILLIAM NUGENT, III. 259.
 GLASGOW, ELLEN, III. 855.
 Glasgow, by Alexander Smith, III. 605.
 GLASPELL, SUSAN, III. 856.
 Gleanings, by Gladstone, III. 448.
 GLEIG, GEORGE ROBERT, III. 323.
 GLEN, WILLIAM, III. 309.
 Glenara, by Campbell, II. 766.
 Glenarvon, by Lady Caroline Lamb, II. 780.
 Glenaveril, by the Earl of Lytton, III. 638.
 Gloomy Winter's now Awa', by Tannahill, II. 830.
 Gloria Mundi, by Harold Frederic, III. 832.
 Glossarium Archæologicum, by Spelman, I. 271.
 GLOUCESTER, ROBERT OF, I. 32, 42.
 GLOVER, JEAN, II. 810.
 GLOVER, RICHARD, II. 351.
 GLOVER, TERROT REAVELEY, III. 847.
 Go, Lovely Rose, by Edmund Waller, I. 627.
 Goblin Market, by C. Rossetti, III. 646, 647.
 God and the Bible, by M. Arnold, III. 595.
 God and the Man, by R. Buchanan, III. 656.
 Goddwyn, by Thomas Chatterton, II. 516.
 Godfrey of Bulloigne, by Carew, I. 353; by Fairfax, I. 444.
 GODLEY, ALFRED DENIS, III. 844.
 GODWIN, MARY WOLLSTONECRAFT, II. 706.
 GODWIN, WILLIAM, II. 702; Life of, by Kegan Paul, II. 703.
 Goethe, Life of, by Lewes, III. 496.
 Goidelic Invasion, I. 2, 831.
 Golden Book of Marcus Aurelius, by Lord Berners, I. 104.
 Golden Bough, by Sir J. G. Frazer, III. 713.
 Golden Butterfly, by Besant and Rice, III. 650.
 Golden Legend, by Longfellow, III. 770.
 Golden Legend, trans. by Chaucer, I. 128.
 Golden Targe, by Dunbar, I. 194.
 Golden Treasury, ed. by F. T. Palgrave, III. 609.
 GOLDING, ARTHUR, I. 266.
 GOLDSMITH, OLIVER, II. 8, 11, 478; Life of, by Forster, III. 474; by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 GOLLANCZ, SIR ISRAEL, III. 846.
 Gondibert, by D'Avenant, I. 628.
 GOODALL, WALTER, II. 380.
 Good Counsel, Ballad of, by James I., I. 183.
 Good-Natur'd Man, by Goldsmith, II. 480.
 Good-night, and Joy be wi' ye a', by Sir A. Boswell, II. 832.
 GOODWIN, THOMAS, I. 668.
 Good Words, III. 396.
 GOOGE, BARNABE, I. 265.
 Gorboduc, by Norton and Sackville, I. 157, 240.
 Gordian Knot, by C. W. S. Brooks, III. 492.
 GORDON, ADAM LINDSAY, III. 720, 730.
 GORDON, CHARLES WILLIAM, III. 728.
 GORDON, LADY DUFF (Lucie Austin), III. 373, 733.
 GORE, CATHERINE G. F., III. 279.
 GORE, CHARLES, III. 843.
 Gorgeous Gallery of Gallant Inventions, I. 257.
 GOSSE, SIR EDMUND, III. 696.
 Gossip in a Library, by Sir E. Gosse, III. 696.
 GOSSON, STEPHEN, I. 266.
 Gotham, by C. Churchill, II. 496, 497.
 GOUGH, RICHARD, II. 620.
 GOULDSBURY, CULLEN, III. 733.
 Governance of England, by Fortescue, I. 90.
 Government, Best Form of, by Sir G. C. Lewis, III. 207.
 Government, Discourses on, by Algernon Sidney, I. 716.
 Governour, by Sir T. Elyot, I. 127.
 GOWER, JOHN, I. 35, 74.
 Grace Abounding, by Bunyan, I. 710, 722.
 GRAFTON, RICHARD, I. 257.
 GRAHAM, DOUGAL, II. 810.
 GRAHAM, ENNIS (Mrs. Mary Louisa Stewart Molesworth), III. 850.
 GRAHAM, JAMES. See MONTRUSE, MARQUESS OF.
 GRAHAM, R. B. CUNNINGHAME, III. 724, 843.
 GRAHAM, ROBERT, II. 797.
 GRAHAM, STEPHEN, III. 848.
 Graham of Claverhouse, by Mark Napier, III. 201.
 GRAHAME, JAMES, II. 689.
 GRAHAME, KENNETH, III. 844.
 GRAHAME, SIMION, I. 818.
 GRAINGER, JAMES, II. 375.
 Grail of Assent, by Newman, III. 338.
 GRAND, SARAH, III. 851.
 Grandfather's Chair, by Hawthorne, III. 780.
 Grandissimes, by G. W. Cable, III. 829.
 GRANGER, JAMES, II. 385.
 GRANT, JAMES, III. 578.
 GRANT, JAMES AUGUSTUS, III. 610.
 GRANT, MRS ANNE, II. 596.
 GRANT, MRS ELIZABETH, II. 596.
 GRANVILLE, G. See LANSDOWNE, LORD.
 GRANVILLE-BARKER, HARLEY, III. 847.
 Grass of Parnassus, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 GRATTAN, HENRY, II. 678.
 GRATTAN, THOMAS COLLEY, III. 350.
 Grave, by Robert Blair, II. 305.
 Graver Thoughts of a Country Parson, by A. K. H. Boyd, III. 624.
 GRAVES, ALFRED PERCEVAL, III. 694.
 GRAVES, CLOTILDE, III. 733.
 GRAVES, RICHARD, II. 376.
 GRAVES, ROBERT, III. 849.
 Graves of a Household, by Mrs Hemans, III. 180.
 Graves of Tirconnel and Tyrone, by A. de Vere, III. 582.
 GRAY, DAVID, III. 657.
 GRAY, MAXWELL (Miss M. Tuttielt), III. 851.
 GRAY, THOMAS, II. 11, 359; III. 5; book on, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
 Great Adventure, by Arnold Bennett, III. 712.
 Great Britain, History of, by Speed, I. 271; by Hume, II. 377-381.
 Great Duke of Florence, by Massinger, I. 464, 466.
 Great Remembrance, by R. W. Gilder, III. 831.
 Great Stone Face, by Hawthorne, III. 782.
 Greatest English Poets, by Addison, II. 212, 218.
 Greece, History of, by W. Mitford, II. 630-632; by John Gillies, II. 636; by Thirlwall, III. 204; by Finlay, III. 217; by George Grote, III. 199; Ancient Language and Literature of, by Colonel Wm. Mure, III. 219.
 Greece and Russia, Travels in, by Bayard Taylor, III. 822.
 Greek Social Life, by Sir John P. Mahaffy, III. 688.
 GREELEY, HORACE, III. 811.
 GREEN, JOHN RICHARD, III. 652.
 GREEN, MATTHEW, II. 288.
 GREEN, MRS ALICE STOPFORD, III. 850.
 GREEN, MRS MARY ANNE EVERETT, III. 850.
 GREEN, THOMAS HILL, III. 651.
 Green Fire, by Fiona Macleod, III. 705.
 Green grow the Rashes, by Burns, II. 824.
 Green Linnet, by Wordsworth, III. 16, 21.
 Green Mansions, by W. H. Hudson, III. 711.
 GREENE, ROBERT, I. 238, 240, 323.
 Greenland, by James Montgomery, II. 742, 743.
 GREG, PERCY, III. 400.
 GREG, WILLIAM RATHBONE, III. 400.
 GREGORY, LADY, III. 850.
 GREVILLE, CHARLES CAVENDISH FULKE, III. 319.
 GREVILLE, FULKE, LORD BROOKE, I. 354.
 GREY, EDWARD, VISCOUNT, III. 845.
 Grey, Memoir of Sir George, by Mandell Creighton, III. 687.
 GRIERSON, SIR HERBERT J. C., III. 840.
 GRIEVE, CHRISTOPHER M., III. 840.
 Grif, by Farjeon, III. 732.
 GRIFFIN, B., I. 278.
 GRIFFIN, GERALD, III. 357.
 Griffith Gaunt, by Charles Reade, III. 483.
 GRIMALD OF GRIMOALD, NICHOLAS, I. 278.
 Griselda, by Wilfrid S. Blunt, III. 691.
 GRISWOLD, RUFUS WILMOT, III. 853.
 Groats-worth of Wit, by Greene, I. 325.
 GROCYN, WILLIAM, I. 120.
 Grongar Hill, by John Dyer, II. 284.
 GROOME, FRANCIS HINDS, III. 842.
 GROSS, FRANCES, II. 629.
 GROSSETESTE, ROBERT, I. 34.
 GROTE, GEORGE, III. 199.
 Grotesque and Arabesque, Tales of the, by E. A. Poe, III. 786.
 GROVE, SIR GEORGE, III. 578.
 Gruch, by Gordon Bottomley, III. 714.
 GRUNDY, SYDNEY, III. 695.
 Gryll Grange, by T. L. Peacock, III. 150, 153.
 Guardian, II. 4, 121, 195, 214; extract by Addison, II. 226; commenced, II. 232; extract by Steele, II. 235.
 Guardian Angel, by Holmes, III. 791.
 Gude and Godde Ballads, I. 216.
 Guesses at Truth, by A. and J. Hare, III. 269, 270.
 GUEST, LADY CHARLOTTE, III. 387.
 Guiana, Discovery of, by Sir Walter Raleigh, I. 305.
 Guizot's Civilisation, trans. by Mrs Austin, III. 373.
 Gulistan, trans. by Sir E. Arnold, III. 663.
 Gulliver's Travels, by Swift, II. 125, 127, 141-143.
 Gull's Hornbook, by Dekker, I. 425.
 Gustavus Vasa, by Henry Brooke, II. 396.
 GUTHRIE, THOMAS, III. 342.
 GUTHRIE, THOMAS ANSTEE, III. 844.
 GUTHRIE, WILLIAM, II. 387.
 Guy Livingstone, by Lawrence, III. 624.
 Guy Mannering, by Scott, III. 40.
 Guy of Warwick, I. 51.
 GWYNN, STEPHEN, III. 846.
 H, Riddle on, by Miss Fanshawe, II. 739.
 HABBERTON, JOHN, III. 854.
 Habbie Simson, by R. Sempill, I. 818.
 HABBINGTON, WILLIAM, I. 571.
 Habitant, by W. H. Drummond, III. 728.
 Hafiz, Song of, by Sir W. Jones, II. 616.
 HAGGARD, SIR HENRY RIDER, III. 703.
 Hail, Columbia! by J. Hopkinson, III. 736.
 HAILES, LORD, II. 455.
 Hajji Baba, by Morier, II. 783, 784-787.
 HAKE, THOMAS GORDON, III. 384.
 HAKLUYT, RICHARD, I. 283; Hakluytus Posthumus, I. 449.
 HALE, EDWARD EVERETT, III. 853.
 HALE, SIR MATTHEW, I. 663.
 HALES, JOHN, I. 550.
 HALES, JOHN WESLEY, III. 840.
 Half-Century of Conflict, by Parkman, III. 818.
 Half-Heaven Poetry, I. 7.
 Half-Sister, by G. E. Jewsbury, III. 520.
 HALIBURTON, THOMAS CHANDLER, III. 726.
 HALIFAX, EARL OF, II. 244.
 HALIFAX, MARQUIS OF, I. 755.
 HALKET, GEORGE, II. 810.
 HALL, BASIL, III. 227.
 HALL, EDWARD, I. 106.
 HALL, JOSEPH, I. 417.
 HALL, MRS S. C., III. 280.
 HALL, ROBERT, II. 738.
 HALL, SAMUEL CARTER, III. 281.
 HALLAM, ARTHUR HENRY, III. 548.
 HALLAM, HENRY, III. 193.
 HALLECK, FITZ-GREENE, III. 749.
 Hallo, My Fancy, by Cleland, I. 829.
 Hallow-Fair, by F. Sempill (?), I. 819; by R. Fergusson, II. 806, 807.
 Hame Content, by R. Fergusson, II. 808.
 Hame, Hame, Hame, by Allan Cunningham, III. 304.
 HAMERTON, PHILIP GILBERT, III. 613.
 HAMILTON, ALEXANDER, III. 736.
 HAMILTON, ELIZABETH, II. 808.
 HAMILTON, SIR WILLIAM, III. 245.
 HAMILTON, THOMAS, III. 254.
 HAMILTON, W., OF BANGOUR, II. 309.
 HAMILTON, W., OF GILBERTFIELD, II. 309.
 Hamilton's Catechism, Archbishop, I. 218.
 Hamlet, by Shakespeare, I. 368.
 HAMLEY, SIR EDWARD BRUCE, III. 839.
 HAMMOND, JAMES, II. 422.
 HAMPOLE, RICHARD ROLLE OF, I. 49.
 Handful of Pleasant Delights, I. 257, 274.
 Handlyng Synne, by Mannyng, I. 41, 43.
 Handy Andy, by Lover, III. 355.
 Hannah Thurston, by B. Taylor, III. 822.
 HANNAY, JAMES, III. 632, 726.
 Hannibal, by John Nichol, III. 637.
 Hans Breitmann Ballads, III. 784.
 Happiness, Essays on, by Sir G. Mackenzie, I. 826.
 Hard Cash, by C. Reade, III. 483, 484.
 HARDY, THOMAS, III. 678, 722.
 Hardyknute, by Lady E. Wardlaw, II. 312.
 HARE, AUGUSTUS and JULIUS, III. 269.
 Hare with Many Friends, by Gay, II. 174.
 HARRINGTON, JOHN, I. 264.
 HARRINGTON, SIR JOHN, I. 391.

- HARLAND, HENRY, III. 855.
 Harleian Miscellany, ed. by Oldys, II. 301.
 Harold, by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 HARPUR, CHARLES, III. 729.
 HARRADEN, BEATRICE, III. 851.
 HARRINGTON, JAMES, I. 619.
 HARRINGTON, SIR JOHN. See HARRINGTON, SIR JOHN.
 HARRIS, JAMES, II. 358.
 HARRIS, JOEL CHANDLER, III. 831.
 HARRISON, CONSTANCE CARY, III. 854.
 HARRISON, FREDERIC, III. 661.
 HARRISON, MARY ST LEGER, III. 704.
 HARRISS, HENRY, III. 853.
 Harris's (Mrs Frances) Petition, 1700, by Swift, II. 133.
 Harrowing of Hell, I. 45.
 Harry Coverdale's Courtship, by F. E. Smedley, III. 402.
 Harry Lorrequer, by Lever, III. 359, 360.
 Harry Richmond, by Meredith, III. 658.
 HARTE, FRANCIS BRET, III. 827.
 HARTLEY, DAVID, II. 338.
 HARVEY, GABRIEL, I. 332.
 Hassan the Camel-driver, by Collins, II. 369.
 Hastings, Speech against Warren, by Sheridan, II. 589.
 Haunch of Venison, by Goldsmith, II. 480, 486.
 Haunted and the Haunters, by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 Haunted Palace, by E. A. Poe, III. 789.
 Havelok the Dane, I. 43, 44, 336.
 HAWES, STEPHEN, I. 112.
 HAWKER, ROBERT STEPHEN, III. 381.
 HAWKESWORTH, JOHN, II. 410.
 HAWKINS, SIR ANTHONY HOPE, III. 708.
 Hawthorn and Lavender, by W. E. Henley, III. 695.
 HAWTHORNE, JULIAN, III. 831.
 HAWTHORNE, NATHANIEL, III. 778.
 Hawthorne, by Henry James, III. 830.
 HAY, IAN (John Hay Beith), III. 847.
 HAY, JOHN, III. 825.
 Haydon, Autobiography of B. R., compiled and edited by Tom Taylor, III. 403.
 HAYLEY, WILLIAM, II. 614.
 HAYNE, PAUL HAMILTON, III. 853.
 HAYWARD, ABRAHAM, III. 327.
 HAYWARD, SIR JOHN, I. 271.
 Haze, by H. D. Thoreau, III. 798.
 HAZLITT, WILLIAM, III. 79.
 'H. D.' (Hilda Doolittle), III. 856.
 HEAD, SIR FRANCIS BOND, III. 266.
 HEAD, SIR GEORGE, III. 266.
 Headlong Hall, by Thomas Love Peacock, III. 160, 151.
 HEARN, LAFCADIO, III. 842.
 HEARNE, THOMAS, II. 244.
 Heart of Gold, by D. Jerrold, III. 328.
 Heart of Midlothian, by Scott, III. 39, 44-46.
 Heartsease, by Miss Yonge, III. 535.
 Hearts-ease and Rue, by Lowell, III. 802.
 Heat as a Mode of Motion, by Tyndall, III. 548.
 Heathen Chinee, by Bret Harte, III. 827.
 Heavens, Mechanism of the, by Mrs Somerville, III. 186.
 HEAVYSEGE, CHARLES, III. 725.
 HEDER, REGINALD, III. 212.
 Hebrew Melodies, by Byron, III. 122.
 Hecatompethia, by T. Watson, I. 241, 277.
 Hedda Gabler, trans. by Gosse, III. 696.
 Hegel, Secret of, by J. H. Stirling, III. 601.
 Heir at law, by Colman, II. 656, 657.
 Heiress of Bruges, by Grattan, III. 351.
 Heir of Redclyffe, by Miss Yonge, III. 535.
 Helbeck of Bannisdale, by Mrs H. Ward, III. 704.
 Helen of Kirkconnel by J. Mayne, II. 811.
 Helen of Troy, by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 Helenore, by Alexander Ross, II. 317.
 Hellas, by Shelley, III. 112, 116.
 Hellenics, by Landor, III. 141.
 HELPS, SIR ARTHUR, III. 478.
 HEMANS, MRS, III. 179.
 HEMINGWAY, ERNEST, III. 856.
 HENLEY, WILLIAM ERNEST, III. 695.
 HENRY, MATTHEW, II. 60.
 HENRY, O. (W. S. Porter), III. 833.
 HENRY, ROBERT, II. 388.
 Henry II., Reign of, by Lyttelton, II. 340.
 Henry IV., by Shakespeare, I. 366.
 Henry V., by Shakespeare, I. 366.
 Henry VI., by Shakespeare, I. 359.
 HENRY VIII. as author, I. 149.
 Henry VIII., by Fletcher and Shakespeare, I. 373; Henry VIII., by Bacon, I. 385; Henry VIII., by Lord Herbert, I. 491.
 Henry and Emma, by Prior, II. 114.
 Henry Masterton, by G. P. R. James, III. 827.
 HENRY OF HUNTINGDON, I. 33.
 HENRYSON, ROBERT, I. 160, 189.
 HENTY, GEORGE ALFRED, III. 840.
 Hephzibah Guinness, by S. W. Mitchell, III. 825.
 HERAUD, JOHN ABRAHAM, III. 268.
 HERBERT, GEORGE, I. 495.
 HERBERT OF CHERBURY, LORD, I. 491.
 HERBERT, SIR THOMAS, I. 601.
 HERBERT, WILLIAM, II. 755.
 HERD, DAVID, II. 797.
 Herdsman's Book (Cura Pastoralis), I. 20.
 HEREFORD, NICHOLAS, I. 86.
 Heretic, A, by Walter C. Smith, III. 607.
 Heretics, by G. K. Chesterton, III. 711.
 Hereward the Wake, by Kingsley, III. 513.
 HERFORD, CHARLES HAROLD, III. 843.
 HERGESHEIMER, JOSEPH, III. 856.
 Hermes, by James Harris, II. 358.
 Hermit, by Beattie, II. 526, 527; by Parnell, II. 249.
 HERNE, JAMES A., III. 854.
 Hero and Leander, by Marlowe, I. 352.
 Heroic Stanzas, by Dryden, I. 792, 795, 800.
 HERRICK, ROBERT, I. 560, 731.
 HERSCHEL, SIR JOHN, III. 243.
 Hertha, by Swinburne, III. 675.
 HERVEY, JAMES, II. 338.
 HERVEY, LORD, Memoirs, II. 289.
 Hesiod, trans. by Cooke, II. 290.
 Hesperides, by Herrick, I. 560.
 HEWLETT, MAURICE HENRY, III. 845.
 HEYLYN, PETER, I. 582.
 HEYWOOD, JOHN, I. 152.
 HEYWOOD, THOMAS, I. 431.
 Hiawatha, by Longfellow, III. 770, 773.
 Hibernian Nights Entertainments, by Sir S. Ferguson, III. 362.
 HICHENS, ROBERT SMYTHE, III. 846.
 Hierarchie of the Blessed Angels, by T. Heywood, I. 433.
 Hieroglyphics, by Quarles, I. 566, 568.
 Higden's Polychronicon, I. 33, 84.
 HIGGINSON, T. WENTWORTH, III. 811.
 Highlander, by Mrs Anne Grant, II. 596.
 Highland Host, by Cleland, I. 820.
 Highland Parish, by Norman Macleod, III. 397.
 Highland Rambles, by Sir T. Dick Lauder, III. 305.
 High Life below Stairs, by James Townley, II. 410.
 Highways and Byways, by T. C. Grattan, III. 350.
 HILDRETH, RICHARD, III. 853.
 HILL, AARON, II. 197.
 HILL, GEORGE BIRKBECK, III. 840.
 Hills of Dream, by Fiona Macleod, III. 705.
 Hillyars and the Burtons, by H. Kingsley, III. 517.
 Hind and the Panther, by Dryden, I. 793, 796, 800.
 HINKSON, MRS KATHARINE TYNAN, III. 851.
 HINTON, JAMES, III. 613.
 His Darling Sin, by Miss Braddon, III. 690.
 Historical Characters, by H. L. Bulwer, III. 336.
 Historical Register, by Fielding, II. 340.
 Historic Doubts, by Whately, III. 196.
 Historie of the Reformation, by John Knox, I. 220.
 History, Study of, by Bolingbroke, II. 202, 204; by Lord Acton, III. 684.
 History, Universal, II. 387, 388.
 History of Our Own Times, by J. McCarthy, III. 660.
 History of English Poetry, by W. J. Courthope, III. 684.
 History of Scotland. See SCOTLAND.
 Histrio-Mastix, by W. Prynne, I. 584.
 HOADLY, BENJAMIN, II. 245.
 HOBBS, JOHN OLIVER (Pearl Mary Teresa Richards), III. 834.
 HOBBS, THOMAS, I. 553.
 HOBY, SIR THOMAS, I. 258.
 HOCCLAVE, THOMAS, I. 77.
 Hochelaga, by George Warburton, III. 274; ed. by Elliot Warburton, III. 274.
 HOCKING, JOSEPH, III. 843.
 HOCKING, SILAS KITTO, III. 842.
 HODGKIN, THOMAS, III. 661.
 HODGSON, FRANCES ELIZA (Frances Hodgson Burnett), III. 833.
 HODGSON, RALPH, III. 847.
 HOGAN, JAMES FRANCIS, III. 730.
 Hogarth, Epistle to, by Churchill, II. 495.
 497; Life of, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 HOGGEN, LANCELOT, III. 849.
 HOGO, JAMES, III. 8, 292.
 Hoggarty Diamond, by Thackeray, III. 456.
 Hohenlinden, by Campbell, II. 766, 769.
 HOLCROFT, THOMAS, II. 569.
 HOLINSHED, RAPHAEL, I. 255.
 HOLLAND, JOSIAH GILBERT, III. 778.
 HOLLAND, PHILEMON, I. 260.
 Holland-Tide Tales, by G. Griffin, III. 357.
 Holly Tree, by Southey, III. 52.
 HOLMES, OLIVER WENDELL, III. 790.
 HOLTY, WINIFRED, III. 852.
 Holy and Prophane State, by Fuller, I. 596, 597.
 Holy Dying, by Jeremy Taylor, I. 604, 606.
 Holy Living, by Jeremy Taylor, I. 604.
 Holy Roman Empire, by Bryce, III. 686.
 Holy Scriptures, Introduction to the, by Thomas Hartwell Horne, II. 714.
 Holy Thursday, by William Blake, II. 720.
 Holy War, by Bunyan, I. 720.
 Holy Willie's Prayer, by Burns, II. 822.
 HOLYOAKE, GEORGE JACOB, III. 839.
 HOME, HENRY (Lord Kames), II. 388.
 HOME, JOHN, II. 453.
 Homer, Studies on, by Gladstone, III. 448.
 Homer, translations of, by Chapman, I. 377; by Hobbes, I. 555, 559; by Clarke, II. 160; by Pope, II. 179, 191; by Tickell, II. 251; by Macpherson, II. 500; by Cowper, II. 602, 609; by Sotheby, II. 713; by Blackie, III. 490; by Morris, III. 665; by Lang, &c., III. 692.
 Homes and Haunts of the Italian Poets, III. 490.
 Homes of England, by Mrs Hemans, III. 180.
 Homilies of Ælfric, I. 26.
 Homilies on the Sacraments, by Edward Irving, III. 268.
 HONE, WILLIAM, II. 759.
 Honest Whore, by Dekker, I. 423.
 Honey Moon, by John Tobin, II. 710.
 HOOD, BASIL, III. 846.
 HOOD, THOMAS, III. 136.
 HOOD, TOM, the Younger, III. 668.
 HOOK, THEODORE EDWARD, III. 163.
 HOOKER, RICHARD, I. 279.
 HOOLE, JOHN, II. 755.
 'Hoosier Poet' (J. W. Riley), III. 831.
 Hoosier Schoolmaster, by E. Eggleston, III. 824.
 HOPE, ANTHONY (Sir Anthony Hope Hawkins), III. 708.
 HOPE, THOMAS, II. 745.
 Hope, by William Cowper, II. 603.
 HOPKINS, GERARD MANLEY, III. 713, 723.
 HOPKINS, JOHN, I. 150.
 Horace, trans. by Dryden, I. 806; by Smart, II. 424; by Geddes, II. 798, 800; by Conington, III. 634.
 Horace in London, by James and Horace Smith, III. 159.
 Horæ Hellenicæ, by J. S. Blackie, III. 490.
 Horæ Lyricæ, by Isaac Watts, II. 200-209.
 Horæ Paulinæ, by Paley, II. 643, 645.
 Horæ Subsecivæ, by Dr J. Brown, III. 449.
 Horatian Ode on Cromwell, by Marvell, I. 714.
 Horatius, by Macaulay, III. 369.
 HORNE, RICHARD HENRY, III. 413, 729.
 HORNE, THOMAS HARTWELL, II. 714.
 HORNUNG, ERNEST WILLIAM, III. 846.
 HORSLEY, SAMUEL, II. 640.
 Hospital Rhymes, by Henley, III. 695.
 HOUGHTON, LORD, III. 382.
 HOUGHTON, STANLEY, III. 848.
 Hound of Heaven, by Francis Thompson, III. 710.
 Hound of the Baskervilles, by Sir A. Conan Doyle, III. 707.
 Hours in a Library, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
 Hours of Idleness, by Lord Byron, III. 120.
 Hours of Thought, by James Martineau, III. 392, 393.
 House by the Churchyard, by Le Fanu, III. 365.
 House of Fame, by Chaucer, I. 63, 70.
 House of Life, by Rossetti, III. 642, 643, 644.
 House of the Seven Gables, by Hawthorne, III. 781.
 House of the Wolfings, by William Morris, III. 666.
 House of Titian, by Mrs Jameson, III. 185.
 House of Usher, by Poe, III. 780, 787, 788.
 Household Words, ed. by Dickens, III. 465.
 Householder, by Robert Browning, III. 565.
 HOUSMAN, ALFRED EDWARD, III. 713.
 HOUSMAN, LAURENCE, III. 847.
 HOVEY, RICHARD, III. 833.
 HOWARD, BRONSON, III. 854.
 HOWARD, EDWARD, III. 259.
 HOWARD, SIR ROBERT, I. 787.
 Howard, Life of John, by Hepworth Dixon, III. 578.
 HOWE, JOHN, I. 669.
 HOWE, JOSEPH, III. 725, 726.
 HOWE, JULIA WARD, III. 826.

- HOWELL, JAMES, I. 572.
 HOWELLS, WILLIAM DEAN, III. 820.
 HOWIE, JOHN, II. 640.
 HOWITT, WILLIAM and MARY, III. 283.
 HUCHOWN OF THE AWLE REALE, I. 51, 166, 171.
 Huckleberry Finn, by Mark Twain, III. 826.
 Hudibras, by Butler, I. 735, 737.
 HUDSON, HENRY NORMAN, III. 853.
 HUDSON, W. H., III. 711.
 HUDSON, WILLIAM HENRY, III. 845.
 HUEFFER, FORD MADON, III. 847.
 HUGGINS, SIR WILLIAM, III. 839.
 Hugh Trevor, by Holcroft, II. 570.
 Hugh Wynne, by S. W. Mitchell, III. 825.
 HUGHES, JOHN, II. 196.
 HUGHES, THOMAS, I. 333.
 HUGHES, THOMAS, III. 577.
 HULME, THOMAS ERNEST, III. 718, 848.
 Human Life, by S. Rogers, II. 723, 725.
 Human Mind, by James Mill, II. 757; by Thomas Brown, II. 761.
 Human Nature, by Hobbes, I. 554, 557, 558.
 Human Personality, by Myers, III. 691.
 Human Understanding, by Locke, II. 18; by David Hume, II. 377.
 HUME, ALEXANDER, I. 507.
 HUME, DAVID, II. 377; Life of, by J. H. Burton, III. 398.
 HUME, MARTIN, III. 841.
 HUMPHREYS, MRS DESMOND, III. 850.
 Humphry Clinker, by Smollett, II. 443, 444, 447.
 HUNGERFORD, MRS MARGARET WOLFE, III. 851.
 HUNNIS, WILLIAM, I. 156.
 HUNT, JAMES HENRY LEIGH, III. 147.
 HUNTER, MRS, II. 599.
 Huon of Bordeaux, ed. by Lee, III. 707.
 HURD, RICHARD, II. 428.
 Hurloughbo, II. 99.
 Hurt of Sedition, by Sir J. Cheke, I. 143.
 Husband's Message, in Exeter Book, I. 8.
 HUTCHESON, FRANCIS, II. 290.
 HUTCHINSON, A. S. M., III. 848.
 HUTCHINSON, LUCY, I. 674.
 HUTTON, RICHARD HOLT, III. 632.
 HUXLEY, ALDOUS, III. 716, 720.
 HUXLEY, JULIAN, III. 848.
 HUXLEY, THOMAS HENRY, III. 615.
 Hwomely Rhymes, by W. Barnes, III. 412.
 HYDE, DOUGLAS, III. 845.
 Hydriotaphia, by Sir T. Browne, I. 591, 592, 593-595.
 Hylas and Philonous, by Berkeley, II. 265, 267-269.
 Hymen's Triumph, by S. Daniel, I. 339, 340.
 Hymn of Heavenly Beauty, by Spenser, I. 296, 302; to the Name above every Name, by Crashaw, I. 681; on the Nativity, by Milton, I. 687, 693; to Darkness, by Thomas Yalden, II. 200; to Intellectual Beauty, by Shelley, III. 108, 112.
 Hymns for Infant Minds, by Ann and Jane Taylor, III. 174.
 Hypatia, by Charles Kingsley, III. 513.
 Hyperion, by Keats, III. 99, 100, 103; by Longfellow, III. 768, 769.
 Hypolympia, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
 HYSLOP, JAMES, III. 310.
- I do not love Thee, by Mrs Norton, III. 386.
 I remember, I remember, by Hood, III. 138, 140.
 Ibsen, by Gosse, III. 696.
 Ichabod, by J. G. Whittier, III. 775, 776.
 I'd be a Butterfly, by T. H. Bayly, III. 241.
 Idalia, by Ouida, III. 690.
 Iddesleigh, Life and Letters of Lord, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 Ideal Husband, by Oscar Wilde, III. 707.
 Ideals in Ireland, III. 707.
 Idea of a Patriot King, by Bolingbroke, II. 202, 206.
 Ideas of Good and Evil, by W. B. Yeats, III. 709.
 Idler, by Dr Johnson, II. 459.
 Idler in Italy, by the Countess of Blessington, III. 278.
 Idyll of Red Gulch, by Bret Harte, III. 827.
 Idylls of the King, by Tennyson, III. 541, 542.
 If Doughty Deeds, by R. Graham, II. 798.
 Iliad, translations of, by Chapman, I. 377; by Hobbes, I. 555, 559; by Clarke, II. 160; by Alexander Pope, II. 179, 191; by Tickell, II. 251; by Macpherson, II. 500; by Cowper, II. 609; by Sotheby, II. 713; by Blackie, III. 490; by Conington, III. 634; by A. Lang, &c., III. 692.
 Illumination, by Harold Frederic, III. 832.
 Il Penseroso, by Milton, I. 687, 696.
- Image of Death, by Southwell, I. 338.
 Imaginary Conversations, by Landor, III. 141, 144-146.
 Imaginary Portraits, by Pater, III. 607.
 Imagination and Fancy, by Leigh Hunt, III. 148.
 Imagist Poetry, III. 723.
 Imitations of Horace, by Pope, II. 179.
 Imitations of Living Writers, by Isaac Hawkins Browne, II. 287.
 Immorality of the English Stage, by Jeremy Collier, II. 47.
 Importance of being Earnest, by Oscar Wilde, III. 707.
 Imposture, by Shirley, I. 485.
 Impregnable Rock of Scripture, by Gladstone, III. 448.
 Improvement of the Mind, by Mrs Chapone, II. 418.
 In All Shades, by Grant Allen, III. 727.
 INCHBALD, MRS ELIZABETH, II. 584.
 Inconstancy Upbraided, by Sir R. Ayton, I. 508.
 Inconstant Mistress, by Sir R. Ayton, I. 508.
 Independent in Politics, by J. R. Lowell, III. 801, 802.
 India, History of, by Mountstuart Elphinstone, III. 366.
 India, China, and Japan, by Bayard Taylor, III. 821.
 Indian Mutiny, by Malleison, III. 632.
 Indian Pilgrim, by Mrs Sherwood, III. 324.
 Indicator, edited by L. Hunt, III. 148, 149.
 Indostan, History of, by Orme, II. 541.
 Inductive Sciences, by Whewell, III. 198.
 Infant Medusa, by T. G. Hake, III. 384.
 Infernal Marriage, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 436, 439.
 Infidel, by Miss Braddon, III. 690.
 INGE, WILLIAM RALPH, III. 845.
 INGELOW, JEAN, III. 528.
 Ingoldsby Legends, by Barham, III. 166.
 INGRAM, J. K., III. 580.
 Inheritance, by Susan E. Ferrier, III. 300.
 Inisfail, by Aubrey de Vere, III. 581.
 Initials, by the Baroness von Tautphoeus, III. 385.
 Inland Voyage, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 697.
 In Memoriam, by Tennyson, III. 541, 542, 546, 548.
 Inner Temple Masque, by W. Browne, I. 480, 490.
 INNES, COSMO, III. 201.
 INNES, THOMAS, II. 302.
 Innkeeper of Abbeville, by Fitzball, II. 783.
 Innocents Abroad, by Mark Twain, III. 826.
 Inquirer, by Godwin, II. 702.
 Inquiry into the Human Mind, by Reid, II. 388.
 Insane Root, by Mrs Campbell Praed, III. 732.
 Insatiate Countess, by Marston, I. 462, 464.
 Insectivorous Plants, by Darwin, III. 417.
 Instauration of the Sciences, by Lord Bacon, I. 380.
 Institutes of Metaphysics, by Ferrier, III. 398.
 Instructions for Forreine Travel, by Howell, I. 573, 577.
 Intellectual Development, by J. B. Crozier, III. 727.
 Intellectual Development of Europe, by J. W. Draper, III. 825.
 Intellectual Powers, by J. Abercromby, III. 242; by Reid, II. 388.
 Intellectual System, by Cudworth, I. 670.
 Interludes, I. 150; Interlude of the Four Elements, I. 102, 152.
 In the Shadows, by David Gray, III. 657.
 Intimations of Immortality, by Wordsworth, III. 13, 16, 25.
 Intuitions of the Mind, by J. M'Cosh, III. 397.
 Intuitive Theory of Morals, by Miss Cobbe, III. 537.
 Invasion of the Crimea, by Kinglake, III. 421, 422-424.
 In Vinculis, by Wilfrid S. Blunt, III. 691.
 In War Time, by S. W. Mitchell, III. 825.
 Ion, by Sir T. N. Talfourd, III. 272.
 Ionica, by Wm. J. Cory, III. 577.
 Iota (Mrs Caffyn), III. 851.
 IRELAND, WILLIAM HENRY, II. 711.
 Ireland in Burlesque, A Voyage to, by C. Cotton, I. 776; Legends and Stories of, by Samuel Lover, III. 355; Past and Present, by Croker, III. 170; Sketches in, by Caesar Otway, III. 345; Songs and Ballads of, edited by M. J. Barry, III. 579; Tales of, by Carleton, III. 352; Tour in, by Arthur Young, II. 627; View of, by Spenser, I. 204, 297, 303.
- Irene, by Johnson, II. 457, 458.
 Irish Airman foresees his Death, by W. B. Yeats, III. 709.
 Irish Ballads, edited by D. F. MacCarthy, III. 579, 583.
 Irish Contribution to English Literature, I. 831.
 Irish Emigrant, by Lady Dufferin, III. 385.
 Irish Melodies, by Moore, III. 346.
 Irish Nation, by James Wills, III. 350.
 Irish Peasantry, Stories of the, by Mrs S. C. Hall, III. 280.
 Irish Peasantry, Traits and Stories of the, by W. Carleton, III. 352.
 Irish Poetry, by Stopford Brooke and another, III. 662.
 Irish Rebellion, by W. H. Maxwell, III. 268.
 Irish Songs and Ballads, by A. P. Graves, III. 694.
 IRVING, EDWARD, III. 268.
 IRVING, WASHINGTON, III. 745.
 Isaac Ashford, by G. Crabbe, II. 696.
 Isabella, by Keats, III. 99, 101, 102.
 Isabella, by Southerne, II. 75, 76.
 Ishmael, by Miss Braddon, III. 690.
 Island, by Lord Byron, III. 131.
 Island Nights' Entertainments, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699.
 Isle of Palms, by John Wilson, III. 246.
 Israel in Egypt, by E. Atherstone, III. 146.
 Israel Potter, by H. Melville, III. 821.
 Israfel, by Poe, III. 785, 787, 788.
 It is Never too Late to Mend, by C. Reade, III. 483.
 Italian, by Mrs Radcliffe, II. 594.
 Italian Influence on English Literature, I. 235.
 Italy, by Beckford, II. 621; by Rogers, II. 723, 724, 726, 727; by Lady Morgan, II. 781; by Hodgkin, III. 661; Remarks on, by Addison, II. 212, 219; Visit to, by Frances Trollope, III. 276.
 Itinerary, by Leland, I. 140.
 Ivanhoe, by Scott, III. 34, 37.
- Jack Brag, by Theodore Hook, III. 164, 165.
 Jack Cade's Rebellion, by R. Fabyan, I. 105.
 Jack Hinton, by Lever, III. 359.
 JACKS, LAWRENCE P., III. 845.
 Jack Sheppard, by Ainsworth, III. 378.
 Jack Wilton, by Nash, I. 330.
 Jacob and Esau (by Hunnis?), I. 155, 156.
 Jacobean Literature, I. 235.
 Jacobean Poets, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
 Jacob Faithful, by Marryat, III. 255.
 Jacobite's Journal, ed. by Fielding, II. 341.
 JACOBS JOSEPH, III. 730.
 JACOBS, WILLIAM WYMARK, III. 846.
 JAGO, RICHARD, II. 438.
 Jail Journal, by John Mitchell, III. 582.
 JAMES, GEORGE PAYNE RAINSFORD, III. 327.
 JAMES, HENRY, III. 720, 830.
 JAMES, WILLIAM, III. 831.
 JAMES I., I. 505; Court of, by Lucy Aikin, III. 178.
 JAMES I. of Scotland, I. 166, 183.
 JAMES II., History of the Reign of, by Fox, II. 636.
 JAMESON, ANNA, III. 183.
 Jamie Telfer, I. 526.
 Jane Eyre, by C. Brontë, III. 522, 524.
 Jane Shore, by Nicholas Rowe, II. 93, 94.
 Janice Meredith, by P. L. Ford, III. 832.
 Japhet in Search of a Father, by Marryat, III. 255.
 Jar of Honey, by Leigh Hunt, III. 148.
 Jason, by William Morris, III. 665, 667.
 Jeanie Morrison, by Motherwell, III. 309.
 JEANS, SIR JAMES, III. 847.
 JEBB, SIR RICHARD CLAVERHOUSE, III. 841.
 JEFFERIES, RICHARD, III. 640.
 JEFFERSON, THOMAS, III. 730.
 JEFFREY, FRANCIS, III. 85; Life of, by Henry Cockburn, III. 313.
 Jekyll (Dr) and Mr Hyde, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 698.
 Jenny dang the Weaver, by Sir A. Boswell, II. 830.
 Jenny's Bawbee, by Sir A. Boswell, II. 831.
 JEROME, JEROME KLAPKA, III. 844.
 JERROLD, DOUGLAS, III. 328.
 JERROLD, WILLIAM BLANCHARD, III. 331.
 Jess, by Sir H. Rider Haggard, III. 703.
 JESSOP, AUGUSTUS, III. 839.
 Jesuits in North America, by Parkman, III. 818.
 Jew of Malta, by Marlowe, I. 349, 361.
 JEWETT, SARAH ORNE, III. 854.

- Jews, History of the, by Milman, III. 209.
 JEWSDRY, GERALDINE ENDOR, III. 520.
 Joan and Peter, by Wells, III. 713.
 Joan of Arc, by Southey, III. 48, 49, 50;
 by De Quincey, III. 93.
 John Brent, by Theodore Winthrop, III.
 823.
 John Bull, by Arbuthnot, II. 145; by
 Colman, II. 656, 657.
 John Gilpin, by Cowper, II. 605.
 John Halifax, by Mrs Craik, III. 536.
 John Herring, by Baring-Gould, III. 664.
 John Holdsworth, by Clark Russell, III.
 691.
 John Inglesant, by Shorthouse, III. 637.
 John March, Southerner, by G. W. Cable,
 III. 830.
 John Ploughman's Talk, by Spurgeon, III.
 649.
 John Splendid, by Neil Munro, III. 713.
 Johnnie Courteau, by W. H. Drummond,
 III. 727.
 Johnny Gibb of Gushetneuk, III. 839.
 JOHNSON, DR SAMUEL, II. 8, 457; Life of, by Boswell, II. 469, 470-473.
 JOHNSON, E. PAULINE, III. 726, 851.
 JOHNSON, LIONEL, III. 846.
 JOHNSON, SAMUEL (Whig), II. 99.
 JOHNSTON, ARTHUR, I. 519.
 JOHNSTON, MARY, III. 834.
 JOHNSTON, SIR HARRY HAMILTON, III. 844.
 JOHNSTONE, CHARLES, II. 410.
 JOHNSTONE, CHRISTIAN ISOBEL, II. 772.
 Jolly Beggars, by Burns, II. 825.
 Jonathan to John, by J. R. Lowell, III.
 803.
 Jonathan Wild, by Fielding, II. 341, 344.
 JONES, EBENEZER, III. 506.
 JONES, ERNEST, III. 505.
 JONES, HENRY ARTHUR, III. 695.
 JONES, SIR WILLIAM, II. 615.
 JONSON, BEN, I. 401.
 Jorrock's Jaunts, by Surtees, III. 414.
 JORTIN, JOHN, II. 301.
 Joseph and his Brethren, by C. J. Wells,
 III. 657.
 Joseph Andrews, by Fielding, II. 340, 342-344.
 Joseph Vance, by Wm. de Morgan, III. 709.
 Joshua Davidson, by Mrs Lynn Linton, III.
 536.
 Journalism, II. 2, 15.
 Journey to France, by J. Corbet, I. 456; to the Hebrides, by Boswell, II. 467; to the Western Isles, by Johnson, II. 459, 463.
 JOWETT, BENJAMIN, III. 494.
 JOYCE, JAMES, III. 720, 848.
 JUDD, SYLVESTER, III. 773.
 Jude the Obscure, by T. Hardy, III. 679.
 Judgment of the Flood, by Heraud, III. 268.
 Judith, in Beowulf MS., I. 11, 12.
 Julia de Roubigné, by Mackenzie, II. 536.
 Julian, by Miss Mitford, III. 176.
 Julian, Count, by Landor, III. 141.
 Julian and Maddalo, by Shelley, III. 109.
 Julian the Apostate, by Johnson, II. 90.
 Julia's Letter, by Lord Byron, III. 133.
 Julius Cæsar, by Shakespeare, I. 368.
 June Bracken and Heather, by Tennyson,
 III. 543, 547.
 Jungle Books, by Rudyard Kipling, III.
 708.
 Junian MS., I. 10.
 JUNIUS, II. 517.
 Jurgen, by J. B. Cabell, III. 836.
 Justice, by J. Galsworthy, III. 712.
 Justice and Expediency, by Whittier, III.
 774.
 Justin Martyr, by Trench, III. 303.
 Just So Stories, by Rudyard Kipling, III.
 708.
- KAMES, LORD, II. 388.
 Kant, by Edward Caird, III. 625; by Mahaffy, III. 689; Text-book to, by
 J. H. Stirling, III. 661.
 Karshish, by Browning, III. 563.
 Kate Coventry, by G. J. Whyte-Melville,
 III. 585.
 Kate Kearney, by Lady Morgan, II. 781.
 Katerfelto, by Whyte-Melville, III. 585.
 Kathrina, by J. G. Holland, III. 778.
 KAVANAGH, JULIA, III. 850.
 KAYE, SIR JOHN WILLIAM, III. 482.
 KEATS, JOHN, III. 99; Life and Remains of, by Lord Houghton, III. 383; Life and Letters, by Sir Sidney Colvin, III.
 693.
 KEBLE, JOHN, III. 215.
 KEIGHTLEY, THOMAS, III. 259.
 KEITH, ROBERT, II. 305.
 KELLY, HUGH, II. 571.
- KELVIN, LORD, III. 839.
 KEN, THOMAS, II. 45.
 KENDALL, HENRY CLARENCE, III. 729, 731.
 Kenilworth, by Scott, III. 34.
 KENNEDY, JOHN PENDLETON, III. 853.
 KENNEDY, MARGARET, III. 852.
 KENNEDY, QUINTIN, I. 230.
 KENNEDY, WALTER, I. 200.
 Kentons, by W. D. Howells, III. 829.
 Kentucky Cardinal, by J. L. Allen, III. 831.
 KER, WILLIAM PATON, III. 843.
 Khartoum, by J. A. Grant, III. 610.
 KIDD, BENJAMIN, III. 844.
 Kidnapped, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 609, 701.
 Kildrostan, by Walter C. Smith, III. 607.
 Killarney, Legend of, by Bayly, III. 241.
 KILLIGREW, SIR WILLIAM, I. 634.
 KILLIGREW, THOMAS, I. 634.
 Killing no Murder, by Saxby, I. 622.
 Kilmeny, by Hogg, III. 293, 294.
 Kim, by Rudyard Kipling, III. 708.
 KINCAID, SIR JOHN, III. 223.
 KING, HENRY, I. 563.
 KING, WILLIAM, II. 197.
 King Alisaunder, I. 51.
 King Arthur, by Lord Lytton, III. 333;
 by Sir R. Blackmore, II. 107.
 King Erik, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
 King Horn, I. 43, 45.
 King John, by Shakespeare, I. 361.
 King Lear, by Shakespeare, I. 371.
 King Lear's Wife, by Gordon Bottomley,
 III. 714.
 King Solomon's Mines, by Sir Rider Haggard, III. 703.
 King's Own, by F. Marryat, III. 255, 258.
 King's Tragedy, by Rossetti, III. 643.
 Kingis Quair, by James I., I. 166, 183.
 KINGLAKE, ALEXANDER WILLIAM, III. 421.
 KINGSFORD, WILLIAM, III. 727.
 KINGSLEY, CHARLES, III. 513.
 KINGSLEY, GEORGE HENRY, III. 517.
 KINGSLEY, HENRY, III. 517, 729.
 KINGSLEY, MARY HENRIETTA, III. 517.
 KINGSTON, W. H. G., III. 482.
 Kinmont Willie, I. 539.
 KIPLING, RUDYARD, III. 708, 721.
 Kipps, by H. G. Wells, III. 712.
 KIRBY, WILLIAM, III. 726, 839.
 Kitten, by Joanna Baillie, II. 730.
 KITTO, JOHN, III. 373.
 Kitty of Coleraine, by E. Lysaght, II. 759.
 KLEIN, CHARLES, III. 855.
 KNIGHT, CHARLES, III. 266; his Cyclopædia, Magazine, III. 266.
 KNIGHT, HENRY GALLY, II. 782.
 KNIGHT, RICHARD PAYNE, II. 678.
 Knight of the Burning Pestle, by Beaumont and Fletcher, I. 471.
 Knight of the Kirk, by W. Meston, II. 316.
 KNOLLES, RICHARD, I. 272.
 KNOWLES, HERBERT, II. 787.
 KNOWLES, JAMES SHERIDAN, III. 225.
 KNOX, JOHN, I. 166, 218; Life of, by
 M'Crie, II. 703; by Hume Brown, III.
 716.
 KNOX, VICESIMUS, II. 713.
 KNOX, WILLIAM, II. 782.
 Koran, trans. by George Sale, II. 388.
 Kruitznar, by Harriet Lee, II. 653.
 Kuzzilbash, by J. B. Fraser, II. 787.
 KYD, THOMAS, I. 240, 241, 319.
 Kynd Kyttok, by Dunbar, I. 197.
- La Belle Dame sans Merci, by Keats, III.
 99, 101, 105.
 Lachrymæ Musarum, by Sir W. Watson,
 III. 706.
 Lack of Gold, by Adam Austin, II. 810.
 Lacon, by C. C. Colton, III. 172.
 Lady Audley's Secret, by Miss Braddon,
 III. 690.
 Lady-Errant, by Cartwright, I. 635.
 Lady of Last Century, by Doran, III. 331.
 Lady of Lyons, by Lord Lytton, III. 333.
 Lady of Pleasure, by Shirley, I. 484, 485.
 Lady of the Lake, by Scott, III. 37.
 Lady or the Tiger, by Stockton, III. 824.
 Lady Windermere's Fan, by Oscar Wilde,
 III. 707.
 LAIDLAW, WILLIAM, III. 307.
 LAING, DAVID, III. 201.
 LAING, MALCOLM, II. 637.
 Laird o' Cockpen, by Lady Nairne, II. 828.
 Lake Lyrics, by W. W. Campbell, III. 728.
 Lake Regions, by Sir R. F. Burton, III. 610.
 Lalla Rookh, by Moore, III. 347, 349.
 L'Allegro, by Milton, I. 687, 695.
 LAMB, CHARLES, III. 72; Memoir of, by Talfourd, III. 272.
 LAMB, LADY CAROLINE, II. 780.
- Lame Lover, by Foote, II. 432-434.
 Lament for the Makaris, by Dunbar, I. 196.
 Lament for Thomas Davis, by Sir S. Ferguson, III. 363.
 Lament of the Irish Emigrant, by the Countess of Dufferin, III. 385.
 Lamia, by Keats, III. 99, 101.
 Lamplighter, by Miss Cummins, III. 827.
 LAMPMAN, ARCHIBALD, III. 728.
 Lamp of our Feet, by Bernard Barton, III.
 231.
 LAMPSON. See LOCKER-LAMPSON, III. 600.
 Lancashire Witches, by Shadwell, II. 63.
 Land and Water, ed. by Buckland, III. 590.
 Land Monopoly, by E. Jones, III. 506.
 Land Nationalisation, by A. R. Wallace,
 III. 614.
 Land of the Saracen, by Bayard Taylor,
 III. 821.
 Land o' the Leal, by Lady Nairne, II. 828.
 Land Sharks, by W. N. Glascock, III. 259.
 LONDON, LETITIA ELIZABETH, III. 181.
 LANDOR, WALTER SAVAGE, III. 141.
 Landor's Cottage, by Poe, III. 787.
 LANE, EDWARD WILLIAM, III. 327.
 LANG, ANDREW, III. 692.
 LANGHORNE, DR JOHN, II. 521.
 LANGLAND, WILLIAM, I. 55.
 LANIER, SIDNEY, III. 828.
 LANSDOWNE, LORD, II. 244.
 Laodicean, by Thomas Hardy, III. 679.
 LARCOM, LUCY, III. 853.
 LARDNER, DIONYSIUS, III. 266; his Cyclopædia, III. 266.
 LARDNER, NATHANIEL, II. 247.
 Lars, by Bayard Taylor, III. 822.
 La Saiziaz, by Browning, III. 556, 559, 566.
 La Salle and the Great West, by Parkman,
 III. 818.
 Last Ballad, by J. Davidson, III. 706.
 Last Buccaneer, by Kingsley, III. 514, 516.
 Last Chronicle of Barset, by Trollope, III.
 487.
 Last Conquest of Ireland, by J. Mitchel,
 III. 583.
 Last Days of Herculaneum, by Edwin Atherstone, III. 146.
 Last Days of Pompeii, by Lord Lytton, III.
 332, 334.
 Last Entry, by Clark Russell, III. 691.
 Last Leaf, by Holmes, III. 790, 791, 792, 794.
 Last Man, by Campbell, II. 766, 770.
 Last of the Barons, by Lytton, III. 332.
 Last of the Mohicans, by Cooper, III. 750.
 Last Rose of Summer, by Moore, III. 349.
 Last Testimony, by Nayler, I. 624.
 LATIMER, HUGH, I. 136.
 Latin Christianity, by Milman, III. 209, 210.
 Latin Poetry, Sacred, by Trench, III. 393.
 Latin Writers before Ælfred, I. 16; after,
 I. 33.
 Latter-Day Pamphlets, by Carlyle, III.
 404, 405, 409.
 LAUDER, SIR THOMAS DICK, III. 305.
 LAUDER, WILLIAM, I. 710.
 LAUGHTON, SIR JOHN KNOX, III. 840.
 LAURENCE, DR FRENCH, II. 670.
 Laurence Bloomfield, by W. Allingham, III.
 605.
 LAURIE, SIMON SOMERVILLE, III. 839.
 Lavengro, by Borrow, III. 430, 432, 434.
 LAW, WILLIAM, II. 247.
 Law-Breaker, by James Hinton, III. 613.
 LAWLESS, HON. EMILY, III. 850.
 LAWRENCE, DAVID HERBERT, III. 715, 720,
 721.
 LAWRENCE, GEORGE ALFRED, III. 624.
 LAWRENCE, THOMAS EDWARD, III. 716.
 Lawrie Todd, by John Galt, III. 207, 208, 725.
 LAWSON, HENRY, III. 720, 732.
 LAYAMON, I. 3, 35.
 LAYARD, SIR AUSTEN HENRY, III. 497.
 Lay of the Last Minstrel, by Scott, III. 31, 34, 35.
 Lays from Strathearn, by Lady Nairne, II.
 827.
 Lays of Ancient Rome, by Macaulay, III.
 367, 369.
 Lays of my Home, by Whittier, III. 775.
 Lays of the Scottish Cavaliers, by W. E.
 Aytoun, III. 475, 476.
 Lays of the Western Gael, by Sir S. Ferguson, III. 362.
 LAZARUS, EMMA, III. 854.
 Lazarus, York Play of, I. 110.
 LEA, HENRY CHARLES, III. 853.
 LEACOCK, STEPHEN, III. 726, 728.
 Leaders in the Northern Church, by Bishop
 Lightfoot, III. 625.
 Leaders of Public Opinion in Ireland, by Lecky, III. 682.

- Lead, kindly Light, by Newman, III. 337.
 LEAF, WALTER, III. 843.
 LEAR, EDWARD, III. 657.
 Lear, King, by Shakespeare, I. 371.
 Learning, Ancient and Modern, by Sir W. Temple, I. 754.
 LEATHES, STANLEY, III. 840.
 Leaves from Australian Forests, by H. C. Kendall, III. 731.
 Leaves of Grass, by Whitman, III. 806, 808.
 LECKY, W. E. H., III. 682.
 LEE, NATHANIEL, II. 87.
 LEE, SIR SIDNEY, III. 707.
 LEE, SOPHIA and HARRIET, II. 653.
 LEE, VERNON (Violet Paget), III. 851.
 LE FANU, JOSEPH SHERIDAN, III. 365.
 Legal and Political Sketches, by Sheil, III. 351.
 Legal Antiquities, by Cosmo Innes, III. 291.
 LE GALLIENNE, RICHARD, III. 840.
 Legal Lyrics, by Outram, III. 414.
 Legende of Good Women, by Chaucer, I. 63, 70.
 Legends and Stories of Ireland, by Samuel Lover, III. 355.
 Legends of the Saints, attributed to Barbour, I. 180; of the Saxon Saints, and of St Patrick, by A. de Vere, III. 581.
 Legislative Reviews, by J. Howe, III. 726.
 LEHMANN, ROSAMOND, III. 852.
 LEHMANN, RUDOLPH CHAMBERS, III. 844.
 LEIGHTON, ARCHBISHOP, I. 822.
 Leith Races, by Fergusson, II. 806, 808.
 LELAND, CHARLES GODFREY, III. 784.
 LELAND, JOHN, I. 139, 270.
 LEMON, MARK, III. 399.
 LENNOX, CHARLOTTE, II. 417.
 Leo X., by Roscoe, II. 639.
 Leonard Lindsay, by A. B. Reach, III. 505.
 Leonidas, by Richard Glover, II. 351, 352.
 LEPROHON, MRS R. E., III. 726.
 Lesbians, by Campion, I. 401.
 LESLIE, CHARLES, II. 209.
 LESLIE, JOHN, I. 226.
 L'ESTRANGE, SIR ROGER, I. 741.
 Letters, by Pope, II. 191-195; from Italy, by Addison, II. 212, 216; from the Mountains, by Mrs Grant, II. 596; from the Cape, and from Egypt, by Lady Duff Gordon, III. 373, 733; from the Baltic, by Lady Eastlake, III. 387.
 Letters of Horace Walpole, II. 411-414.
 Letters on Literature, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 Letters to Dead Authors, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 Leven Water, Ode to, by Smollett, II. 444.
 LEVER, CHARLES JAMES, III. 359.
 Leviathan, by Hobbes, I. 554, 555, 556, 558.
 LEVY, AMY, III. 851.
 LEWES, GEORGE HENRY, III. 495.
 Lewesdon Hill, by William Crowe, II. 616.
 LEWIS, ALFRED HENRY, III. 855.
 LEWIS, CECIL DAY, III. 724, 849.
 LEWIS, DAVID, II. 420.
 LEWIS, MATTHEW GREGORY, II. 748.
 LEWIS, SIR GEORGE CORNEWALL, III. 206.
 LEWIS, SINCLAIR, III. 836.
 LEYDEN, JOHN, II. 690.
 Liberal Education, by Huxley, III. 618.
 Liberator, edited by W. Lloyd Garrison, III. 811.
 Liberty, by J. S. Mill, III. 443.
 Liberty, Ode to, by Shelley, III. 110.
 Liberty and Necessity, by Hobbes, I. 544, 558.
 Liberty of Prophesying, by Jeremy Taylor, I. 604.
 Library, by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 Library, by George Crabbe, II. 694.
 Library of American Literature, III. 824.
 Library of English Literature, by H. Morley, III. 633.
 LIDDON, HENRY PARRY, III. 625.
 Lie, by Sir Walter Raleigh, I. 308.
 Life, by Mrs Barbauld, II. 582; in London, by Pierce Egan, III. 264; in the Sick-room, by Harriet Martineau, III. 388; in Nature, by James Hinton, III. 613; Use of, by Lord Avebury, III. 664.
 Life and Death of Mr Badman, by Bunyan, I. 720.
 Life Drama, by Alexander Smith, III. 604.
 Life of Reason, by G. Santayana, III. 835.
 Lifted Veil, by George Eliot, III. 531.
 Ligela, by Poe, III. 785, 787.
 Light of Asia, by Sir E. Arnold, III. 663; of Nature, by A. Tucker, II. 338; of other Days, by Moore, III. 348; of the Harem, by Moore, III. 349, 350; of the World, by Sir E. Arnold, III. 663.
 Light that Failed, by R. Kipling, III. 708.
 LIGHTFOOT, JOSEPH BARBER, III. 625.
 Lights and Shadows of Irish Life, by Mrs S. C. Hall, III. 280; of Scottish Life, by John Wilson, III. 246.
 Lillian of the Vale, by G. Darley, III. 235.
 Lillibulero, by Thomas Wharton, II. 98.
 LILLO, GEORGE, II. 276.
 LILLY, WILLIAM, I. 120.
 LILLY, WILLIAM SAMUEL, III. 841.
 Lilly Dawson, by Catherine Crowe, III. 280.
 Lily Neil, by David Wingate, III. 608.
 Limits of Religious Thought, by Mansel, III. 497.
 LINACRE, THOMAS, I. 120.
 LINCHE, RICHARD, I. 278.
 LINCOLN, ABRAHAM, III. 784; Emerson on, III. 762; Death of, by Whitman, III. 810.
 LINDSAY, ROBERT, I. 225.
 LINDSAY. See LINDSAY, LYNDSEY.
 LINDSAY, LADY ANNE. See BARNARD.
 LINDSAY, VACHEL, III. 856.
 Lines written among the Euganean Hills, by Shelley, III. 109.
 LINGARD, DR JOHN, II. 847.
 LINKLATER, ERIC, III. 849.
 LINTON, ELIZA LYNN, III. 536.
 LINTON, WILLIAM JAMES, III. 536.
 Linton, by Geddes, II. 799.
 Lion's Cub, by R. H. Stoddard, III. 824.
 LISTER, THOMAS HENRY, III. 158.
 Litanie to the Holy Spirit, by Herrick, I. 505.
 Literary Criticism, Early, I. 266.
 Literature, Curiosities of, by Isaac D'Israeli, II. 715.
 Literature, Studies in, by Morley, III. 686.
 Literature and Dogma, by M. Arnold, III. 595.
 Literature of Europe, by Henry Hallam, III. 193, 195.
 LITHGOW, WILLIAM, I. 517.
 LITTLE, THOMAS (Thomas Moore), III. 345.
 Little Black Rose, by A. de Vere, III. 582.
 Little Henry and his Bearer, by Mrs Sherwood, III. 324.
 Little Lord Fauntleroy, by Mrs Burnett, III. 833.
 Little Mary, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Little Masters, by W. Bell Scott, III. 490.
 Little Minister, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Little White Bird, by Barrie, III. 705.
 Little Woodman, by Mrs Sherwood, III. 324.
 Lives of the Engineers, by Samuel Smiles, III. 475.
 Lives of the Poets, by Johnson, II. 460.
 LIVINGSTONE, DAVID, III. 480.
 Livy, trans. by Philemon Holland, I. 260.
 LLOYD, ROBERT, II. 612.
 LLOYD GEORGE, DAVID, III. 845.
 LLYWARCH HEN, I. 3.
 Lochiel's Warning, by Campbell, II. 760.
 Lochleven, by Michael Bruce, II. 528.
 LOCKE (LOK), HENRY, I. 278.
 LOCKE, JOHN, II. 17.
 LOCKE, WILLIAM J., III. 846.
 LOCKER-LAMPSON, FREDERICK, III. 600.
 LOCKHART, JOHN GIBSON, III. 250; Life of, by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 Locksley Hall, by Tennyson, III. 541.
 LOCKYER, SIR NORMAN, III. 840.
 LODGE, HENRY CABOT, III. 854.
 LODGE, SIR OLIVER JOSEPH, III. 843.
 LODGE, SIR RICHARD, III. 843.
 LODGE, THOMAS, I. 316.
 Lodging for Single Gentlemen, by Colman, II. 660.
 LOFFT, CAPELL, II. 680.
 LOGAN, JOHN, II. 529.
 LOGAN, SIR WILLIAM, III. 726.
 Logan Braes, by John Mayne, II. 811.
 Logbook, by Buckland, III. 590.
 Logic, by J. S. Mill, III. 443, 444; by Alexander Bain, III. 497.
 Logie o' Buchan, by G. Halket, II. 810.
 LOK, HENRY, I. 278.
 Lombard Street, by W. Bagehot, III. 630.
 LONDON, JACK, III. 855.
 London, by Glover, II. 351; by Johnson, II. 457, 458; Survey of, by John Stowe, I. 257; in the Eighteenth Century, by Sir W. Besant, III. 651.
 London Gazetteer, II. 230.
 London Lyckpenny, by John Lydgate, I. 70.
 London Lyrics, by Locker-Lampson, III. 600.
 London Poems, by R. Buchanan, III. 655.
 London Rhymes, by Locker-Lampson, III. 600.
 London Voluntaries, by Henley, III. 78, 695.
 LONG, GEORGE, III. 839.
 Long ago, by Lord Houghton, III. 384.
 Long Ago, by Michael Field, III. 704.
 LONGFELLOW, HENRY WADSWORTH, III. 768.
 Looking Backward, by E. Bellamy, II. 831.
 Lord Gregory, by John Wolcott, II. 663, 666.
 Lord Harry has written a Novel, by T. H. Bayly, III. 241.
 Lord of the Isles, by Scott, III. 31.
 Lord Ormont and his Aminta, by Meredith, III. 658.
 Lord Ullin's Daughter, by Campbell, II. 766.
 Lord Wickenham, by J. O. Hobbes, III. 830.
 Lorenzo de' Medici, by Roscoe, II. 369.
 Lorna Doone, by R. D. Blackmore, III. 622.
 Loss and Gain, by J. H. Newman, III. 337.
 Lost and Won, by Georgina Marion Craik, III. 291.
 Lost Chord, by Miss Procter, III. 528.
 Lost Leader, by Browning, III. 562.
 Lost Leaders, by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 Lost Sir Massingberd, by J. Payn, III. 634.
 Lost Tales of Miletus, by Lytton, III. 333.
 Lot of Thousands, by Mrs Hunter, II. 599.
 Lothair, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 438.
 Lotos-eaters, by Tennyson, III. 541, 545.
 Lounger, II. 536, 539.
 LOUNSBURY, THOMAS R., III. 854.
 Lousiad, by John Wolcott, II. 662.
 Love Affairs of a Bibliomaniac, by Eugene Field, III. 831.
 Love à-la-Mode, by Macklin, II. 274.
 Love for Love, by Congreve, II. 82, 86.
 Love in a Village, by Bickerstaffe, II. 400.
 Love in the Valley, by G. Meredith, III. 658.
 Love is Enough, by William Morris, III. 665.
 Love of Fame, by E. Young, II. 260, 263.
 Love Sonnets of Proteus, by Wilfrid S. Blunt, III. 691.
 LOVEFACE, RICHARD, I. 637.
 LOVER, SAMUEL, III. 355.
 Lovers, and a Reflection, by C. S. Calverley, III. 639.
 Lover's Journey, by George Crabbe, II. 698.
 Lover's Melancholy, by John Ford, I. 481, 483; Answer to the, by Strode, I. 570.
 Lover's Tale, by Tennyson, III. 540.
 Love's Dominion, by R. Flecknoe, I. 784.
 Love's Labour's Lost, by Shakespeare, I. 357, 358.
 Love's Meinie, by John Ruskin, III. 571.
 Loves of the Angels, by Moore, III. 347; of the Plants, by Darwin, II. 572, 573, 575; of the Poets, by Anna Jameson, III. 183, 184; of the Triangles, by Canning, II. 673, 674, and by Hookham Frere, II. 676.
 LOWE, JOHN, II. 803.
 LOWELL, AMY, III. 855.
 LOWELL, JAMES RUSSELL, III. 799.
 LOWES, JOHN LIVINGSTON, III. 855.
 LOWTH, ROBERT, II. 389.
 Low Tide on Grand Pré, by W. B. Carman, III. 728.
 Loyalties, by J. Galsworthy, III. 712.
 LUBBOCK, SIR JOHN (Lord Avebury), III. 663.
 Lucan's Pharsalia, trans. by T. May, I. 582; by Rowe, II. 93, 95.
 LUCAS, EDWARD VERRALL, III. 847.
 Lucasta, by Richard Lovelace, I. 637, 638.
 Lucian's Dialogues, trans. by Mayne, I. 633.
 Lucile, by the Earl of Lytton, III. 638.
 Luck of Roaring Camp, by Bret Harte, III. 827.
 Lucrece, by Shakespeare, I. 361, 363.
 Lucubrations of Bickerstaff, by Steele, II. 230.
 Lucy's Flittin', by William Laidlaw, III. 307.
 Lusiad, trans. by Mickle, II. 522, 524; by Sir R. Burton, III. 610.
 Lusty Juventus, Moral Interlude, I. 151.
 LUTTRELL, HENRY, II. 755.
 LYALL, EDNA, III. 851.
 LYALL, SIR ALFRED COMYN, III. 681.
 Lycidas, by Milton, I. 687, 688, 698.
 LYDGATE, JOHN, I. 79.
 LYELL, SIR CHARLES, III. 317.
 Lying Valet, by David Garrick, II. 432.
 LYL, JOHN, I. 238, 240, 274, 313.
 LYNCH (LINCHE), RICHARD, I. 278.
 LYNDSEY, SIR DAVID, I. 166, 204.
 Lyra Apostolica, by J. H. Newman, III. 337.
 Lyrical Ballads, by Wordsworth and Coleridge, III. 13, 17, 19, 58.
 Lyrical Poetry, Influence of Music on, I. 273.
 Lyrical Poetry, Beginning of, I. 41.
 Lyrics of Earth, by A. Lampman, III. 728.
 LYSAGHT, EDWARD, II. 759.
 LYTE, HENRY FRANCIS, III. 271.

- LYTTLETON, GEORGE, LORD, II. 348.
 Lyttelton Fabrication, by W. Combe, II. 661.
 LYTTON, EARL OF, III. 638.
 LYTTON, LORD, III. 332.
- M
 Mabinogion, trans. by Lady Charlotte Guest, III. 387.
 MACAULAY, CATHERINE, II. 419.
 MACAULAY, ROSE, III. 852.
 MACAULAY, THOMAS BABINGTON, III. 367;
 Life and Letters of, by Sir G. O. Trevelyan, III. 687.
 Macbeth, by Shakespeare, I. 357, 370, 458, 461.
 MACCARTHY, DENIS FLORENCE, III. 583.
 M'CARTHY, JUSTIN, III. 660.
 M'CARTHY, JUSTIN HUNTLY, III. 660, 845.
 M'COSH, JAMES, III. 397.
 M'CRAE, JOHN, III. 726.
 M'CRUE, DR THOMAS, II. 763.
 MACDIARMID, HUGH (Christopher M. Grieve), III. 849.
 MACDONALD, GEORGE, III. 606.
 MACFIE, RONALD CAMPBELL, III. 847.
 MacFlecknoe, by Dryden, I. 793, 799.
 M'GEE, THOMAS D'ARCY, III. 726.
 MACKAIL, JOHN W., III. 844.
 MACKAY, CHARLES, III. 481.
 MACKAY, JESSIE, III. 729.
 MACKAYE, PERCY, III. 855.
 MACKAYE, STEELE, III. 855.
 M'KENNA, STEPHEN, III. 848.
 MACKENZIE, COMPTON, III. 848.
 MACKENZIE, HENRY, II. 536.
 MACKENZIE, SIR GEORGE, I. 826.
 Mackery End, by Lamb, III. 77.
 MACKINTOSH, ELIZABETH ('Gordon Daviot'), III. 852.
 MACKINTOSH, SIR JAMES, II. 641.
 MACKLIN, CHARLES, II. 274.
 M'LACHLAN, ALEXANDER, III. 726.
 MACLAREN, IAN (John Watson), III. 842.
 McLENNAN, JOHN FERGUSON, III. 613.
 M'LENNAN, MURDOCH, II. 810.
 MACLEOD, FIONA (Wm. Sharp), III. 705.
 MACLEOD, NORMAN, III. 396.
 Macleod of Dare, by W. Black, III. 691.
 MACNEILL, HECTOR, II. 802.
 MACPHERSON, JAMES, II. 500.
 M'Pherson's Farewell, by Burns, II. 824.
 Mad Dog, Elegy on a, by Goldsmith, II. 486.
 Madeline in her Chamber, by Keats, III. 104.
 MADISON, JAMES, III. 736.
 Madoc, by Southey, III. 48, 49.
 Madonna, Legends of the, by Anna Jameson, III. 183, 184.
 Mænad's Grave, by Gosse, III. 600.
 Mæviad, by William Gifford, II. 668.
 Magazines, beginnings of Monthly, II. 12.
 Magdalen Hepburn, by Mrs Oliphant, III. 538.
 Magic and Religion, by A. Lang, III. 602.
 MAGINN, WILLIAM, III. 260.
 Magnalia Christi, by Cotton Mather, III. 734, 736, 737, 738.
 Magnificence, by John Skelton, I. 152.
 Magnificent Ambersons, by Booth Tarkington, III. 835.
 MAHAFFY, SIR JOHN PENTLAND, III. 687.
 MAHAN, ALFRED THAYER, III. 827.
 MAHONY, FRANCIS SYLVESTER (Father Prout), III. 262.
 Maid Marian, by T. L. Peacock, III. 150, 152.
 Maid of Honour, by Massinger, I. 464, 465.
 Maid of Sker, by R. D. Blackmore, III. 622.
 Maid of the Mill, by Bickerstaffe, II. 400.
 Maid's Tragedy, by Beaumont and Fletcher, I. 470, 473.
 Main Street, by Sinclair Lewis, III. 836.
 MAINE, SIR HENRY J. S., III. 567.
 Maine Woods, by H. D. Thoreau, III. 706.
 MAITLAND, FREDERIC WILLIAM, III. 842.
 MAITLAND, SIR RICHARD, I. 231.
 Maitland of Lethington, by Sir J. Skelton, III. 635.
 MAJOR, JOHN, I. 212.
 Malay Archipelago, by A. R. Wallace, III. 614.
 MALCOLM, SIR JOHN, II. 741.
 Malcolm, by George Macdonald, III. 606.
 Maldon, Battle of, I. 23, 24.
 Male Regle, by Hecleve, I. 78.
 MALET, LUCAS (Mrs Harrison), III. 704.
 MALLESON, GEORGE BRUCE, III. 839.
 MALLETT, DAVID, II. 328.
 MALLOCK, WILLIAM HURRELL, III. 703.
 MALONE, EDMOND, II. 620.
 MALORY, SIR THOMAS, I. 92.
- MALTHUS, THOMAS ROBERT, II. 707.
 Mamillia, by Greene, I. 239, 324.
 Man, Antiquity of, by Sir Charles Lyell, III. 317.
 Man, History of, by Gilfillan, III. 480.
 Man, Observations on, by Hartley, II. 338.
 Man and his Dwelling-Place, by J. Hinton, III. 613.
 Man and Superman, by G. B. Shaw, III. 706.
 Man for Galway, by C. J. Lever, III. 360.
 Man from Glengarry, by Ralph Connor, III. 728.
 Man made of Money, by Douglas Jerrold, III. 329, 331.
 Man of Feeling, by Henry Mackenzie, II. 536, 537.
 Man of Mode, by Sir G. Etherege, II. 62.
 Man of Property, by Galsworthy, III. 712.
 Man of Taste, by J. Bramston, II. 209, 210.
 Man of the World, by Mackenzie, II. 536, 537-539; by Macklin, II. 274.
 Man of Woe, by Sir Edward Dyer, I. 275.
 Man versus the State, by Spencer, III. 588.
 Man's Destiny, by John Fiske, III. 828.
 Man's Place in Nature, by Huxley, III. 619.
 MANDEVILLE, BERNARD DE, II. 200.
 MANDEVILLE, SIR JOHN, I. 82.
 Manfred, by Lord Byron, III. 126, 132, 133.
 MANGAN, JAMES CLARENCE, III. 358.
 MANING, FREDERICK E., III. 730.
 Mankind, History of, by Tylor, III. 663.
 MANLEY, MARY DE LA RIVIERE, II. 96.
 Manners and Customs of the Ancient Egyptians, by Sir J. G. Wilkinson, III. 321.
 Manners and Customs of the Modern Egyptians, by E. W. Lane, III. 327.
 Manners and Principles of the Times, by John Brown, II. 391.
 MANNING, ROBERT, I. 34, 41, 43.
 MANSEL, HENRY LONGUEVILLE, III. 497.
 MANSFIELD, KATHERINE, III. 721, 730, 852.
 Mansfield Park, by Jane Austen, II. 774.
 Mansie Wauch, by David Macbeth Moir, III. 311.
 Manxman, by Sir Hall Caine, III. 843.
 Many Memories of Many People, III. 343.
 MAP, WALTER, I. 34, 37.
 Marble Faun, by Hawthorne, III. 781.
 Marcella, by Mrs Humphry Ward, III. 704.
 March to Kinsale, by A. de Vere, III. 581.
 MARE, W. DE LA, III. 714.
 Margaret, by Sylvester Judd, III. 773.
 Margaret, Elegy on Princess, I. 208.
 Margaret Lyndsay, by John Wilson, III. 246.
 Margaret Ogilvy, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Marian, by Mrs S. C. Hall, III. 280.
 Marino Faliero, by Swinburne, III. 674.
 Marius the Epicurean, by W. H. Pater, III. 607, 608.
 Marjorie Fleming, by Dr J. Brown, III. 451.
 Market Harborough, by Whyte-Melville, III. 585.
 MARKHAM, GERVASE, I. 308.
 Mark Rutherford, by W. H. White, III. 687.
 Marlborough (Duke of), Memoirs of, by William Coxe, II. 630; book on, by Saintsbury, III. 693; by Winston Churchill, III. 714.
 MARLOWE, CHRISTOPHER, I. 240, 241, 346.
 MARMION, SHACKERLEY, I. 633.
 Marnion, by Scott, III. 31, 34, 36, 39.
 Maroon, by T. Mayne Reid, III. 506.
 MARPRELATE, MARTIN, I. 332.
 Marriage, by S. E. Ferrier, III. 300, 301; by H. G. Wells, III. 713.
 Marriage à la Mode, by Dryden, I. 796.
 MARRIOTT, CHARLES, III. 847.
 MARRYAT, FREDERICK, III. 255.
 Marsena, by Harold Frederic, III. 832.
 MARSH, HERBERT, II. 646.
 MARSHALL, ROBERT, III. 845.
 MARSH-CALDWELL, ANNE, III. 187.
 Marshes of Glynn, by S. Lanier, III. 825.
 MARSTON, JOHN, I. 462.
 MARSTON, JOHN WESTLAND, III. 567.
 MARSTON, PHILIP BOURKE, III. 567.
 Martial Achievements of the Scots Nation, by Abercromby, II. 301.
 MARTIN, MARTIN, II. 303.
 MARTIN, SIR THEODORE, III. 478.
 MARTIN, VIOLET, III. 851.
 Martin Chuzzlewit, by Dickens, III. 465, 467, 469, 470.
 Martin Faber, by W. G. Simms, III. 742.
 Martin Rattler, by R. M. Ballantyne, III. 624.
 Martin Toutrond, by J. J. Morier, II. 784.
 MARTINEAU, HARRIET, III. 388; Autobiography of, 389.
- MARTINEAU, JAMES, III. 391.
 Martins of Cro' Martin, by Lever, III. 350.
 Martinus Scriblerus, II. 145, 195.
 Martyrdom of Madeline, by Buchanan, III. 656.
 Martyrs of Science, by Sir D. Brewster, III. 242.
 MARVEL, IK (D. G. MITCHELL), III. 821.
 MARVELL, ANDREW, I. 711.
 Mary Barton, by Mrs Gaskell, III. 527.
 Mary Hamilton, I. 540.
 Mary in Heaven, by Burns, II. 815.
 Mary Jane, by G. R. Sims, III. 695.
 Mary Madgalene (St), by Crashaw, I. 678.
 Mary Morison, by Burns, II. 826.
 Mary of Castle-Cary, by Hector Macneill, II. 802, 803.
 Mary Queen of Scots, by Agnes Strickland, III. 281; by Chalmers, II. 636; by Henry Glassford Bell, III. 415; by Tytler, II. 388; Letters said to have been written by, by Walter Goodall, II. 389.
 Mary Rose, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Mary's Dream, II. 803.
 Mary Stuart, by A. C. Swinburne, III. 671.
 MARZIALS, SIR FRANK, III. 841.
 MASEFIELD, JOHN, III. 710, 723.
 Masks and Faces, by Charles Reade, III. 463, 483.
 MASON, ALFRED EDWARD WOODLEY, III. 846.
 MASON, WILLIAM, II. 426.
 Massachusetts, by J. R. Lowell, III. 803.
 Massachusetts to Virginia, by Whittier, III. 776.
 Massarenes, by Ouida, III. 690.
 MASSEY, GERALD, III. 608.
 MASSINGER, PHILIP, I. 464.
 MASSON, DAVID, III. 633.
 Master Builder, by Gosse, III. 696.
 Masterman Ready, by Marryat, III. 255.
 Master of Ballantrae, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699.
 MASTERS, EDGAR LEE, III. 855.
 Match, A, by A. C. Swinburne, III. 671.
 Materia Hieroglyphica, by Sir J. G. Wilkinson, III. 321.
 MATHER, COTTON, III. 734, 737.
 MATHER, INCREASE, III. 734; Memoirs of, III. 738.
 MATHERS, HELEN (Mrs Reeves), III. 850.
 MATHIAS, THOMAS JAMES, II. 678.
 Matilda, by Marquis of Normanby, II. 783.
 Matins, by George Herbert, I. 496.
 Matter and Spirit, by J. Priestley, II. 540.
 MATTHEW PARIS, I. 33.
 Matthew Wald, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250.
 MATTHEWS, JAMES BRANDER, III. 854.
 MATHURIN, CHARLES ROBERT, II. 752.
 Maud, by Tennyson, III. 542.
 Maud Muller, by J. G. Whittier, III. 775.
 MAUGHAM, W. SOMERSET, III. 714, 722.
 MAURICE, FREDERICK DENISON, III. 441.
 Maurice Tierney, by C. J. Lever, III. 359.
 MAURIER, GEORGE DU, III. 840.
 MAYOR, DR O. H. ('James Bridie'), III. 848.
 MAX-MÜLLER, FRIEDRICH, III. 661.
 MAXWELL, JAMES CLERK, III. 840.
 MAXWELL, SIR HERBERT, III. 841.
 MAXWELL, WILLIAM HAMILTON, III. 267.
 MAY, SIR THOMAS ERSKINE, III. 490.
 MAY, THOMAS, I. 581.
 May, by William Barnes, III. 413.
 May, Song to, by Lord Thurlow, II. 792.
 May-day with the Muses, by Bloomfield, II. 687.
 May-eve, by John Cunningham, II. 455.
 MAYNE, JASPER, I. 633.
 MAYNE, JOHN, II. 810.
 Maynooth Grant, Speech on, by Macaulay, III. 370.
 MEADE, L. T. (Mrs Toulmin Smith), III. 850.
 Measure for Measure, by Shakespeare, I. 370.
 Mechanics, Treatise on, by W. Whewell, III. 108.
 Mechanism of the Heavens, by Mary Somerville, III. 186.
 Medal, by John Dryden, I. 793.
 Medals, Essay on, by J. Pinkerton, II. 637.
 Mediæval Church History, by Archbishop Trench, III. 393.
 Meditations, by T. Traherne, I. 776.
 Meditations among the Tombs, by Hervey, II. 338.
 MEDWALL, HENRY, I. 157.
 MEEKE, MRS MARY, III. 178.
 Meg Dods's Cookery, by Christian Isobel Johnstone, II. 772.
 Mehalah, by S. Baring-Gould, III. 664.
 Meister Karl's Sketch-Book, by C. G. Leland, III. 784.

- Melancholy, Anatomy of, by Burton, I. 435.
 Melchior, by W. Gorman Wills, III. 584.
 MELMOTH, WILLIAM, II. 391.
 Melmoth the Wanderer, by C. R. Maturin, II. 752, 753.
 MELVILLE, HERMAN, III. 821.
 MELVILLE, JAMES, I. 229.
 MELVILLE, SIR JAMES, I. 227.
 Memoirs of Eighty Years, by T. G. Hake, III. 384.
 Memorials of English Affairs, by Bulstrode Whitelocke, I. 750.
 Memorials of his Time, by Henry Cockburn, III. 313.
 Memory of the Dead, by J. K. Ingram, III. 580.
 Men and Books, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 698.
 Men and Women, by Robert Browning, III. 554, 563.
 Menaphon, by Greene, I. 324, 327.
 MENCKEN, HENRY LOUIS, III. 856.
 MENNES, SIR JOHN, I. 630.
 Mental and Moral Science, by Bain, III. 497.
 Menu, Ordinances of, trans. by Sir W. Jones, II. 616.
 Merchant of Venice, by Shakespeare, I. 360.
 Merddin, I. 3.
 MEREDITH, GEORGE, III. 658.
 MEREDITH, OWEN (Earl of Lytton), III. 638.
 MERES, FRANCIS, I. 397.
 MERIVALE, CHARLES, III. 207.
 Merle and the Nightingale, by Dunbar, I. 195.
 Merlin and Arthur, I. 51.
 Mermaid, by John Leyden, II. 692.
 Merope, by Matthew Arnold, III. 592.
 MERRICK, JAMES, II. 420.
 MERRICK, LEONARD, III. 846.
 MERRIMAN, HENRY SETON (Hugh Stowell Scott), III. 719.
 Merry Devil of Edmonton, I. 334.
 Merry Men, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699.
 Merry-Mount, by J. L. Motley, III. 814.
 Merry Wives of Windsor, by Shakespeare, I. 366.
 Messiah, by Pope, II. 180, 184.
 Messiah, Coming of the, by Edward Irving, III. 268.
 MESTON, WILLIAM, II. 316.
 Method, by Coleridge, III. 61.
 Method of the Divine Government, by M'Cosh, III. 397.
 Metra of Boethius, I. 21.
 Metrical Romances, ed. by Ritson, II. 637.
 MEW, CHARLOTTE, III. 851.
 Mexico, Conquest of, by Prescott, III. 765, 766.
 Mexico and the Mexicans, by Sir E. B. Tylor, III. 663.
 MEYNELL, ALICE, III. 704.
 MICHAEL, LIONEL, III. 729.
 Michael, by Wordsworth, III. 16.
 MICKLE, WILLIAM JULIUS, II. 522.
 Microcosmographie, by John Earle, I. 577.
 Middle English Literature, I. 31.
 Middlemarch, by George Eliot, III. 530.
 MIDDLETON, CONYERS, II. 246.
 MIDDLETON, RICHARD, III. 722.
 MIDDLETON, THOMAS, I. 458.
 Midshipman Easy, by Marryat, III. 255, 257.
 Midsummer Holiday, by Swinburne, III. 673.
 Midsummer Night's Dream, by Shakespeare, I. 365.
 Miggles, by Bret Harte, III. 827.
 Milestones, by Arnold Bennett, III. 712.
 MILL, JAMES, II. 757.
 MILL, JOHN STUART, III. 442.
 MILLAY, EDNA, III. 856.
 MILLER, HUGH, III. 284.
 MILLER, JOAQUIN, III. 828.
 MILLER, THOMAS, III. 377.
 Miller of Deanhaugh, by Ballantine, III. 377.
 Mill on the Floss, by George Eliot, III. 529, 533.
 MILMAN, HENRY HART, III. 208.
 MILNE, ALAN A., III. 848.
 MILNES, RICHARD MONCKTON (Lord Houghton), III. 382.
 MILTON, JOHN, I. 687; Life of, by D. Masson, III. 633; by J. Toland, II. 161, 162; by Mark Pattison, III. 480.
 Minchmoor, by Dr John Brown, III. 451.
 Minor Historians, II. 387.
 Minor Scottish Song-Writers, II. 810.
 MINOT, LAURENCE, I. 54.
 Minstrel, by James Beattie, II. 525, 526.
 Minstrel O'Connellan, by Wills, III. 350.
 Minstrelsy Ancient and Modern, by William Motherwell, III. 309.
 Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, by Scott, III. 7, 31, 33.
 MINTO, WILLIAM, III. 693.
 Minutes of Lives, by John Aubrey, I. 747.
 Miracle-Plays, I. 34, 45, 107, 239.
 Miracles, On, by Campbell, II. 427, 428.
 Miracles and Modern Spiritualism, by A. R. Wallace, III. 615.
 Miracles of Christ, by Woolston, II. 164.
 Mirandola, by Bryan W. Procter, III. 227.
 Mirour de l'Omme, by Gower, I. 74.
 Mirror, II. 536.
 Mirror for Magistrates, I. 237, 245.
 Mirthful Haven, by Booth Tarkington, III. 835.
 Miscellanea, by Sir W. Temple, I. 752; by Dryden, I. 794, 796, 815.
 Miser, by Henry Fielding, II. 339.
 Miseries of Human Life, by Beresford, II. 740.
 Misfortunes of Arthur, I. 333, 334.
 Misfortunes of Barney Branagan, by Carleton, III. 352.
 Misfortunes of Elphin, by Thomas Love Peacock, III. 150, 151.
 Miss in her Teens, by David Garrick, II. 432.
 Missionary of the Andes, by Bowles, II. 721, 722.
 Miss Marjoribanks, by Mrs Oliphant, III. 538.
 Mistress, by Cowley, I. 643.
 Mistress of Philarete, by Wither, I. 499.
 Mistress of the Manse, by Holland, III. 778.
 MITCHELL, JOHN, III. 582.
 MITCHELL, DONALD GRANT, III. 821.
 MITCHELL, JAMES LESLIE, III. 849.
 MITCHELL, MARGARET, III. 856.
 MITCHELL, SILAS WEIR, III. 825.
 MITCHISON, NAOMI, III. 852.
 MITFORD, MARY RUSSELL, III. 176.
 MITFORD, WILLIAM, II. 630.
 Mitherless Bairn, by W. Thom, III. 305.
 MIVART, ST GEORGE, III. 839.
 Mixed Essays, by M. Arnold, III. 595.
 Moby Dick, by Herman Melville, III. 821.
 Mock-Doctor, by Henry Fielding, II. 339.
 Modern Guides of English Thought, by R. H. Hutton, III. 632.
 Modern Love, by G. Meredith, III. 658.
 Modern Painters, by Ruskin, III. 568, 569, 570, 572.
 Modern Painting, by G. Moore, III. 707.
 Modern Utopia, by H. G. Wells, III. 712.
 Modest Proposal, by Swift, II. 125, 127.
 Modocs, My Life among the, by Joaquin Miller, III. 828.
 MOIR, DAVID MACBETH, III. 311.
 Molecular and Microscopic Science, by Mary Somerville, III. 186.
 MOLESWORTH, MRS MARY LOUISA STEWART, III. 850.
 Monarchie, by Sir David Lyndsay, I. 206.
 Monarchy, by Fulke Greville, I. 354.
 MONBODDO, LORD, II. 435.
 Money, by Lord Lytton, III. 333.
 Monk, by M. G. Lewis, II. 748, 749.
 Monk of Fife, by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 MONMOUTH, GEOFFREY OF, I. 3, 33, 35, 37.
 Monna Innominata, by C. Rossetti, III. 646, 648.
 Monody, by Lyttelton, II. 349.
 Monsieur Beaucaire, by Booth Tarkington, III. 835.
 MONTAGU, CHARLES (Earl of Halifax), II. 244.
 MONTAGU, ELIZABETH, II. 418.
 MONTAGU, LADY MARY WORTLEY, II. 254.
 MONTAGUE, CHARLES EDWARD, III. 847.
 Montaigne's Essays, trans. by Florio, I. 261.
 Montcalm and Wolfe, by F. Parkman, III. 818, 819-821.
 MONTEFIORE, CLAUDE G., III. 844.
 Montezuma's Daughter, by Sir H. Rider Haggard, III. 703.
 MONTGOMERIE, ALEXANDER, I. 233.
 MONTGOMERY, JAMES, II. 741.
 MONTGOMERY, L. M., III. 851.
 MONTGOMERY, ROBERT, III. 238.
 Monthly Review, II. 13.
 MONTROSE, MARQUIS OF (James Graham), I. 817; Memoirs of, by M. Napier, III. 291.
 Monuments of Nineveh, by Sir A. H. Layard, III. 498.
 MONYPENNY, WILLIAM F., III. 846.
 MOODIE, MRS SUSANNA, III. 725.
 MOODY, W. V., III. 833.
 Moon and Sixpence, by Somerset Maugham, III. 714.
 Moonstone, by Collins, III. 620.
 MOORE, DR JOHN, II. 618.
 MOORE, EDWARD, II. 409.
 MOORE, FRANK FRANKFORT, III. 843.
 MOORE, GEORGE, III. 707.
 MOORE, GEORGE EDWARD, III. 847.
 MOORE, THOMAS, III. 345.
 MOORE, THOMAS STURGE, III. 714.
 Mopsa the Fairy, by Jean Ingelow, III. 528.
 Moral and Metaphysical Philosophy, by F. D. Maurice, III. 441.
 Moral and Political Philosophy, by Paley, II. 643.
 Moral and Religious Aphorisms, by Benjamin Whichcote, I. 603.
 Moral Essays, by Pope, II. 183.
 Moral Feelings, by J. Abercromby, III. 242.
 Moral Ode, I. 40.
 Moral Philosophy, by Francis Hutcheson, II. 290; by Dugald Stewart, II. 535.
 Moral Sentiments, by Adam Smith, II. 448, 449.
 Moralists, by Shaftesbury, II. 167, 170-172.
 Moralities, Religious, I. 107, 239.
 Moralities, European, by Lecky, III. 684.
 Morals, Inquiry concerning, by Hume, II. 377.
 Morayshire, Floods in, by Dick Lauder, III. 305.
 MORE, DR HENRY, I. 160.
 MORE, HANNAH, II. 577.
 MORE, PAUL ELMER, III. 855.
 MORE, SIR THOMAS, I. 120, 121.
 More Worlds than One, by Brewster, III. 242.
 MORGAN, AUGUSTUS DE, III. 398.
 MORGAN, LADY, II. 780.
 MORGAN, WILLIAM DE, III. 709.
 Morgana (Palace of), by Sterling, III. 271.
 MORIER, JAMES JUSTINIAN, II. 783.
 MORISON, JAMES COTTER, III. 662.
 MORLEY, CHRISTOPHER, III. 856.
 MORLEY, HENRY, III. 632.
 MORLEY, LORD, III. 685.
 Mormons, History of the, by C. Mackay, III. 481.
 MORRIS, SIR LEWIS, III. 662.
 MORRIS, WILLIAM, III. 10, 664.
 MORRISON, ARTHUR, III. 845.
 Mortal Antipathy, by O. W. Holmes, III. 792.
 Morte d'Arthur, by Malory, J. 92-94; attributed to Huchowne, I. 57, 172; by Heber, III. 213.
 MORTON, THOMAS, II. 709.
 Morton's Hope, by Motley, III. 814, 816.
 MOSS, THOMAS, II. 617.
 Mosses from an Old Manse, by Hawthorne, III. 779.
 Mostyn Plays, I. 157.
 MOTHERWELL, WILLIAM, III. 309.
 Moths, by Ouida, III. 690.
 MOTLEY, JOHN LOTHROP, III. 814; Life of, by O. W. Holmes, III. 791.
 MOTTRAM, RALPH HALE, III. 848.
 MOULTON, LOUISE CHANDLER, III. 854.
 MOULTRIE, JOHN, III. 323.
 Mountain Bard, by James Hogg, III. 292.
 Mountain Children, by Mary Howitt, III. 283.
 Mountain Daisy, by Burns, II. 824.
 Mountain Lovers, by Fiona Macleod, III. 705.
 Mountaineering, by Tyndall, III. 548.
 Mountaineers, by Colman, II. 656, 657.
 Mourning Becomes Electra, by Eugene O'Neill, III. 836.
 Mourning Bride, by Congreve, II. 82, 83.
 Mourning Garment, by Greene, I. 324, 327.
 Mouse, To a, by Burns, II. 823.
 Mrs Dalloway, by Virginia Woolf, III. 705.
 Mrs Warren's Profession, by Shaw, III. 706.
 Much Ado about Nothing, by Shakespeare, I. 367.
 MULGRAVE, EARL OF. See SHEFFIELD (JOHN).
 MÜLLER, FRIEDRICH MAX-, III. 661.
 MULLINGER, JAMES BASS, III. 840.
 MULOCK, DINAH MARIA (Mrs Craik), III. 536.
 Mummer's Wife, by G. Moore, III. 707.
 Mummy, Address to the, by Horace Smith, III. 160, 162.
 MUNDAY, ANTHONY, I. 333.
 Mundi et Cordis Carmina, by Thomas Wade, III. 344.
 Munera Pulveris, by Ruskin, III. 571.
 MUNRO, NEIL, III. 713.
 Munster Festivals, by G. Griffin, III. 357.
 MURCHISON, SIR RODERICK I., III. 267.
 Murder in the Cathedral, by T. S. Eliot, III. 716.
 Murders in the Rue Morgue, by Poe, III. 788.

MURE, COLONEL WILLIAM, III. 219.
 MURFREE, MARY NOAILLES, III. 833.
 MURPHY, ARTHUR, II. 455.
 MURRAY, CHARLES, III. 733, 846.
 MURRAY, DAVID CHRISTIE, III. 842.
 MURRAY, GILBERT, III. 730.
 MURRAY, LINDLEY, III. 743.
 MURRAY, SIR JAMES AUGUSTUS HENRY, III. 840.
 MURRAY, SIR JOHN, III. 726.
 Musarum Deliciae, I. 630.
 Music, Influence on Lyrical Poetry, I. 273.
 Music and Manners in France and Germany, by H. F. Chorley, III. 273.
 Music and Moonlight, by A. W. E. O'Shaughnessy, III. 656.
 Musick's Duell, by Crashaw, I. 678.
 My ain Fireside, by Mrs Hamilton, II. 810.
 My Beautiful Lady, by T. Woolner, III. 607.
 My Birthday, by J. G. Whittier, III. 775, 777.
 My Brother's Grave, by J. Moultrie, III. 323.
 My Lady Nicotine, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 My Land, by T. O. Davis, III. 365.
 My Little Wife, by David Wingate, III. 609.
 My Mind to Me a Kingdom is, by Sir Edward Dyer, I. 275.
 My Mother bids me bind my Hair, by Mrs Hunter, II. 599.
 My Novel, by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 My Own Time, History of, by Bishop Burnet, II. 30, 32-36.
 My pretty Jane, by E. Fitzball, II. 783.
 My Psalm, by J. G. Whittier, III. 775, 777.
 My Relations with Carlyle, by J. A. Froude, III. 505.
 My Schools and Schoolmasters, by Hugh Miller, III. 285.
 My Sister's Sleep, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 642, 644.
 My Village, by T. C. Croker, III. 412.
 MYERS, FREDERIC WILLIAM HENRY, III. 691.
 Myrrour for Magistrates, I. 237, 245.
 Mysteries of Udolpho, by Mrs Radcliffe, II. 594, 595.
 Mysterious Mother, by Walpole, II. 411.
 Mystery of Edwin Drood, by Dickens, III. 465, 466.
 Mystery of Godliness, by H. More, I. 611.
 Mystery of Life, by Gambold, II. 421.
 Mystery of Metropolisville, by E. Eggleston, III. 824.
 Mystery of the Royal Mail, by Farjeon, III. 732.
 Mystic's Monologue, by G. Darley, III. 236.
 Myth, Ritual, and Religion, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 Myths of the Middle Ages, by S. Baring-Gould, III. 604.

NABDES, THOMAS, I. 487.
 Nabob, by Susanna Blamire, II. 801.
 Naiad, by J. H. Reynolds, III. 268.
 NAIRNE, LADY, II. 827.
 Namby Pamby, by Henry Carey, II. 330.
 Namouna the Enchantress, by Moore, III. 350.
 Nan, by John Masefield, III. 710.
 NAPIER, MARK, III. 291.
 Napier, Sir Charles, Life of, by Sir W. F. P. Napier, III. 220.
 NAPIER, SIR WILLIAM F. P., III. 219.
 Napoleon Buonaparte, Life of, by Hazlitt, III. 80; by Seeley, III. 640; Historic Doubts relative to, by Whately, III. 106.
 NASH, THOMAS, I. 328.
 Nation newspaper, III. 364, 583.
 Native Genius, by Ebenezer Elliot, III. 233.
 Natural History, by Waterton, III. 174.
 Natural History of Enthusiasm, by Isaac Taylor, III. 244; of Intellect, by R. W. Emerson, III. 700.
 Natural History of Selborne, by Gilbert White, II. 625-627.
 Natural Magic, by Sir D. Brewster, III. 242.
 Natural Religion, by David Hume, II. 377; by Seeley, III. 640.
 Natural Selection, by A. R. Wallace, III. 614.
 Natural Theology, by Paley, II. 643, 644; by Chalmers, III. 188.
 Naturalist in La Plata, by W. H. Hudson, III. 711.
 Nature, by R. W. Emerson, III. 759, 760, 761, 780; by H. D. Thoreau, III. 799.
 Nature and Art, by Mrs Inchbald, II. 584-586.

Nature-Riddles, by Cynewulf (?), I. 8, 9, 13.
 Nature's Serial Story, by E. P. Roe, III. 825.
 NAUNTON, SIR ROBERT, I. 457.
 Naval Sketch-Book, by Glascock, III. 259.
 Navigations of Hakluyt, I. 284.
 NAYLER, JAMES, I. 623.
 Nearer Home, by Phoebe Cary, III. 824.
 NEAVES, CHARLES, III. 313.
 Nebo the Nailer, by Baring-Gould, III. 664.
 NECKHAM, ALEXANDER, I. 34.
 Needy Knife Grinder, by Canning, II. 673, 674.
 Nelson, Life of, by Southey, III. 50, 53; by A. T. Mahan, III. 827.
 Nemesis of Faith, by Froude, III. 502.
 NENNIUS, I. 3.
 Nepenthe, by George Darley, III. 235, 236.
 Nero, by Robert Bridges, III. 693.
 New Arabian Nights, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 697, 698.
 New Arcadia, by Madame Duclaux, III. 704.
 New Atlantis, by Bacon, I. 385.
 New Bath Guide, by Anstey, II. 434.
 NEWBOLT, SIR HENRY JOHN, III. 845.
 NEWCASTLE, DUCHESS OF, I. 675, 732.
 Newcastle Apothecary, by Colman, II. 659.
 Newcomes, by W. M. Thackeray, III. 458, 462.
 New England Primer, III. 735.
 New England Tragedies, by Longfellow, III. 770.
 New Grub Street, by Gissing, III. 711.
 New Inn, by Ben Jonson, I. 405.
 New Machiavelli, by Wells, III. 712.
 NEWMAN, F. W., III. 342.
 NEWMAN, JOHN HENRY, III. 337.
 New Paul and Virginia, by W. H. Mallock, III. 703.
 New Road, by Neil Munro, III. 713.
 News from Nowhere, by W. Morris, III. 665.
 Newspaper, First Daily, II. 2, 12.
 New Spirit of the Age, III. 413.
 New Testament, Scots, I. 212.
 New Timon, by Lord Lytton, III. 333.
 NEWTON, JOHN, II. 613.
 NEWTON, SIR ISAAC, II. 23.
 New Way to pay Old Debts, by Massinger, I. 464, 465.
 New York, History of, by Diedrich Knickerbocker, III. 745.
 New York Tribune, III. 811.
 New Zealand, Manning's, III. 730.
 New Zealand Literature. See AUSTRALASIAN LITERATURE, III. 729.
 NICHOL, JOHN, III. 637.
 Nicholas Minturn, by J. G. Holland, III. 778.
 Nicholas Nickleby, by Dickens, III. 404, 467, 469, 470.
 NICHOLS, ROBERT, III. 849.
 NICHOLSON, WILLIAM, III. 306.
 NICOLL, ROBERT, III. 481.
 NICOLL, SIR WILLIAM ROBERTSON, III. 842.
 NICOLSON, WILLIAM, II. 166.
 Night, by Churchill, II. 495, 496.
 Night, Sonnet on, by Blanco White, II. 792.
 Night and Morning, by Lord Lytton, III. 333.
 Night-piece on Death, by Parnell, II. 249.
 Night-side of Nature, by Catherine Crowe, III. 280.
 Night Thoughts, by E. Young, 260-263.
 Nightingale, by Coleridge, III. 66.
 Nightingale, Ode to a, by Keats, III. 101, 104.
 Nightingales, by Robert Bridges, III. 693.
 Nile, Books on the, by Burton, III. 610; by Speke, III. 610; by Baker, III. 610.
 Nine Cases of Conscience, by Sanderson, I. 552.
 Nineveh, by Sir A. H. Layard, III. 498.
 NOBLE, JAMES ASHCROFT, III. 841.
 Noble Lord, Letter to a, by Burke, II. 548.
 Noble Numbers, by Robert Herrick, I. 560.
 No Cross, no Crown, by Penn, II. 51, 52.
 Noctes Ambrosianæ, by John Wilson, III. 246, 247-250.
 Nocturnal Reverie, by the Countess of Winchilsea, II. 253, 254.
 NOEL, RODEN, III. 637.
 No Name, by Wilkie Collins, III. 620.
 Nonsense Rhymes, by Lear, III. 657.
 Norman Conquest, by Freeman, III. 626.
 Norman Conquest, After the, I. 20.
 NORMANBY, THE MARQUIS OF, II. 783. See also SHEFFIELD (JOHN).
 Normandy, History of, by Palgrave, III. 265.
 Norman-French in England, I. 31.
 NORRIS, FRANK, III. 855.
 NORRIS, JOHN, II. 259.
 NORRIS, WILLIAM EDWARD, III. 842.

Norse, Tales from the, by Dasent, III. 499.
 NORTH, CHRISTOPHER (John Wilson), III. 245.
 NORTH, SIR THOMAS, I. 258.
 North America, Travels in, by Basil Hall, III. 227.
 North American Review, III. 752, 801, 802.
 North and South, by Mrs Gaskell, III. 527.
 Northanger Abbey, by Jane Austen, II. 774.
 North Briton, edited by Wilkes, II. 516.
 Northern Cobbler, by Tennyson, III. 541.
 Northern Farmer, by Tennyson, III. 541.
 Northern Studies, by Sir E. Gosse, III. 696.
 Northern Travel, by Bayard Taylor, III. 822.
 NORTON, CHARLES ELIOT, III. 825.
 NORTON, THE HON. MRS, III. 385.
 NORTON, THOMAS, I. 157, 241.
 Norway and its Glaciers, by J. D. Forbes, III. 400.
 Nosce Teipsum, by Sir John Davies, I. 394.
 Nostromo, by Conrad, III. 711.
 Notes and Queries founded, III. 331.
 Not Wisely but Too Well, by Miss Broughton, III. 690.
 Nourjahad, by Mrs Sheridan, II. 564.
 Nova Scotia, by T. C. Haliburton, III. 726.
 Nova Scotian, III. 725, 726.
 Novel, Development of the, II. 6.
 Novum Organum, by Bacon, I. 381, 387.
 Now Winter Nights Enlarge, by Campion, I. 400.
 NOYES, ALFRED, III. 848.
 Nugæ Antiquæ, by Harrington, I. 392.
 Nun, by Aphra Behn, II. 68.
 Nurse's Song, by William Blake, II. 720.
 Nymph and her Fawn, by Marvell, I. 712.
 Nymphidia, by Drayton, I. 342, 345.
 Nymph's Reply, by Sir Walter Raleigh, I. 353.

OBERON (Wieland's) trans. by Sotheby, II. 713.
 Observations on Man, by Hartley, II. 338.
 Observations on the Art of Poesie, by Campion, I. 400.
 O'CASEY, SEAN, III. 722, 848.
 Occasional Reflections, by Boyle, I. 727.
 OCCLEVE (HOCCEVE), I. 77.
 Ocean, Address to the, by B. W. Procter, III. 228.
 Ocean, Ode on, by Young, II. 265.
 Ocean Tragedy, by Clark Russell, III. 601.
 Oceana, by Harrington, I. 619; by Froude, III. 503.
 OCKLEY, SIMON, II. 211.
 O'Connor's Child, by Campbell, II. 766, 770.
 Ode to Adversity, by Gray, II. 360; to Eton College, II. 359, 360, 362; for Music, III. 363; to Evening, by Collins, II. 368, 369; to Mrs Anne Killigrew, by Dryden, I. 705, 708; to the Departing Year, by Coleridge, III. 57, 63; to the North-East Wind, by Kingsley, III. 514, 516.
 O'Donnel, by Lady Morgan, II. 781.
 O'DOWD, BERNARD P., III. 720.
 Odyssey, translations of, by Chapman, I. 377; by Hobbes, I. 555; by Ogilby, I. 824; by Pope, II. 179; by Sotheby, II. 713; by Morris, III. 665; by Lang, &c., III. 692.
 Of Bodies, by Sir Kenelm Digby, I. 580.
 O'FLAHERTY, LIAM, III. 840.
 OGILBY, JOHN, I. 823.
 OGILVY, WILLIAM H., III. 720.
 O'HARA, JOHN B., III. 720.
 O'Hara Family, by Michael and John Banim, III. 353, 354.
 O'KEEFE, JOHN, II. 656.
 Old Arm-Chair, by Eliza Cook, III. 528.
 Old Bachelor, by Congreve, II. 82, 84.
 Old Bridge at Florence, by Longfellow, III. 772.
 Old Creole Days, by G. W. Cable, III. 829.
 Old Curiosity Shop, by Dickens, III. 464, 467.
 Old English Baron, by Clara Reeve, II. 420.
 Old Familiar Faces, by Lamb, III. 73, 75.
 Old Ironsides, by O. W. Holmes, III. 790.
 Old Judge, by T. C. Haliburton, III. 726.
 Old Kensington, by Lady Ritchie, III. 689.
 Old Lang Syne, by Sir R. Ayton, I. 508.
 Old Law, by Massinger, Middleton, and Rowley, I. 478.
 Old Manor House, by Charlotte Smith, II. 593.
 Old Man's Wish, by Walter Pope, II. 68.
 Old Mortality, by Scott, III. 42.
 Old Plays, Dodsley's, II. 301.
 Old Quebec, by Sir G. Parker, III. 728.
 Old Red Sandstone, by Hugh Miller, III. 285, 286.

Old Régime in Canada, by F. Parkman, III. 818.
 Old St Paul's, by W. H. Ainsworth, III. 378.
 Old Stoic, by Emily Brontë, III. 526.
 Old Wives' Tale, by Peele, I. 321; by Arnold Bennett, III. 712.
 Old-World Idylls, by A. Dobson, III. 688.
 OLDHAM, JOHN, I. 790.
 OLDNIXON, JOHN, II. 244.
 OLDYS, WILLIAM, II. 300.
 Ole Swimm' Hole, by J. W. Riley, III. 831.
 OLIPHANT, LAURENCE, III. 635.
 OLIPHANT, MRS, III. 537.
 OLIVER, FREDERICK SCOTT, III. 846.
 Oliver Twist, by Dickens, III. 464, 467, 468.
 Olivia, by W. G. Wills, III. 584.
 Olney Hymns, II. 601, 605, 614.
 Olor Iscanus, by Vaughan, I. 682, 683.
 Olig Grange, by 'Hermann Kunst' (Walter Chalmers Smith), III. 607.
 OMAN, SIR CHARLES WILLIAM CHADWICK, III. 845.
 'Omar Khayyâm, trans. by FitzGerald, III. 424, 427.
 O may I join the Choir Invisible, by George Eliot, III. 535.
 Omoo, by Herman Melville, III. 821.
 O Nancy, wilt thou go with me? by Thomas Percy, II. 505.
 One-Hoss Shay, by O. W. Holmes, III. 792, 793.
 O'NEILL, EUGENE (GLADSTONE), III. 722, 836.
 One in Paradise, To, by E. A. Poe, III. 790.
 One of our Conquerors, by Meredith, III. 658.
 ONIONS, OLIVER, III. 847.
 O no, we never mention her, by T. H. Bayly, III. 241.
 OPIE, MRS AMELIA, II. 598.
 Optics, by Sir Isaac Newton, II. 24.
 Orara, by H. C. Kendall, III. 731.
 Orcadian Sketches, by D. Vedder, III. 305.
 Orchestra, or a Poem on Dancing, by Sir John Davies, I. 394.
 Ordeal of Richard Feverel, by G. Meredith, III. 658, 659.
 ORDERICUS VITALIS, I. 33.
 Oregon Trail, by Francis Parkman, III. 817.
 Orestes, by Lord de Tabley, III. 650.
 Oriental Eclogues, by Collins, II. 11, 368.
 Oriental Herald, III. 224.
 Oriental Poems, by Bayard Taylor, III. 822.
 Origines Sacrae, by E. Stillingfleet, II. 39.
 Origin of Evil, by John Fiske, III. 828.
 Origin of Society, by Mandeville, II. 201.
 Origin of Species, by Darwin, III. 417, 418, 419, 420.
 ORINDA (Mrs K. Phillips), I. 746.
 Orion, by R. H. Horne, III. 413; by Sir C. G. D. Roberts, III. 728.
 Orlando, by Virginia Woolf, III. 705.
 Orlando Furioso, by Greene, I. 324.
 Orlando Furioso (Ariosto's), trans. by Harrington, I. 391; by John Hoole, II. 755; by W. S. Rose, II. 760.
 ORM OF ORMIN, I. 38.
 ORME, ROBERT, II. 541.
 Ormond, by Maria Edgeworth, II. 735.
 Ormond, To the Duchess of, by Dryden, I. 801.
 Ormulum, I. 38.
 Oroonoko, by Aphra Behn, II. 68, 69; by Thomas Southerne, II. 75.
 Orosius's History, I. 20.
 Orphan, by Otway, II. 72, 74.
 Orphan Boy's Tale, by Mrs Opie, II. 598.
 Orpheus and Euridice, by King, II. 197.
 Orpheus in Thrace, by Lord de Tabley, III. 650.
 Orta, by Joanna Baillie, II. 733.
 Orygynale Cronyky, by Wytoun, I. 181.
 OSBORNE, DOROTHY, I. 751; Letters, I. 755.
 O'SHAUGHNESSY, A. W. E., III. 656.
 Ossian, II. 500-504; Wordsworth on, III. 29.
 Othello, by Shakespeare, I. 370.
 Ottoman Empire, by Rycart, I. 273.
 OTWAY, CESAR, III. 345.
 OTWAY, THOMAS, II. 71.
 OUIDA (Louise de la Ramée), III. 690.
 Our American Cousin, by Tom Taylor, III. 463.
 Our Betters, by Somerset Maugham, III. 714.
 Our Boys, by Henry James Byron, III. 637.
 Our Old Home, by Hawthorne, III. 781.
 Our Own Times, History of, by McCarthy, III. 660.
 Our Village, by M. R. Mitford, III. 176, 177.
 Out of the Hurly Burly, by C. H. Clark, III. 825.
 OUTRAM, GEORGE, III. 414.
 Outward Bound, by E. Howard, III. 259.

OVERBURY, SIR THOMAS, I. 442.
 Over-Soul, by R. W. Emerson, III. 762.
 OWEN, JOHN, I. 668.
 OWEN, SIR RICHARD, III. 318.
 OWEN, WILFRID, III. 723, 849.
 Owl and the Nightingale, I. 42.
 OXFORD, EARL OF. See DE VERE, I. 277.
 OXFORD AND ASQUITH, EARL OF, III. 843.
 Oxford, by Robert Montgomery, III. 238.
 Oxford Movement, by R. W. Church, III. 577.

Pacchiarotto, by Browning, III. 556, 566.
 Pacha of Many Tales, by Marryat, III. 255.
 Paddock and the Mous, by Henryson, I. 191.
 PAGAN, ISOBEL, II. 810.
 PAGE, GERTRUDE, III. 733.
 PAGE, THOMAS NELSON, III. 854.
 Pageant, by Christina Rossetti, III. 646.
 Pageant of Summer, by R. Jefferies, III. 640.
 PAGET, VIOLET, III. 851.
 PAIN, BARRY, III. 846.
 PAINE, THOMAS, II. 559.
 PAINTER, WILLIAM, I. 238, 262.
 Palace of Morgana, by J. Sterling, III. 271.
 Palace of Pleasure, by W. Painter, I. 238, 262; in Chaucer, I. 70; in Dryden, I. 802.
 Paladin of Philanthropy, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 Palamon and Arcite, by R. Edwards, I. 264.
 Palestine, by Bishop Heber, III. 212, 213.
 PALEY, WILLIAM, II. 643.
 PALFREY, JOHN GORHAM, III. 853.
 PALGRAVE, FRANCIS TURNER, III. 266, 609.
 PALGRAVE, SIR FRANCIS, III. 265.
 PALGRAVE, WILLIAM GIFFORD, III. 266, 609.
 Palace of Honour, by Gavin Douglas, I. 202.
 Palladis Tamia, by Francis Meres, I. 397.
 PALTOCK, ROBERT, II. 393.
 Pamela, by Richardson, II. 295, 297.
 Pandosto, by Greene, I. 324, 328.
 Panegyric on the Coronation, by Dryden, I. 705.
 Panegyric to My Lord Protector, by Waller, I. 626.
 Panorama, by J. G. Whittier, III. 775.
 Papacy in the Reformation Period, by Mandell Creighton, III. 687.
 Papp with a Hatchett, by Lyly, I. 316.
 Parables and Tales, by T. G. Hake, III. 384.
 Paracelsus, by Browning, III. 552, 559.
 Paradise Lost, I. 690, 692, 700-703.
 Paradise of Dainty Devices, by Edwards, I. 257, 264.
 Paradise Regained, I. 690, 704.
 PARDOE, JULIA, III. 384.
 Parentator, by Cotton Mather, III. 737, 738.
 Parish Register, by Crabbe, II. 694, 696.
 Parish Workhouse, by Crabbe, II. 695.
 Parisina, by Lord Byron, III. 122.
 Paris in 1815, by G. Croly, III. 171, 172.
 PARK, MUNGO, II. 651.
 PARKER, JOSEPH, III. 840.
 PARKER, SIR GILBERT, III. 726, 728.
 PARKER, THEODORE, III. 703.
 PARKMAN, FRANCIS, III. 817.
 Parlement of Foules, by Chaucer, I. 63, 66, 67.
 Parliamentary Government in England, by A. Todd, III. 726.
 PARNELL, THOMAS, II. 248.
 PARR, SAMUEL, II. 630.
 Parson's Wedding, by Killigrew, I. 634.
 Parthenia and Argalus, by Cartwright, I. 635.
 Parthenogenesis, by Sir R. Owen, III. 318.
 Parthenophil, by Barnabe Barnes, I. 278.
 Pascarel, by Ouida, III. 690.
 Pasquin, by Henry Fielding, II. 340.
 Passage to India, by Whitman, III. 807, 810.
 Passages from the Diary of a Late Physician, by Warren, III. 344.
 Passages of a Working Life by Charles Knight, III. 266.
 Passing of Arthur, by Tennyson, III. 547.
 Passionate Pilgrim, I. 257, 399.
 Passionate Shepherd to his Love, by Marlowe, I. 352.
 Passions, by Collins, II. 368, 370.
 Passoun of Christ, by W. Kennedy, I. 201.
 Past and Present, by Carlyle, III. 404.
 Pastime of Pleasure, by S. Hawes, I. 112.
 PASTON, GEORGE (E. M. Symonds), III. 851.
 Paston Letters, I. 100; ed. by J. Gairdner, III. 632.
 Pastoral Ballad, by Shenstone, II. 353, 355-357.
 Pastoral Poetry, Beginnings of, I. 118, 242.
 Pastorals, by Pope, II. 178, 180.
 Patchwork, by Basil Hall, III. 227.
 PATER, WALTER HORATIO, III. 607.

PATERSON, A. B., III. 729, 732.
 PATERSON, WILLIAM ROMAINE, III. 847.
 Patience, alliterative poem, I. 54, 174.
 Patient Grisill, I. 334.
 PATMORE, COVENTRY K. D., III. 601.
 Patriarcha, by Sir R. Filmer, I. 559.
 Patriarchal Theory, by J. F. McLennan, III. 613.
 PATRICK, SIMON, II. 43.
 Patriot, by Henry Brooke, II. 396.
 Patriotism, Spirit of, by Belingbroke, III. 202, 205.
 Patron, by George Crabbe, II. 694, 699.
 PATTISON, MARK, III. 479.
 PAUL, HERBERT WOODFIELD, III. 843.
 Paul Clifford, by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 PAULDING, JAMES KIRKE, III. 743.
 Pauper's Death-bed, by Mrs Southey, III. 55.
 PAYN, JAMES, III. 634.
 PAYNE, JOHN HOWARD, III. 853.
 Peace Ode, by R. Bridges, III. 693.
 PEACOCK, THOMAS LOVE, III. 150.
 Pearl, alliterative poem, I. 54, 173.
 PEARSON, CHARLES HENRY, III. 730.
 PEARSON, JOHN, I. 623.
 PEARSON, KARL, III. 844.
 PEARY, ROBERT E., III. 855.
 Peblis to the Play, I. 210; not by James I., I. 183.
 PECKOCK, REGINALD, I. 91.
 Peeblesshire, History of, by William Chambers, III. 315.
 Peel, Sir Robert, Life of, by Earl Stanhope, III. 374; by McCarthy, III. 660.
 PEELE, GEORGE, I. 274, 321.
 Peg Woffington, by C. Reade, III. 483.
 Pelham, by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 Pelican Island, by Montgomery, II. 742, 744.
 PEMBERTON, SIR MAX, III. 845.
 Pencillings by the Way, by N. P. Willis, III. 749.
 Pendennis, by W. M. Thackeray, III. 458.
 Peninsular War, by Sir W. F. P. Napier, III. 219-223; by T. Hamilton, III. 254.
 PENN, WILLIAM, II. 50; Life of, by W. Hepworth Dixon, III. 578.
 PENNANT, THOMAS, II. 494.
 PENNECUK, ALEXANDER, II. 309.
 PENNECUK, DR ALEXANDER, II. 309.
 Penniless Pilgrimage, by J. Taylor, I. 454.
 Penny Cyclopædia, III. 266.
 Penny Magazine, III. 266.
 PENROSE, ELIZABETH, III. 384.
 Pension Beaurepas, by H. James, III. 830.
 Pentameron, by W. S. Landor, III. 141.
 Pentateuch, work on, by Colenso, III. 452.
 PEPYS, SAMUEL, I. 733, 770.
 PERCIVAL, JAMES GATES, III. 853.
 PERCY, THOMAS, II. 504.
 PERCY, WILLIAM, I. 278.
 Percy, by Hannah More, II. 577, 579.
 Peregrine Pickle, by Smollett, II. 442, 443, 444, 446.
 Pericles, by Fletcher and Shakespeare, I. 371.
 Pericles and Aspasia, by George Croly, III. 171; by W. S. Landor, III. 141, 146.
 Perpetual Curate, by Mrs Oliphant, III. 538.
 Persia, Armenia, and Asia Minor, by J. J. Morier, II. 783.
 Persian in England, by Lyttelton, II. 349.
 Persian Monarchy, by Sir T. Herbert, I. 601.
 Persuasion, by Jane Austen, II. 774, 775.
 Peru, Conquest of, by Prescott, III. 765, 767.
 Peter Bell, by Wordsworth, III. 13.
 Peter Bell the Third, by Shelley, III. 110, 114.
 Peterborough Annals, I. 29.
 Peter Pan, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 PETER PLYMLEY (Sydney Smith), III. 156, 157.
 Peter Simple, by Frederick Marryat, III. 255, 256.
 Peter's Letters to his Kinsfolk, by Lockhart, III. 250.
 Peter Sterling, by P. L. Ford, III. 832.
 Peter the Great, On, by Aaron Hill, II. 198.
 Peter Wilkins, by R. Paltock, II. 393-396.
 Petrarch, Life of, by Campbell, II. 766.
 Phædrus, Fables of, trans. by Smart, II. 424.
 PHAER, THOMAS, I. 265.
 Phalaris, by Richard Bentley, II. 105.
 Phantasmagoria, by Mrs M. J. Fletcher, III. 520.
 Phantasms of the Living, by Myers, III. 691.
 Phantastes, by George MacDonald, III. 606.
 Phara's, by Fiona Macleod, III. 705.
 Pharonnida, by W. Chamberlayne, I. 744.
 Pharsalia, trans. by T. May, I. 582; by Nicholas Rowe, II. 93, 95.
 Phases of Faith, by F. W. Newman, III. 342.
 Phaudrig Crochoore, by J. S. Le Fanu, III. 365.

- PHILIPS, ELIZABETH STUART, III. 854.
 Philaster, by Beaumont and Fletcher, I. 469.
 Philip, II., by W. H. Prescott, III. 765, 766.
 PHILIPS, AMBROSE, II. 239.
 PHILIPS, JOHN, II. 241.
 PHILIPS, MRS KATHERINE, I. 746.
 Philip van Artevelde, by Sir Henry Taylor, III. 324-326.
 PHILLIPS, DAVID GRAHAM, III. 855.
 PHILLIPS, EDWARD, I. 589.
 PHILLIPS, SAMUEL, III. 482.
 PHILLIPS, STEPHEN, III. 722, 846.
 PHILLIPS, WENDELL, III. 811.
 Phillis, by T. Lodge, I. 316, 318.
 PHILPOTTS, EDEN, III. 845.
 Philoctetes, by Lord de Tabley, III. 650.
 Philosophy, History of, by G. H. Lewes, III. 496.
 Philosophy and Religion, by James Hinton, III. 613.
 Philosophy of Belief, by the Duke of Argyll, III. 614.
 Philosophy of Roman History, by De Quincey, III. 95.
 Philosophy of the Human Mind, by Dugald Stewart, II. 535.
 Phoebe Dawson, by G. Crabbe, II. 697.
 Phoenix Nest, I. 257.
 Phylp Sparowe, by John Skelton, I. 114, 115, 119.
 Physical Basis of Life, by T. H. Huxley, III. 618.
 Physical Geography, by Mary Somerville, III. 186.
 Physical Sciences, by Mary Somerville, III. 190.
 Physician, Diary of a late, by Warren, III. 344.
 Physics and Politics, by Walter Bagehot, III. 630.
 Physiology of Common Life, by G. H. Lewes, III. 496.
 Piccadilly, by Laurence Oliphant, III. 636.
 PICKEN, ANDREW, III. 308.
 PICKEN, EBENEZER, III. 309.
 PICKTHALL, MARJORIE, III. 726.
 Pickwick Papers, by Dickens, III. 464, 467, 468, 469.
 Pictorial Bible, by John Kitto, III. 374.
 Pictorial History of England, by G. L. Craik and another, III. 291.
 Picturesque, Essay on the, by Sir U. Price, II. 655.
 Pied Piper of Hamelin, by R. Browning, III. 553.
 Pierce Pennilesse, by T. Nash, I. 328, 329.
 PIERPONT, JOHN, III. 853.
 Pierre and his People, by Sir G. Parker, III. 728.
 Piers the Plowman, Vision of, I. 55-59.
 Pike County Ballads, by J. Hay, III. 825.
 Pilgrimage, by Sir Walter Raleigh, I. 307.
 Pilgrimage to El Medinah and Mecca, by Sir R. F. Burton, III. 609.
 Pilgrimage to Parnassus, I. 420.
 Pilgrims and the Peas, by Wolcot, II. 663.
 Pilgrims of the Night, by Faber, III. 482.
 Pilgrims of the Rhine, by Lytton, III. 332.
 Pilgrims of the Sun, by James Hogg, III. 292.
 Pilgrim's Progress, by Bunyan, I. 720, 724, 734.
 Pills to Purge Melancholy, by Tom D'Urfey, I. 782.
 Pilot, by J. Fenimore Cooper, III. 750, 751.
 PINDAR, PETER (John Wolcot), II. 662.
 Pindar, trans. by Gilbert West, II. 259; by Pye, II. 685.
 Pindaric Odes, by Gray, II. 359.
 Pindarique Odes, by Cowley, I. 643.
 PINERO, SIR ARTHUR WING, III. 695, 722.
 Pines, by Bayard Taylor, III. 822.
 PINKERTON, JOHN, II. 637.
 Pioneers of France in the New World, by Parkman, III. 818, 819.
 Pious Editor's Creed, by Lowell, III. 803.
 PIOZZI, MRS, II. 473.
 PITCAIRNE, ARCHIBALD, II. 103.
 PITSCOTTIE (R. Lindesay), I. 225.
 PITT, CHRISTOPHER, II. 259.
 PITT, WILLIAM, II. 680; Life of, by Earl Stanhope, III. 374.
 PITT, WILLIAM, EARL OF CHATHAM, II. 389.
 PITTER, RUTH, III. 852.
 Pizarro, by Sheridan, II. 564, 565, 569.
 Plague, History of the, by Defoe, II. 151, 152.
 Plain Dealer, by Wycherley, II. 65, 66-68.
 Plain Speaker, by Hazlitt, III. 80, 83.
 Plain Tales from the Hills, by Kipling, III. 708.
 Plaint of Freedom, by W. J. Linton, III. 536.
 PLANCHÉ, JAMES ROBINSON, III. 577.
 Plato, by George Grote, III. 199; trans. by Jowett, III. 494.
 Playboy of the Western World, by Synge, III. 709.
 Playground of Europe, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
 Play of Love, by John Heywood, I. 152.
 Play of the Weather, by J. Heywood, I. 153.
 Plays for Puritans, by G. B. Shaw, III. 706.
 Plays on the Passions, by Joanna Baillie, II. 729.
 Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant, by G. B. Shaw, III. 706.
 Plea for Ragged Schools, by Thomas Guthrie, III. 342.
 Pleasant Comedy of Old Fortunatus, by Dekker, I. 422, 424.
 Pleasures of Hope, by Campbell, II. 765, 767; of Imagination, by Akenside, II. 372; of Life, by Lord Avebury, III. 664; of Memory, by S. Rogers, II. 723, 724.
 Pliny's Letters, trans. by Melmoth, II. 391.
 PLUMER, WILLIAM C. F., III. 849.
 PLUMTRE, ANNE, II. 600.
 Plurality of Worlds, by Whewell, III. 198; by Baden Powell, III. 323.
 Plutarch's Lives, trans. by Langhorne, II. 521; by Sir Thomas North, I. 259.
 POE, EDGAR ALLAN, III. 785.
 Poems by Two Brothers, III. 539, 540.
 Poems of Felicity, by T. Traherne, I. 776.
 Poesie, Arte of, by Puttenham, I. 266; Defence of, by Sidney, I. 289, 291; Observations on, by Campion, I. 400.
 Poet at the Breakfast Table, by O. W. Holmes, III. 791, 792.
 Poet's Portfolio, by W. W. Story, III. 784.
 Poetical Miscellanies, I. 258.
 Poetical Rhapsody, edited by Francis Davison, I. 258.
 Poetical Sketches, by W. Blake, II. 717.
 Poetry, Apologie for, by Sidney, I. 289, 291; Beginning of Christian, I. 9; English, I. 4; from Ælfred to the Conquest, I. 22; of the 10th Century (Religious), I. 22; Lyric, I. 41; Pastoral, I. 118; Renaissance of Wonder in, III. 1-10.
 Polar Star, by Letitia E. Landon, III. 182.
 Policy and Passion, by Mrs Campbell Praed, III. 732.
 Polite Conversation, by Swift, II. 125, 127, 144.
 Political Discourses, by Hume, II. 377.
 Political Economy, books on, by Adam Smith, II. 448; by Ricardo, II. 757; by Nassau Senior, III. 343; by Harriet Martineau, III. 388; by J. S. Mill, III. 443, 445.
 Political Institutions, by Herbert Spencer, III. 588.
 Political Justice, by Godwin, II. 702, 705.
 Political Litany, by William Hone, II. 759.
 Political Register, Cobbett's, II. 681.
 Political State of Great Britain, ed. by Abel Boyer, II. 387.
 Politics, by R. W. Emerson, III. 762.
 POLLARD, ALBERT FREDERICK, III. 847.
 POLLARD, ALFRED WILLIAM, III. 844.
 POLLOCK, SIR FREDERICK, III. 841.
 POLLOCK, WALTER HERRIES, III. 842.
 POLLOK, ROBERT, II. 702.
 Polly, by Dryden, II. 174.
 Polonius, by Edward FitzGerald, III. 424.
 Polychronicon, Higden's, I. 33; trans. by John of Trevisa, I. 84.
 Polyhymnia, by George Peele, I. 323.
 Polyolbion, by Drayton, I. 341, 342.
 Pomeroy Abbey, by Mrs H. Wood, III. 520.
 POMFRET, JOHN, II. 112.
 Pontiac, by Parkman, III. 818.
 Poor Gentleman, by Colman, II. 656, 657-659.
 Poor Jack, by Dibdin, II. 708.
 Poor Maillie's Elegy, by Burns, II. 822.
 Poor Richard's Almanack, by Franklin, III. 736, 740.
 POPE, ALEXANDER, II. 4, 178; Works and Life of, by Croker, Elwin, and Courthope, III. 490.
 POPE, WALTER, II. 98.
 Popes, History of the, by A. Bower, II. 387; by Creighton, III. 687.
 Popular Delusions, by C. Mackay, III. 481.
 Popular Government, by Sir H. J. S. Maine, III. 567.
 Popular Rhymes of Scotland, by Robert Chambers, III. 316.
 Popular Tales of the West Highlands, by J. F. Campbell, III. 585.
 Population, by Malthus, II. 707.
 PORSON, RICHARD, II. 637.
 PORTER, ANNA MARIA, II. 772.
 PORTER, JANE, II. 772.
 PORTER, WM. S. ('O. Henry'), III. 833.
 PORTEUS, BEILBY, II. 646.
 Portugal, Traditions of, by Julia Pardoe, III. 384.
 Potiphar Papers, by G. W. Curtis, III. 784.
 POTTER, JOHN, II. 209.
 POUND, EZRA, III. 856.
 POWELL, BADEN, III. 323.
 POWELL, FREDERICK YORK, III. 842.
 PRAED, MRS CAMPBELL, III. 730, 732.
 PRAED, WINTHROP MACKWORTH, III. 379.
 Præterita, by Ruskin, III. 572, 576.
 Prairie, by Fenimore Cooper, III. 750.
 Praise of Aige, by Walter Kennedy, I. 201.
 Prayer of Columbus, by Whitman, III. 810.
 Preceptor, Dodsley's, II. 301.
 Prehistoric Times, by Lord Avebury, III. 664.
 Prelude, by Wordsworth, III. 11, 13, 14.
 Preludes, by Alice Meynell, III. 704.
 Pre-Raphaelites, III. 642.
 PRESCOTT, WILLIAM HICKLING, III. 764.
 Present Position of Catholics, by J. H. Newman, III. 339.
 Press, An Essay for the, by Asgill, II. 100.
 PRICE, RICHARD, II. 428.
 PRICE, SIR UVEDALE, II. 655.
 Pricke of Conscience, by Richard Rolle, I. 49.
 Pride and Prejudice, by Jane Austen, II. 774, 776-778.
 PRIDEAUX, HUMPHREY, II. 61.
 PRIESTLEY, JOHN BOYNTON, III. 720, 849.
 PRIESTLEY, JOSEPH, II. 539.
 Primitive Culture, by Sir E. B. Tylor, III. 663.
 Primitive Marriage, by J. F. McLennan, II. 613.
 Prince Arthur, by Sir R. Blackmore, II. 107.
 Prince Consort, Life of, by Sir T. Martin, III. 478.
 Prince Deukalion, by B. Taylor, III. 822.
 Prince Otto, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 698.
 Prince Rupert and the Cavaliers, Memoirs of, by Eliot Warburton, III. 274.
 Prince's Progress, by C. Rossetti, III. 646, 647.
 Princess, by Tennyson, III. 541, 545.
 Princess of Thule, by Wm. Black, III. 691.
 Principia, Newton's, II. 24.
 Principles of Biology, by Spencer, III. 587, 589; of Psychology, by Spencer, III. 586, 587, 589; of Sociology, by Spencer, III. 588.
 PRINGLE, THOMAS, II. 780; III. 733.
 PRINGLE-PATTISON, ANDREW SETH, III. 843.
 PRIOR, MATTHEW, II. 4, 5, 113.
 Prisoner of Chillon, by Byron, III. 130, 135.
 Prisoner of Zenda, by Sir Anthony Hope Hawkins, III. 708.
 Prisoners of Hope, by M. Johnston, III. 830.
 Private Papers of Henry Ryecroft, by George Gissing, III. 711.
 Probationary Odes, II. 670, 671.
 Problems of Life and Mind, by G. H. Lewes, III. 496.
 PROCTER, ADELAIDE ANN, III. 528.
 PROCTOR, BRYAN WALLER ('Barry Cornwall'), III. 227.
 PROCTOR, EDNA DEAN, III. 854.
 Professor, by Charlotte Brontë, III. 521.
 Professor at the Breakfast Table, by O. W. Holmes, III. 791, 792.
 Professor's Love Story, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Progress of Man, by Canning, II. 673, 674.
 Progress of Poesy, by Gray, II. 359, 364.
 Progress of Romance, by C. Reeve, II. 420.
 Prolegomena Logica, by H. L. Mansel, III. 497.
 Prolegomena to Ethics, by T. H. Green, III. 651.
 Prologue to the Satires, by Pope, II. 179, 183, 189.
 Prometheus, by R. Bridges, III. 693.
 Prometheus Unbound, by Shelley, III. 109, 113.
 Promos and Cassandra, by Whetstone, I. 333.
 Prophecy, by T. Chatterton, II. 513.
 Prophecy of Famine, by Churchill, II. 405, 406.
 Prose, Beginning of English, I. 19.
 Prose Edda, trans. by Dasent, III. 409.
 Prosopopoeia, by Spenser, I. 295.
 Prothalamion, by Spenser, I. 293, 296.
 PROTHERO, ROWLAND EDMUND (Lord Ernle), III. 843.
 PROTHERO, SIR GEORGE WALTER, III. 842.
 Proud Maisie, by Scott, III. 33, 39.
 PROUT, FATHER (F. S. Mahony), III. 262.
 Proverbial Philosophy, by Tupper, III. 491.

Proverbs in Porcelain, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 Provincial Tales, by N. Hawthorne, III. 779.
 Provoked Wife, by Sir J. Vanbrugh, II. 80.
 Provost, by John Galt, III. 297, 298, 299.
 Prue and I, by G. W. Curtis, III. 784.
 PRYNNE, WILLIAM, I. 584.
 Psalm of Life, by H. W. Longfellow, III. 766.
 PSALMANAZAR, GEORGE, II. 387.
 Psalms, Translation of the, Rous's version, I. 503, 515; Zachary Boyd's version, I. 514; by Dr Arthur Johnston, I. 519; Denham, I. 641; Tate and Brady's version, II. 60.
 Pseudoxia Epidemica, by Sir T. Browne, I. 590.
 Psyche, by Mrs Tighe, II. 599.
 Psychology, Principles of, by Wm. James, III. 831.
 Public Advertiser, II. 517.
 Puck, by Ouida, III. 690.
 Pudd'nhead Wilson, by Mark Twain, III. 826.
 Pulley, by George Herbert, I. 496.
 Pulvis et Umbra, by Stevenson, III. 702.
 Punch, III. 138, 328, 329, 400, 463, 492, 696.
 PURCHAS, SAMUEL, I. 449.
 Purgatory of Sinners, by Thomas Cooper, III. 376, 377.
 Puritan and Anglican, by Dowden, III. 687.
 Puritan Movement, I. 542.
 Purple East, by Sir Wm. Watson, III. 706.
 Purple Island, by P. Fletcher, I. 445, 446.
 Pursuits of Literature, by Mathias, II. 678.
 PURVEY, JOHN, I. 87.
 PUSEY, EDWARD BOUVERIE, III. 336.
 Put Yourself in his Place, by Charles Reade, III. 483.
 PUTTENHAM, GEORGE, I. 266.
 PYE, HENRY JAMES, II. 685.

Q (Sir A. T. Quiller-Couch), III. 846.
 Quakers, Sect founded, I. 716.
 QUARLES, FRANCIS, I. 566.
 Quarterly Magazine, Knight's, III. 266.
 Quarterly Review, II. 669.
 Queechy, by Susan Warner, III. 795.
 Queen Anne, Age of, II. 119.
 Queen Anne, Reign of, by Earl Stanhope, III. 374; by Burton, III. 308; by McCarthy, III. 660.
 Queen Esther, by Quarles, I. 566.
 Queen Elizabeth, by Creighton, III. 687; Court of, by Lucy Aikin, III. 178.
 Queen Mab, by Shelley, III. 107.
 Queen Mary, by Tennyson, III. 542.
 Queen Victoria, by Lytton Strachey, III. 715.
 Queens of England, by Miss Strickland, III. 281.
 Queens of Scotland, by Miss Strickland, III. 281.
 Queen's Wake, by James Hogg, III. 292, 294.
 Quentin Durward, by Scott, III. 37.
 Questions at Issue, by Sir E. Gosse, III. 696.
 Quest of the Sangraal, by R. S. Hawker, III. 381.
 QUILLER-COUCH, SIR ARTHUR THOMAS, III. 846.
 QUIN, DAN (A. H. Lewis), III. 855.
 Quince, by Praed, III. 380.
 Quip, by George Herbert, I. 497.
 Quisante, by Sir Anthony Hope Hawkins, III. 708.
 Quizziology of the British Drama, by A. Beckett, III. 400.

Rab and his Friends, by Dr J. Brown, III. 449.
 Rabelais, trans. by Sir Thomas Urquhart, I. 824.
 RADCLIFFE, MRS, II. 594.
 RAIMOND, C. E. (Elizabeth Robins), III. 851.
 Rainbow, by Praed, III. 381.
 RALEIGH, SIR WALTER, I. 304.
 RALEIGH, SIR WALTER, III. 845.
 Ralph Roister Doister, by Udall, I. 155, 239.
 Rambler, II. 459, 461.
 RAMÉE, LOUISE DE LA (Ouida), III. 690.
 RAMSAY, ALLAN, II. 312.
 RAMSAY, DEAN, III. 314.
 RANDALL, JAMES RYDER, III. 854.
 RANDOLPH, THOMAS, I. 572.
 Ranolf and Amohia, by A. Domett, III. 732.
 Rape of Lucrece, by T. Heywood, I. 431, 433; by Shakespeare, I. 361, 362, 363.
 Rape of the Lock, by Pope, II. 178, 180, 181, 182, 185.
 Rapture, by T. Traherne, I. 776.
 Rare Adventures, by W. Lithgow, I. 517.
 RASHDALL, HASTINGS, III. 844.

RASSE, RUDOLF ERICH, II. 714.
 Rasselas, by Samuel Johnson, II. 450, 462.
 RASTELL, JOHN, I. 152, 157.
 Rationalism, History of, by W. E. H. Lecky, III. 682.
 Rational Religion, by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
 Rational Theology, by J. Tulloch, III. 500.
 Rattlin the Reefer, by E. Howard, III. 259.
 Raven, by E. A. Poe, III. 786, 787, 788.
 Ravenscroft Hall, by J. F. Waller, III. 364.
 Ravenshoe, by H. Kingsley, III. 517, 518.
 RAY, JOHN, II. 26.
 REACH, ANGUS BETHUNE, III. 505.
 READ, THOMAS BUCHANAN, III. 853.
 READE, CHARLES, III. 482, 729.
 READE, JOHN EDMUND, III. 267.
 Ready-Money Mortiboy, by Besant and Rice, II. 650, 651.
 Realmah, by Sir A. Helps, III. 478.
 Real Presence, Doctrine of the, by Edward Bouverie Pusey, III. 337.
 Rebellion, History of the, by Lord Clarendon, I. 652.
 Rebellion, History of the Irish, by W. H. Maxwell, III. 268.
 Rebellions in Scotland, History of the, by Robert Chambers, III. 316.
 Recess, by Sophia Lee, II. 653.
 Recessional, by Rudyard Kipling, III. 708.
 Recollections of a Chaperon, II. 772.
 Records of the Western Shore, by R. S. Hawker, III. 381.
 Recreations of a Country Parson, by A. K. H. Boyd, III. 624.
 Recruiting Officer, by Farquhar, II. 90, 91.
 Red as a Rose is She, by Miss Broughton, III. 690.
 Red Badge of Courage, by Stephen Crane, III. 832.
 Redgauntlet, by Scott, III. 34.
 Red Rover, by Fenimore Cooper, III. 750.
 REEVE, CLARA, II. 420.
 REEVES, MRS HENRY, III. 850.
 REEVES, W. P., III. 729, 730.
 Reflections on the Dead-Alive, by John Banim, III. 353.
 Reflections upon Exile, by Lord Bolingbroke, II. 202, 203.
 Reformation, History of, by John Knox, I. 220; by Peter Heylyn, I. 582; by Gilbert Stuart, II. 388; by William Cobbett, II. 682.
 Reformation of the Church of England, by Bishop Burnet, II. 30.
 Reginald Dalton, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250.
 Reginald Hastings, by Elliot Warburton, III. 274.
 Rehearsal, by the Duke of Buckingham, I. 788.
 REID, CAPTAIN MAYNE, III. 505.
 REID, SIR THOMAS WEMYSS, III. 841.
 REID, THOMAS, II. 388.
 Reign of Law, by J. L. Allen, III. 831.
 Rejected Addresses, by James and Horace Smith, III. 159.
 Relapse, by Sir J. Vanbrugh, II. 80.
 Religio Laici, by Dryden, I. 793, 796, 800.
 Religio Medici, by Sir T. Browne, I. 590, 595.
 Religion, A Study of, by Martineau, III. 392.
 Religion and Science, by J. W. Draper, III. 825.
 Religion of the Future, by J. B. Crozier, III. 727.
 Religion of the Protestants, by Chillingworth, I. 586.
 Religions of the World, by F. D. Maurice, III. 441.
 Religious Literature of the Middle English Period, I. 38, 49.
 Religious Moralities, I. 107.
 Religious Poetry of the 10th Century, I. 22.
 Reliques, Percy's, II. 504.
 Reliques of Irish Poetry, by Charlotte Brooke, II. 306.
 Reliquæ Baxterianæ, I. 605.
 Reliquæ Wottonianæ, I. 303.
 Reminiscences, by Carlyle, III. 404, 405, 407, 502.
 Reminiscences of a Highland Parish, by Norman Macleod, III. 397.
 Reminiscences of Scottish Life and Character, by Dean Ramsay, III. 314.
 Remorse, by Coleridge, III. 60, 63.
 Renaissance, by W. H. Pater, III. 607; by J. A. Symonds, III. 640.
 Renaissance and Reformation Period, I. 120.
 Renaissance of Wonder in Poetry, III. 1-10.
 RENNELL OF RODD, BARON, III. 844.
 Representative, newspaper, begun, III. 260.
 Representative Government, by J. S. Mill, III. 443, 444.

Representative Men, by R. W. Emerson, III. 760, 762.
 Repressor, by Bishop Peacock, I. 91.
 Resignation, by H. W. Longfellow, III. 769, 771.
 Resolution and Independence, by Wordsworth, III. 16, 20.
 Resolves, by Owen Felltham, I. 578.
 Restoration Period, I. 729.
 Resurrection, by Cowley, I. 645.
 Retaliation, by Goldsmith, II. 480, 487.
 Retired from Business, by Douglas Jerrold, III. 328, 330.
 Retreat, by H. Vaughan, I. 682, 683.
 Return from Parnassus, I. 420.
 Return of the Native, by T. Hardy, III. 679.
 Revenge, by Edward Young, II. 260.
 Revenge, Ballad of the, by Tennyson, III. 542.
 Revenger's Tragedy, by Tourneur, I. 430.
 Reveries of a Bachelor, by D. G. Mitchell, III. 821.
 Reversionary Payments, by Price, II. 428.
 Review, edited by Defoe, II. 150.
 Revolt in the Desert, by T. E. Lawrence, III. 716.
 Revolt of Islam, by Shelley, III. 108, 113.
 Revolution, History of the, by Mackintosh, II. 642.
 Revolution in Tanner's Lane, by W. Hale White, III. 687.
 Revolution Period and After, II. 13.
 Reynard the Fox, by J. Masfield, III. 710.
 REYNOLDS, FREDERIC, II. 710.
 REYNOLDS, GEORGE NUGENT, II. 759.
 REYNOLDS, JOHN HAMILTON, III. 268.
 REYNOLDS, SIR JOSHUA, II. 542.
 Rhetoric, by Campbell, II. 427.
 Rhoda Fleming, by G. Meredith, III. 658.
 RHODES, JAMES FORD, III. 854.
 RHODES, WILLIAM BARNES, II. 710.
 Rhodora, by R. W. Emerson, III. 763.
 Rhymed Tragedy, introduced, I. 787.
 RHYMER, THOMAS THE, I. 43, 106.
 Rhymes à la Mode, by A. Lang, III. 692.
 Rhymes of Childhood, by J. W. Riley, III. 831.
 Rhythm of Life, by Alice Meynell, III. 704.
 RICARDO, DAVID, II. 757.
 RICE, JAMES, III. 650.
 Riceyman Steps, by Arnold Bennett, III. 712.
 RICH, BARNABE, I. 238, 333.
 Richard Cable, by Baring-Gould, III. 664.
 Richard Carvel, by W. Churchill, III. 832.
 Richard Cœur de Lion, I. 50.
 Richard Edney, by Sylvester Judd, III. 773.
 Richard II., by Shakespeare, I. 360; Richard III., I. 360.
 Richard III., History of, by Sir Thomas More, I. 121, 123.
 RICHARDS, IVOR ARMSTRONG, III. 724, 849.
 RICHARDSON, DOROTHY M., III. 720, 851.
 RICHARDSON, JOHN, III. 720, 839.
 RICHARDSON, JOSEPH, II. 670.
 RICHARDSON, SAMUEL, II. 6, 294; book on, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 Richelieu, by G. P. R. James, III. 327; by Lord Lytton, III. 333.
 RIDDELL, HENRY SCOTT, III. 311.
 Riddle of Existence, by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
 Riddle on the Letter H, by Catherine Maria Fanshawe, II. 739.
 Riddles, by Cynewulf, I. 13.
 Riders to the Sea, by Synge, III. 709.
 RIDGE, WILLIAM PETT, III. 846.
 Rienzi, by Lord Lytton, III. 332; by Mary Russell Mitford, III. 176.
 Rifle Brigade, by Sir J. Kincaid, III. 223.
 Rights of Man, by Paine, II. 559, 560.
 Rights of Woman, by Mary W. Godwin, II. 706.
 RILEY, JAMES WHITCOMB, III. 831.
 Rimini, by Leigh Hunt, III. 148.
 Ring and the Book, by R. Browning, III. 555, 556, 559, 565.
 Ringan Gilhaize, by John Galt, III. 207.
 RIPLEY, GEORGE, III. 763.
 Rise and Progress of Religion, by Doddridge, II. 332.
 RITA (Mrs Desmond Humphreys), III. 850.
 RITCHIE, LADY, III. 689.
 RITCHIE, LEITCH, III. 327.
 RITSON, JOSEPH, II. 637.
 Ritter Bann, by Campbell, II. 766.
 Rival Queens, or Alexander the Great, by N. Lee, II. 88.
 Rivals, by Sheridan, II. 564, 565.
 Road to Ruin, by T. Holcroft, II. 570.
 Roaring Girl, by Dekker and Middleton, I. 423, 458.

- Rob Roy, by Scott, III. 34, 43.
 Robene and Makyne, by Henryson, I. 189.
 Robert Elsmere, by Mrs Humphry Ward, III. 704.
 Robert Falconer, by George Macdonald, III. 606.
 Robert Macaire, by Henley and Henderson, III. 695, 699.
 ROBERTS, SIR CHARLES GEORGE DOUGLAS, III. 726, 728.
 ROBERTS, LORD, III. 840.
 ROBERTS, MORLEY, III. 844.
 ROBERTSON, ALEXANDER, II. 309.
 ROBERTSON, FREDERICK WILLIAM, III. 403; Life of, by Stopford A. Brooke, III. 662.
 ROBERTSON, JOHN MACKINNON, III. 843.
 ROBERTSON, THOMAS WILLIAM, III. 637.
 ROBERTSON, WILLIAM, II. 382.
 Robin Hood and the Curtal Friar, I. 531.
 ROBINS, ELIZABETH, III. 851.
 ROBINSON, EDWIN A., III. 835.
 ROBINSON, HENRY CRABB, III. 168.
 ROBINSON, MARY (Mine. Duclaux), III. 704.
 ROBINSON, PHILIP STEWART, III. 842.
 Robinson Crusoe, by Defoe, II. 6, 150, 156-158.
 ROCHE, MAZO DE LA, III. 852.
 ROCHESTER, THE EARL OF (John Wilmot), I. 779.
 Rock of Ages, by A. M. Toplady, II. 456.
 Rocks Ahead, by W. R. Greg, III. 400.
 RODD, BARON RENNELL OF, III. 844.
 Roderick, by Southey, III. 48, 49, 51.
 Roderick Random, by Smollett, II. 442, 443, 445.
 Rodney Stone, by Sir A. C. Doyle, III. 707.
 ROE, EDWARD PAYSON, III. 825.
 ROGER DE HOVEDEN, I. 33.
 ROGER OF WENDOVER, I. 33.
 ROGERS, HENRY, III. 374.
 ROGERS, SAMUEL, II. 723; Recollections of, by Alexander Dyce, III. 324.
 Rokeby, by Scott, III. 38.
 ROLLE, RICHARD, OF HAMPOLE, I. 49.
 Rolliad, II. 669-672.
 ROLLOCK, ROBERT, I. 230.
 Roman, by S. T. Dobell, III. 603.
 Romance of the Forest, by Mrs Radcliffe, II. 594.
 Romance of the Nineteenth Century, by Mallock, III. 703.
 Romance of War, by James Grant, III. 578.
 Romances, Later, I. 50; Alliterative, I. 51; Metrical, I. 51.
 Roman de Rou, by Wace, I. 34.
 ROMANES, GEORGE JOHN, III. 842.
 Roman History, by Sir G. C. Lewis, III. 200; by Charles Merivale, III. 207.
 Roman Literature, History of, by J. C. Dunlop, III. 219.
 Roman Poets of the Republic, by W. Y. Sellar, III. 634.
 Roman Republic, by Ferguson, II. 430.
 Roman Republic, Fall of the, by C. Merivale, III. 207.
 Romantic, On the Epithet, by J. Foster, II. 738.
 Romantic Revival, III. 1.
 Romany Rye, by G. H. Borrow, III. 432, 434.
 Romaunt of the Rose, I. 61.
 Rome, History of, by Dr T. Arnold, III. 202.
 Romeo and Juliet, by Shakespeare, I. 358.
 Romeus and Juliet, by A. Broke, I. 263.
 Romola, by George Eliot, III. 530, 531.
 Ronald and Dorna, by Aaron Hill, II. 198.
 Rondel of Lufe, by Alexander Scott, I. 232.
 Rookwood, by W. H. Ainsworth, III. 377.
 Room of One's Own, by Virginia Woolf, III. 705.
 ROOSEVELT, THEODORE, III. 855.
 Roots of the Mountains, by William Morris, III. 666, 667.
 ROPER, WILLIAM, I. 125.
 Rory O'More, by Samuel Lover, III. 355.
 ROS, SIR RICHARD, I. 81.
 Rosalind and Helen, by Shelley, III. 108.
 Rosalynde, by T. Lodge, I. 316, 317.
 Rosamund, by Swinburne, III. 674.
 Rosciad, by Churchill, II. 405.
 ROSCOE, WILLIAM, II. 630.
 ROSCOE, WILLIAM CALDWELL, III. 625.
 ROSCOMMON, EARL OF, I. 777.
 ROSE, JOHN HOLLAND, III. 843.
 ROSE, WILLIAM STEWART, II. 760.
 Rose Aylmer, by W. S. Lander, III. 142.
 ROSEBURY, EARL OF, III. 842.
 ROSS, ALEXANDER, II. 317.
 ROSS, MARTIN (Violet Martin), III. 851.
 ROSSETTI, CHRISTINA, III. 646.
 ROSSETTI, DANTE GABRIEL, III. 10, 641.
 ROSSETTI, WILLIAM MICHAEL, III. 830.
 ROSTOVITZ, MICHAEL I., III. 855.
 ROUS, FRANCIS, I. 503.
 Rousseau, by Lord Morley, III. 686.
 Rovers, by Canning, II. 673, 675, 676.
 Rover's Song, by Eliza Cook, III. 528.
 ROW, JOHN, I. 514.
 ROWE, NICHOLAS, II. 93.
 Rowfant Rhymes, by F. Locker-Lampson, III. 600.
 ROWLEY, THOMAS (Chatterton), II. 512.
 ROWLEY, WILLIAM, I. 478.
 Royal Society, I. 685, 726, 733.
 Royston Gower, by Thomas Miller, III. 377.
 Roy's Wife, by Mrs Grant, II. 596.
 Rudder Grange, by F. R. Stockton, III. 824.
 RUDDIMAN, THOMAS, II. 305.
 Ruined Burg, in Exeter Book, I. 8.
 Ruins of Nineveh, by Sir A. H. Layard, III. 498.
 Rule Britannia, by J. Thomson (?), II. 321, 329.
 Rumours from an Aeolian Harp, by H. D. Thoreau, III. 708.
 Rump, by J. Tatham, I. 787.
 Runnede, by John Logan, II. 529, 532.
 Rupert of Hentzau, by Sir Anthony Hope Hawkins, III. 708.
 Rural England, by Sir R. Haggard, III. 703.
 Rural Life in England, by Howitt, III. 283.
 Rural Rides, by Cobbett, II. 682-685.
 Rural Sketches, by Thomas Miller, III. 377.
 RUSDEN, G. W., III. 730.
 RUSKIN, JOHN, III. 568.
 RUSSELL, EARL, III. 318.
 RUSSELL, BERTRAND, 3RD EARL, III. 847.
 RUSSELL, ELIZABETH MARY, COUNTESS, III. 852.
 RUSSELL, GEORGE W., III. 710.
 RUSSELL, IRWIN, III. 854.
 RUSSELL, LADY RACHEL, II. 58.
 RUSSELL, SIR WILLIAM HOWARD, III. 578.
 RUSSELL, WILLIAM, II. 388.
 RUSSELL, WILLIAM CLARK, III. 691.
 Ruth, by Mrs Gaskell, III. 527; by Thomas Hood, III. 140.
 RUTHERFORD, MARK (W. H. White), III. 687.
 RUTHERFORD, SAMUEL, I. 820.
 Ruthwell Cross, I. 10, 163, 169.
 RYCAUT, SIR PAUL, I. 273.
 RYMER, THOMAS, I. 751.
 Sabbath, by J. Grahame, II. 689, 690.
 Sack of Baltimore, by T. O. Davis, III. 365.
 SACKVILLE, CHARLES (Earl of Dorset), I. 781.
 SACKVILLE, THOMAS (Earl of Dorset), I. 237, 245.
 SACKVILLE-WEST, HON. VICTORIA MARY, III. 852.
 Sacred and Legendary Art, by Anna Jameson, III. 183.
 Sacred Latin Poetry, by Trench, III. 303.
 Sacred Theory of the Earth, by Thomas Burnet, II. 28.
 Sad Fortunes of Amos Barton, by George Eliot, III. 529, 532.
 Saga of Burnt Njal, tr. by Dasent, III. 499.
 Sailors and Saints, by Glascock, III. 259.
 St Albans, Book of, by Dame Juliana Berners, I. 99.
 St Augustine's Holiday, by W. Alexander, III. 584.
 St Giles and St James, by Douglas Jerrold, III. 329, 330.
 St Ives, by Stevenson, III. 699.
 Saint Joan, by G. B. Shaw, III. 706.
 St JOHN, C. G. W., III. 839.
 St JOHN, HENRY. See BOLINGBROKE.
 St Kilda, Voyage to, by M. Martin, II. 303.
 St Leon, by William Godwin, II. 702, 704.
 Saint Mary Magdalene, by Crashaw, I. 678.
 St Patrick, Legends of, by Aubrey de Vere, III. 581.
 St Paul and Protestantism, by M. Arnold, III. 594.
 St Paul's Cathedral, by Milman, III. 209.
 St Peter's Complaint, by Southwell, I. 337.
 St Ronan's Well, by Scott, III. 46.
 SAINTSBURY, GEORGE E. B., III. 693.
 Saints' Everlasting Rest, by Baxter, I. 664.
 St Stephen's, by Lord Lytton, III. 333, 336.
 SALA, GEORGE AUGUSTUS HENRY, III. 624.
 Salathiel, by George Croly, III. 171.
 SALE, GEORGE, II. 388.
 Salem Chapel, by Mrs Oliphant, III. 537, 538.
 SALISBURY, JOHN OF, I. 34.
 Sally in our Alley, by Henry Carey, II. 331.
 Salmagundi, III. 743, 745.
 Salmonia, by Sir H. Davy, II. 701, 702.
 Salutation, by T. Traherne, I. 776.
 Samor, by Milman, III. 208, 212.
 Sam Slick, by T. C. Haliburton, III. 726.
 Samson Agonistes, by Milton, I. 690.
 SANDBURG, CARL, III. 856.
 SANDERSON, ROBERT, I. 552.
 Sandford and Merton, by T. Day, II. 738; Modern, by Burnand, III. 694.
 Sandra Belloni, by G. Meredith, III. 658.
 Sandy Foundation Shaken, by Penn, II. 51.
 SANDYS, GEORGE, I. 450.
 SANGSTER, CHARLES, III. 726.
 SANTAYANA, GEORGE, III. 835.
 Sapho and Phao, by Lyly, I. 274, 315.
 Sappho's Song, by L. E. Landon, III. 181.
 Saracen, Land of the, by Bayard Taylor, III. 821.
 Saracens, by S. Ockley, II. 211.
 Saracinesca, by F. M. Crawford, III. 832.
 Sard Harker, by Masefield, III. 710.
 Sartor Resartus, by Carlyle, III. 403, 405, 406, 408.
 SASSOON, SIEGFRIED L., III. 848.
 Satan, by George Croly, III. 172; by Robert Montgomery, III. 238.
 Satan Absolved, by W. S. Blunt, III. 691.
 Satire and Satirists, by J. Hannay, III. 632.
 Satires of Pope, III. 183; of Dryden, I. 793, 797-799.
 Satirist, Hall claims to be the First, I. 417.
 Satiromastix, by Dekker, I. 423.
 Saturn and Thea, by Keats, III. 103.
 Satyr against Mankind, by the Earl of Rochester, I. 780.
 Satyre of the Thrie Estaitis, by Lyndsay, I. 204, 207.
 Saul, by Byron, III. 135.
 SAUNDERS, MISS M. M., III. 726.
 SAVAGE, RICHARD, II. 282; Life of, by Johnson, II. 457.
 SAVILE, GEORGE. See HALIFAX, MARQUIS OF, I. 755.
 Savonarola, by Alfred Austin, III. 681.
 SAXBY, COLONEL EDWARD, I. 622.
 SAXE, JOHN GODFREY, III. 853.
 Saxon Saints, Legends of the, by A. de Vere, III. 581.
 SAYCE, ARCHIBALD HENRY, III. 842.
 SAYERS, DOROTHY, III. 721, 852.
 Sayings and Doings, by Theodore E. Hook, III. 164.
 Say not the struggle, by Clough, III. 513.
 Scaliger, by Mark Pattison, III. 480.
 Scalp Hunters, by T. Mayne Reid, III. 506.
 Scaramouch in Naxos, by J. Davidson, III. 706.
 Scarlet Letter, by Hawthorne, III. 779, 780, 781, 783.
 Scenes and Legends in the North of Scotland, by Hugh Miller, III. 285.
 Scenes of Infancy, by John Leyden, II. 691.
 Scenes from Clerical Life, by George Eliot, III. 529.
 Schiller, by Carlyle, III. 402.
 Schloss Hainfeld, by Basil Hall, III. 227.
 Scholemaster, by Roger Ascham, I. 144, 146.
 School, by T. W. Robertson, III. 637.
 School-Days, In, by Whittier, III. 777.
 School for Scandal, by Sheridan, II. 564, 565, 567.
 Schoolmistress, by Shenstone, II. 353, 354.
 School of Abuse, by Stephen Gosson, I. 266.
 School of Compliment, by Shirley, I. 484.
 Schort Poeme of Tyme, by James I., I. 505.
 SCHREINER, MRS CRONWRIGHT, III. 733.
 SCHURMAN, JACOB GOULD, III. 854.
 Scientific Memoirs, by T. H. Huxley, III. 619, 620.
 Scientific Spirit of the Age, by F. P. Cobbe, III. 537.
 Scinde, Conquest of, by Napier, III. 220.
 SCORESBY, WILLIAM, III. 266.
 SCOT, REGINALD, I. 333.
 Scot Abroad, by J. H. Burton, III. 398.
 Scotichronicon, by John Fordun, I. 182.
 Scotland, Church of, by Spottiswoode, I. 512; by Calderwood, I. 514; by Row, I. 514.
 Scotland, History of, by Boece, I. 212; by Leslie, I. 227; by Keith, II. 305; by Robertson, II. 382; by W. Tytler, II. 388; by Lord Hailes, II. 450; by Laing, II. 637; by Pinkerton, II. 637; by Fraser Tytler, III. 200; by Cosmo Innes, III. 291; by Burton, III. 398; by Lang, III. 692.
 Scotland's Skaith, by H. Macneill, II. 802.
 Scotland Yet, by H. S. Riddell, III. 311.
 Scots, Cleveland's Satire on the, I. 630.
 Scots Figgaries, by J. Tatham, I. 787.
 Scots New Testament, I. 212.
 Scots Worthies, by John Howie, II. 640.
 SCOTT, ALEXANDER, I. 231.

- SCOTT, DUNCAN C., III. 729.
 SCOTT, HUGH STOWELL, III. 845.
 SCOTT, JOHN, II. 456.
 SCOTT, LADY JOHN, III. 850.
 SCOTT, MICHAEL, III. 254.
 SCOTT, SIR WALTER, III. 7, 8, 30; Life of, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250, 251-253; book on, by Saintsbury, III. 693.
 SCOTT, WILLIAM BELL, III. 490.
 Scottish Ballads, John Pinkerton's, II. 637.
 Scottish Chiefs, by Jane Porter, II. 773.
 Scottish Fifteenth-Century Prose, I. 188.
 Scottish Life and Character, by Dean Ramsay, III. 314.
 Scottish Literature, I. 163, 817; from James VI. to the Civil War, I. 504; Scottish Vernacular Revival, II. 307; Scottish Vernacular Writers under George III., II. 795.
 Scottish Philosophy, by M'Cosh, III. 397.
 Scottish Poems, coll. by Pinkerton, II. 637.
 Scottish Poets, Early Minor, I. 208.
 Scottish Prose Writers, Lesser Sixteenth-Century, I. 230.
 Scottish Rivers, by Dick Lauder, III. 305.
 Scottish Songs, Herd's Collection of, II. 797.
 Scottyshe Kynge, by Skelton, I. 115.
 Scriblerus Club, II. 183.
 Scribner's Monthly, III. 778.
 SCULLY, W. C., III. 733.
 Sea-divided Gael, by T. D. McGee, III. 580.
 Seafarer, in Exeter Book, I. 8.
 Sea-Limits, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 645.
 SEAMAN, SIR OWEN, III. 845.
 Seaman's Secrets, by John Davis, I. 390.
 Sea Nymphs, by Thomas Miller, III. 377.
 Sea Power, by A. T. Mahan, III. 827.
 SEARCH, EDWARD (Tucker), II. 338.
 Search after Happiness, by Hannah More, II. 577.
 Season, by Alfred Austin, III. 681.
 Seasons, by Thomson, II. 321, 323-26; III. 6.
 Sea-spray and Smoke-drift, by A. L. Gordon, III. 731.
 Seat of Authority, by J. Martineau, III. 392, 393.
 Seats of the Mighty, by Sir G. Parker, III. 728.
 SECCOMBE, THOMAS, III. 846.
 Secret of Narcisse, by Sir E. Gosse, III. 696.
 SEDGWICK, ADAM, III. 202.
 SEDGWICK, ANNE DOUGLAS, III. 855.
 SEDLEY, SIR CHARLES, I. 778.
 SEEGER, ALAN, III. 856.
 SEELEY, SIR JOHN ROBERT, III. 649.
 Sejanus, by Ben Jonson, I. 402.
 SELDEN, JOHN, I. 546.
 Select Charters, by William Stubbs, III. 629.
 Self-control, by Mary Brunton, II. 772.
 Self-Culture, by J. S. Blackie, III. 490.
 Self-Help, by Samuel Smiles, III. 476.
 Self-Reliance, by R. W. Emerson, III. 701.
 SELLAR, WILLIAM YOUNG, III. 634.
 Semites, Religion of, by Robertson Smith, III. 687.
 SEMPILL, FRANCIS, I. 819.
 SEMPILL, ROBERT, I. 232.
 SEMPILL, ROBERT, I. 818.
 SEMPILL, SIR JAMES, I. 818.
 Seneca, trans. by L'Estrange, I. 742.
 SENIOR, NASSAU WILLIAM, III. 343.
 Sense and Sensibility, by Jane Austen, II. 774, 779.
 Senses and Instincts, by Avebury, III. 664.
 Senses and the Intellect, by Bain, III. 497.
 Sensitive Plant, by Shelley, III. 112.
 Sentimental Journey, by Sterne, II. 402, 404, 409.
 Sentimental Tommy, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Sepoy War, by Kaye, III. 482.
 SERGEANT, E. F. ADELIN, III. 850.
 SERVICE, ROBERT, III. 728.
 Sesame and Lilies, by Ruskin, III. 571.
 Seth's Brother's Wife, by H. Frederic, III. 632.
 SETON-THOMPSON, ERNEST, III. 845.
 SETTLE, ELKANAH, II. 71.
 Seven Lamps of Architecture, by Ruskin, III. 568, 569, 572, 573.
 Seven Pillars of Wisdom, by T. E. Lawrence, III. 710.
 Seven Sages, I. 51.
 SEWALL, SAMUEL, III. 735.
 SEWARD, ANNA, II. 576.
 Sexton's Daughter, by J. Sterling, III. 271.
 Shadows of Shasta, by Joaquin Miller, III. 828.
 SHADWELL, THOMAS, I. 729; II. 63; Satire on, by Dryden, I. 703, 709.
 SHAPTESBURY, EARL OF, 167.
 SHARP, JOHN CAMPBELL, III. 839.
 Shakespear, Comments on the Commentators of, by H. J. Pye, II. 686.
 SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM, I. 355; Portraits of, I. 376; ed. by Johnson, II. 459, 460; Beauties of, by Dr Dodd, II. 456; Essay on, by Farmer, II. 629; Illustrations of, by Francis Douce, II. 713; Lectures and Notes on, by Coleridge, III. 60, 69; Characters of, by Hazlitt, III. 89; his Mind and Art, by Prof. Dowden, III. 687; Life of, by Sir Sidney Lee, III. 707; Variorum edition, by Furness, III. 825.
 Shakespeare and his Forerunners, by Sidney Lanier, III. 828.
 Shakespeare's Predecessors, by J. A. Symonds, III. 640.
 Shakespeare to Pope, From, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
 Shakesperian Forgeries, Ireland's, II. 711.
 Shamus O'Brien, by J. S. Le Fanu, III. 365.
 Shandon Bells, by Mahony, III. 254; by William Black, III. 691.
 Shan Van Vocht, III. 579.
 SHAPCOTT, REUBEN (W. Hale White), III. 687.
 SHARP, RICHARD, II. 713.
 SHARP, WILLIAM, III. 705.
 Shaughraun, by Dion Boucicault, III. 585.
 SHAW, GEORGE BERNARD, III. 705, 722.
 SHAW, HENRY WHEELER, III. 853.
 She, by Sir Rider Haggard, III. 703.
 SHEFFIELD, JOHN, II. 106.
 SHEIL, RICHARD LALOR, III. 351.
 She is far from the Land, by Moore, III. 348.
 SHELLEY, MARY W., III. 519.
 SHELLEY, PERCY BYSSHE, III. 9, 107; Early Life, by MacCarthy, III. 583; Life, by Dowden, III. 687.
 SHENSTONE, WILLIAM, II. 353.
 Shepherds' Hunting, by Wither, I. 499.
 Shepherd's Calendar, by Spenser, I. 293, 298.
 Shepherd's Play, in Wakefield Plays, I. 108.
 Shepherd's Song, by Joanna Baillie, II. 731.
 Shepherd's Week, by Gay, II. 172, 174.
 SHERIDAN, RICHARD BRINSLEY, II. 563.
 SHERLOCK, THOMAS, II. 42.
 SHERLOCK, WILLIAM, II. 40.
 Sherlock Holmes, by Sir A. C. Doyle, III. 707.
 SHERRIFF, ROBERT CEDRIC, III. 849.
 SHERWOOD, MARY MARTHA, III. 324.
 She Stoops to Conquer, by Goldsmith, II. 480, 488-490.
 She would and she would not, by Colley Cibber, II. 272, 273.
 Ship of Fools, by Alexander Barclay, I. 116.
 Ship's Adventure, by Clark Russell, III. 691.
 Shipwreck, by William Falconer, II. 498.
 SHIRLEY, JAMES, I. 484, 729.
 Shirley, by C. Brontë, III. 523, 524, 525.
 Shoemaker's Holiday, by Dekker, I. 422.
 SHORTER, CLEMENT KING, III. 844.
 SHORTER, MRS CLEMENT, III. 851.
 Shortest Way with Dissenters, by Defoe, II. 149.
 SHORTHOUSE, JOSEPH HENRY, III. 637.
 Short Studies, by Froude, III. 502, 504.
 Shropshire Lad, by A. E. Housman, III. 713, 722.
 Sibylline Leaves, by Coleridge, III. 61.
 Sicilian Romance, by Mrs Radcliffe, II. 594, 595.
 Sicilian Summer, by Sir H. Taylor, III. 325.
 Sicily, by E. A. Freeman, III. 620.
 Sick Stock-rider, by A. L. Gordon, III. 731.
 Siddons, Life of Mrs, by Campbell, II. 766.
 Side-Walk Studies, by A. Dobson, III. 688.
 SIDGWICK, ETHEL, III. 851.
 SIDGWICK, HENRY, III. 841.
 SIDNEY, ALGERNON, I. 715.
 SIDNEY, SIR PHILIP, I. 287.
 Sidney Biddulph, by Mrs Sheridan, II. 563.
 Siege of Corinth, by Byron, III. 122.
 SIGERSON, DORA (Mrs Shorter), III. 851.
 Sight and Song, by Fiona Macleod, III. 704.
 SIGOURNEY, LYDIA HUNTLEY, III. 757.
 Sigurd the Volsung, by W. Morris, III. 665.
 Silas Lapham, by W. D. Howells, III. 829.
 Silas Marner, by George Eliot, III. 530, 534.
 Silence: A Fable, by E. A. Poe, III. 788.
 Silex Scintillans, by H. Vaughan, I. 682, 683, 684.
 SILL, EDWARD R., III. 833.
 Siller Gun, by John Mayne, II. 810, 811.
 Silurian System, by Murchison, III. 267.
 Silver Box, by J. Galsworthy, III. 712.
 SIMON OF DURHAM, I. 33.
 SIMMS, WILLIAM GILMORE, III. 752.
 Simonidea, by W. S. Landor, III. 141.
 Simplon Pass, by Wordsworth, III. 19.
 SIMS, GEORGE ROBERT, III. 694.
 Sinai and Palestine, by Dean Stanley, III. 394, 395.
 SINCLAIR, MAY, III. 852.
 SINCLAIR, UPTON, III. 856.
 Sin-Eater, by Fiona Macleod, III. 705.
 Sir Aidingar, I. 523, 533.
 Sir Andrew Wyke, by J. Galt, III. 297, 298.
 Sir Beville, by R. S. Hawker, III. 382.
 Sir Charles Grandison, by Richardson, II. 295, 299.
 Sir Courtly Nice, by John Crowne, II. 89.
 Sir Gawane and the Grene Knight, I. 51, 52, 172.
 Sir Launcelot Greaves, by Smollett, II. 442, 444.
 Sir Patrick Spens, I. 532.
 Sir Percival, by J. H. Shorthouse, III. 638.
 Sir Richard Calmady, by Mrs Harrison, III. 705.
 Sir Tristrem, I. 43.
 Sir Turlough, by Carleton, III. 352.
 Sister, by Charlotte Lennox, II. 417.
 Sister Helen, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 643.
 SITWELL, EDITH, III. 723, 852.
 SITWELL, OSBERT, III. 849.
 SITWELL, SACHEVEREL, III. 849.
 SKEAT, WALTER WILLIAM, III. 849.
 SKELTON, JOHN, I. 113.
 SKELTON, SIR JOHN, III. 634.
 SKENE, GILBERT, I. 231.
 SKENE, JOHN, I. 231.
 SKENE, WILLIAM FORBES, III. 399.
 Sketch Book, by Washington Irving, III. 745, 746, 748.
 Sketches by Boz, by Dickens, III. 464, 467.
 Sketches of Irish Character, by Mrs S. C. Hall, III. 280, 281.
 SKINNER, JOHN, II. 318.
 Skipper Ireson's Ride, by Whittier, III. 775.
 SKIPSEY, JOSEPH, III. 608.
 SKIRVING, ADAM, II. 810.
 Skylark, by James Hogg, III. 296; by Shelley, III. 110.
 Sky Pilot, by Ralph Connor, III. 728.
 Slang, Dictionary of, by Henley, III. 695.
 Sleeper Wakes, by H. G. Wells, III. 712.
 Sleeping Child, by John Wilson, III. 246.
 Slingsby Papers, by N. P. Willis, III. 749.
 SLOANE, WILLIAM MILLIGAN, III. 854.
 Small House at Allington, by Trollope, III. 487.
 SMART, CHRISTOPHER, II. 423.
 Smectymnus, I. 586; Apology for, by Milton, I. 688.
 SMEDLEY, FRANCIS EDWARD, III. 492.
 SMILES, SAMUEL, III. 475.
 SMITH, ADAM, II. 448.
 SMITH, ALBERT, III. 492.
 SMITH, ALEXANDER, III. 604.
 SMITH, CHARLOTTE, II. 593.
 SMITH, DODIE, III. 852.
 SMITH, EDMUND, II. 196.
 SMITH, FRANCIS HOPKINSON, III. 854.
 SMITH, GEORGE GREGORY, III. 846.
 SMITH, GOLDWIN, III. 726, 727.
 SMITH, HENRY, I. 283.
 SMITH, JAMES and HORACE, III. 159.
 SMITH, MRS BURNETT, III. 851.
 SMITH, MRS TOULMIN, III. 850.
 SMITH, SARAH (Hesba Stretton), III. 850.
 SMITH, SIR WILLIAM, III. 479.
 SMITH, SYDNEY, III. 155.
 SMITH, WALTER CHALMERS, III. 607.
 SMITH, WILLIAM, I. 278.
 SMITH, WILLIAM ROBERTSON, III. 687.
 SMOLLETT, TOBIAS GEORGE, II. 8, 442.
 SMUTS, JAN C., III. 733, 847.
 Snake in the Grass, by P. Egan, III. 265.
 Snarleyow, by Marryat, III. 255.
 Snob Papers, by Thackeray, III. 455.
 Snow-Bound, by Whittier, III. 774, 775, 777.
 Snow Image, by Hawthorne, III. 779, 780.
 Social Morality, by F. D. Maurice, III. 441.
 Social Statics, by H. Spencer, III. 586.
 Society and Solitude, by Emerson, III. 760.
 Society in America, by H. Martineau, III. 888.
 Sœur Louise, by C. Rossetti, III. 648.
 Soggarth Aroon, by John Banim, III. 354.
 Sohrab and Rustum, by M. Arnold, III. 591, 592, 596.
 Soldier's Daughter, by A. Cherry, II. 758.
 Soldier's Tear, by T. H. Bayly, III. 241.
 Soldiers Three, by Rudyard Kipling, III. 708.
 Solitary Reaper, by Wordsworth, III. 21.
 Solitude, by Grainger, II. 376.
 Solomon, by Prior, II. 114, 116.
 SOMERVILLE, EDITH CE., III. 851.
 SOMERVILLE, MARY, III. 185.
 SOMERVILLE, WILLIAM, II. 300.
 Song of Dermot and the Earl, I. 34.
 Song of the Glass, by J. F. Waller, III. 364.
 Song of the Indian Maid, by Keats, III. 102.
 Song of the Shirt, by Hood, III. 138, 139.
 Song of the Universal, by Whitman, III. 811.
 Song of the Western Men, by R. S. Hawker, III. 381, 382.

- Songs before Sunrise, by Swinburne, III. 671.
 Songs from Vagabondia, by W. B. Carman and Richard Hovey, III. 728, 833.
 Songs of Experience, by William Blake, II. 717, 720; of Innocence, II. 717, 719.
 Songs of Israel, by William Knox, II. 782.
 Songs of Labour, by Whittier, III. 775.
 Songs of Scotland prior to Burns, by R. Chambers, III. 316.
 Songs of the Sierras, by J. Miller, III. 828.
 Song-Writers, Elizabethan, I. 273.
 Sonnet-Cycles, Elizabethan, I. 286.
 Sonnet introduced, I. 159.
 Sonnets from the Portuguese, by E. B. Browning, III. 553, 557, 561.
 Sonnets of Shakespeare, I. 362.
 Sons and Lovers, by D. H. Lawrence, III. 716.
 Sophocles, trans. by Edward FitzGerald, III. 425; by Lewis Campbell, III. 661.
 Sophonisba, by James Thomson, II. 320.
 Sophy, by Sir J. Denham, I. 641.
 Sordello, by R. Browning, III. 552, 553, 558.
 Sorley, Charles H., III. 849.
 Sorrows of Gentility, by Jewsbury, III. 520.
 Sospetto d'Herode, trans. by Crashaw, I. 677.
 SOTHERBY, WILLIAM, II. 713.
 Soul, by Francis William Newman, III. 342.
 South, ROBERT, I. 760.
 South Africa, by Pringle, II. 789, 790; by Lady Anne Barnard, II. 804; by Bryce, III. 686; by Theal, III. 733.
 South Africa, English Literature in, III. 733.
 South America, Wanderings in, by Charles Waterton, III. 173.
 South Sea Bubbles, by G. H. Kingsley, III. 517.
 SOUTHERN, THOMAS, II. 75.
 SOUTHEY, MRS, III. 55.
 SOUTHEY, ROBERT, III. 47; book on, by Dowden, III. 689.
 SOUTHWELL, ROBERT, I. 337.
 Space, Time, and Deity, by Alexander, III. 718, 844.
 Spain, Handbook for Travellers in, by Ford, III. 322.
 Spanish Ballads, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250.
 Spanish Farm, by R. H. Mottram, III. 720, 848.
 Spanish Friar, by Dryden, I. 792, 807.
 Spanish Gypsy, by George Eliot, III. 530.
 Spanish Influence on English Literature, I. 236.
 Spanish Literature, by G. Ticknor, III. 749.
 Spanish Military Nun, by De Quincey, III. 93, 94, 96.
 Spanish Student, by Longfellow, III. 769.
 Spanish Tragedy, by Thomas Kyd, I. 319.
 Spasmodic School, III. 475, 603, 604.
 Specimen Days, by Walt Whitman, III. 807, 809.
 Spectator, II. 3, 121, 213, 215; extracts by Addison, II. 219, 221-226; commenced, II. 232; extracts by Steele, II. 234, 237-239; by Budgell, II. 243.
 Spectre Boat, by Campbell, II. 766.
 SPEDDING, JAMES, III. 397.
 Speechcraft, English, by Barnes, III. 412.
 SPEED, JOHN, I. 271.
 Speed the Plough, by Morton, II. 709.
 SPEKE, JOHN STANNING, III. 610.
 SPELMAN, SIR HENRY, I. 271.
 SPENCE, JOSEPH, II. 338.
 SPENCER, HERBERT, III. 586.
 SPENCER, WILLIAM ROBERT, II. 740.
 SPENDER, STEPHEN H., III. 724, 849.
 SPENSER, EDMUND, I. 237, 293.
 Spinoza, by John Caird, III. 625; by Martineau, III. 392; by Pollock, III. 715.
 Spinoza's Ethic, tr. by W. H. White, III. 687.
 Spirit of Patriotism, by Lord Bolingbroke, II. 202, 205.
 Spirit of Place, by Alice Meynell, III. 705.
 Spirit of the Age, by Hazlitt, III. 80.
 Spirit of the Nation, III. 364, 570.
 Spiritual Quixote, by Graves, II. 376.
 Spiritual Wives, by W. H. Dixon, III. 578.
 Spleen, by Matthew Green, II. 288.
 Splendid Shilling, by John Phillips, II. 241.
 SPOFFORD, HARRIET P., III. 854.
 SPOTTISWOODE, JOHN, I. 512.
 SPRAT, DR THOMAS, II. 56.
 Sprig of Shillelah, II. 759.
 Spring, Ode to, by Mrs Barbauld, II. 582.
 SPURGEON, CAROLINE F. S., III. 851.
 SPURGEON, CHARLES HADDON, III. 648.
 Spy, by J. Fenimore Cooper, III. 750.
 Squatter's Dream, by Browne, III. 732.
 SQUIRE, SIR JOHN COLLINGS, III. 848.
 Squire Maurice, by Alex. Smith, III. 605.
 Squire of Alsatia, by Shadwell, II. 63.
 Squire's Pew, by Jane Taylor, III. 175.
 Stand Fast, Craig Royston, by W. Black, III. 691.
 STANHOPE, EARL, III. 374.
 STANHOPE, PHILIP DORMER, II. 291.
 STANLEY, ARTHUR PENRHYN, III. 394.
 STANLEY, SIR HENRY MORTON, III. 841.
 STANLEY, THOMAS, I. 746.
 STANNARD, MRS ARTHUR, III. 851.
 STANYHURST, RICHARD, I. 332.
 Stanzas Irregulars, by C. Cotton, I. 776.
 Starling, by Norman Macleod, III. 396.
 Star of Bethlehem, by H. K. White, II. 729.
 Statesman, by Sir Henry Taylor, III. 325.
 STEDMAN, EDMUND CLARENCE, III. 824.
 STEEL, MRS FLORA ANNIE, III. 850.
 STEELE, SIR RICHARD, II. 3, 228; Life of, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 Steele Glas, by Gascoigne, I. 247.
 STEEVENS, GEORGE, II. 549.
 STEIN, GERTRUDE, III. 720, 855.
 Stein, Life of, by Seeley, III. 649.
 Stella and Vanessa, II. 123, 124; Swift's Journal to Stella, II. 127, 143.
 STEPHEN, SIR LESLIE, III. 662.
 Stephen, Life of Sir James Fitzjames, by Sir L. Stephen, III. 662.
 STEPHENS, JAMES, III. 848.
 STEPHENS, J. BRUNTON, III. 729, 732.
 STEFNEY, GEORGE, II. 112.
 Steps to the Temple, by Crashaw, I. 677.
 STERLING, JOHN, III. 270; Life of, by Carlyle, III. 271, 404.
 STERN, GLADYS BRONWYN, III. 852.
 STERNE, LAURENCE, II. 8, 401.
 STERNHOLD, THOMAS, I. 150.
 STEVENS, GEORGE ALEXANDER, II. 708.
 STEVENSON, ROBERT LOUIS, III. 697; ed. by Sir Sidney Colvin, III. 693.
 STEWART, DUGALD, II. 535.
 STILLINGFLEET, EDWARD, II. 39.
 STIRLING, EARL OF, I. 509.
 STIRLING, JAMES HUTCHISON, III. 661.
 STIRLING-MAXWELL, SIR W., III. 499.
 STOCKTON, FRANCIS RICHARD, III. 824.
 STODDARD, RICHARD HENRY, III. 823.
 Stokers and Pokers, by Sir F. Bond Head, III. 266, 267.
 Stones of Venice, by Ruskin, III. 569, 572, 573.
 STORER, THOMAS, I. 390.
 STORY, WILLIAM WETMORE, III. 784.
 Story (W. W.) and his Friends, by Henry James, III. 830.
 Story of my Heart, by R. Jefferies, III. 640.
 STOW, JOHN, I. 256.
 STOWE, HARRIET BEECHER, III. 812.
 STRACHEY, GILES LYTON, III. 715, 719.
 Strains of the Mountain Muse, by Joseph Train, III. 291.
 Strangers Yet, by Lord Houghton, III. 382.
 Strange Story, by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 Strathmore, by Ouida, III. 690.
 STRETTON, HESBA, III. 850.
 STRICKLAND, AGNES, III. 281; ELIZABETH, III. 281; SUSANNA, III. 725.
 Strife, by John Galsworthy, III. 712.
 STRODE, WILLIAM, I. 570.
 STRYPE, JOHN, II. 148.
 STUART, GILBERT, II. 388.
 Stuart of Dunleath, by the Hon. Mrs Norton, III. 386.
 STUBBS, WILLIAM, III. 628.
 Student Life of Germany, by William Howitt, III. 283.
 Studies in Literature, by Lord Morley, III. 686.
 Studies in Parliament, by R. H. Hutton, III. 632.
 Studies of a Biographer, by Sir Leslie Stephen, III. 662.
 Studies Scientific and Social, by A. R. Wallace, III. 614.
 Study of History, by Lord Bolingbroke, II. 202, 204; by Lord Acton, III. 684.
 STUKELEY, WILLIAM, II. 245.
 Style, by Thomas de Quincey, III. 94, 95.
 Subaltern, by G. R. Gleig, III. 323.
 Sublime and Beautiful, by Burke, I. 543.
 SUCKLING, SIR JOHN, I. 630.
 SULLIVAN, ALAN, III. 726.
 Sumer is i-cumen in, I. 41, 43.
 Summer Dawn, by W. Morris, III. 605, 607.
 Summer in Arcady, by J. L. Allen, III. 831.
 Summer Morning, by John Clare, III. 234.
 Summers Last Will, by Nash, I. 320.
 Sunday, by George Herbert, I. 496.
 Sun-dial, by Bowles, II. 722.
 Sunset Ridge, by Julia Ward Howe, III. 827.
 Superstitions of the Highlands, by Collins, II. 368, 371.
 SURFACEMAN (Alexander Anderson), III. 841.
 SURREY, HENRY HOWARD, EARL OF, I. 158.
 SURTEES, ROBERT SMITH, III. 414.
 Survey of Cornwall, by R. Carew, I. 353.
 Survey of London, by John Stow, I. 257.
 Susan Hopley, by C. Crowe, III. 280.
 Suspiria de Profundis, by De Quincey, III. 93, 97.
 SUTRO, ALFRED, III. 846.
 SWAIN, CHARLES, III. 376.
 Swallow, by Sir Rider Haggard, III. 703.
 SWAN, ANNIE S. (Mrs B. Smith), III. 851.
 SWANWICK, ANNA, III. 850.
 Swellfoot the Tyrant, by Shelley, III. 111.
 SWIFT, BENJAMIN (W. R. Paterson), III. 847.
 SWIFT, JONATHAN, II. 122; Life of, by Forster, III. 474.
 SWINBURNE, ALGERNON CHARLES, III. 670.
 SWINNERTON, FRANK, III. 848.
 Sword Chant of Thorstein Raudi, III. 310.
 Sybil, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 437, 440.
 Sylla, by John Banim, III. 353.
 SYLVESTER, JOSUA, I. 345.
 Sylvia, by George Darley, III. 235.
 SYMONDS, EMILY MORSE, III. 851.
 SYMONDS, JOHN ADDINGTON, III. 640.
 SYMONS, ARTHUR, III. 846.
 SYNGE, JOHN M., III. 709.
 Syntax, Dr, by William Combe, II. 661.
 TABB, JOHN BANISTER, III. 854.
 Table-book, by William Hone, II. 760.
 Tables Turned, by Wordsworth, III. 17.
 Table Talk, by Selden, I. 547, 548; by Cowper, II. 601, 603; by Hazlitt, III. 80.
 Table Traits, by John Doran, III. 331.
 TABLEY, LORD DE, III. 650.
 TAGORE, RABINDRANATH, III. 710.
 Talavera, by J. W. Croker, III. 170.
 Tale of a Tub, by Swift, II. 123, 126, 136-138.
 Tales from Shakespeare, by Charles and Mary Lamb, III. 74.
 Tales in Verse, by G. Crabbe, II. 694, 698.
 Tales of Ireland, by W. Carleton, III. 352.
 Tales of the Hall, by Crabbe, II. 694, 695, 698.
 Tales of the O'Hara Family, by Michael and John Banim, III. 353, 354.
 Tales of the Peerage and Peasantry, II. 772.
 TALFOURD, SIR THOMAS NOON, III. 272.
 TALIessin, I. 3.
 Talking Oak, by Tennyson, III. 541, 543.
 Tamar and Tavy, by Mrs Bray, III. 279.
 Tamburlaine, by Marlowe, I. 346.
 Taming of the Shrew, by Shakespeare, I. 365.
 Tam o' Shanter, by Burns, II. 819.
 Tancred, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 437, 439.
 Tanglewood Tales, by Hawthorne, III. 781.
 TANNAHILL, ROBERT, II. 829.
 TARKINGTON, NEWTON BOOTH, III. 835.
 Tar-water, Further Thoughts on, by Berkeley, II. 266.
 Task, by Cowper, II. 601, 604, 607-609.
 TASMA, III. 730.
 Tasso, trans. by Carew, I. 335; by Fairfax, I. 444.
 Taste, Essays on, by A. Alison, II. 639.
 TATE, NAHUM, II. 60.
 TATHAM, JOHN, I. 780.
 Tatler, II. 3, 121, 213, 230, 400; extract by Swift, II. 139; extract by Addison, II. 220; extracts by Steele, II. 233, 236.
 TAUTPHEUS, THE BARONESS VON, III. 385.
 Tayis Bank, I. 210.
 TAYLOR, ANN AND JANE, III. 174.
 TAYLOR, BAYARD, III. 821.
 TAYLOR, CANON ISAAC, III. 244.
 TAYLOR, ISAAC, III. 244.
 TAYLOR, JEREMY, I. 603.
 TAYLOR, JOHN, of Norwich, II. 712.
 TAYLOR, JOHN, the 'Water Poet,' I. 454.
 TAYLOR, PHILIP MEADOWS, III. 415.
 TAYLOR, RACHEL ANNAND, III. 852.
 TAYLOR, SIR HENRY, III. 324.
 TAYLOR, TOM, III. 463.
 TAYLOR, WILLIAM, II. 712.
 Tea-Kettle, Song of the, by Ann Taylor, III. 175.
 Tears of Scotland, by Smollett, II. 445.
 Tea-table Miscellany, II. 313.
 TEKAHIONWAKE (E. Pauline Johnson), III. 851.
 Temora, by James Macpherson, II. 500.
 Tempest, by Shakespeare, I. 357, 372.
 TEMPLE, SIR WILLIAM, I. 751.
 Temple, by Herbert, I. 495.
 Temple Bar founded, III. 624.
 Temple of Favour, by Lloyd, II. 612.
 Temple of Venus, by Spenser, I. 301.
 TENISON, THOMAS, II. 60.
 TENNANT, WILLIAM, III. 307.
 Tennessee's Partner, by Bret Harte, III. 827.
 TENNYSON, FREDERICK, III. 539.

- TENNYSON, LORD, III. 9, 540.
 Tennyson, by Lady Ritchie, III. 689; by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 Ten Thousand a Year, by Warren, III. 344.
 Tent on the Beach, by Whittier, III. 775.
 Tenure of Kings and Magistrates, by Milton, I. 689.
 Terminations, by Henry James, III. 830.
 Tess of the D'Urbervilles, by Thomas Hardy, III. 679.
 Testament of Beauty, by Robert Bridges, III. 693.
 Testaments, by J. Davidson, III. 706.
 Testimony of the Rocks, by Hugh Miller, III. 285, 286.
 THACKERAY, ANNE ISABELLA, III. 689.
 THACKERAY, WILLIAM MAKEPEACE, III. 453; essay by Dr John Brown, III. 450.
 Thaddeus of Warsaw, by Jane Porter, II. 773.
 Thalaba, by Southey, III. 48, 49, 50.
 Thalia Rediviva, by H. Vaughan, I. 682.
 Thanatopsis, by W. C. Bryant, III. 753, 754.
 Thanksgiving, by T. Traherne, I. 776.
 Thanksgiving for his House, by Herrick, I. 565.
 THAXTER, CELIA, III. 854.
 THEAL, GEORGE MCCALL, III. 726, 733.
 Thealma and Clearchus, by J. Chalkhill, I. 443.
 Theatre, by James Smith, III. 160.
 Theism, by F. W. Newman, III. 342; by Theodore Parker, III. 763.
 THEOBALD, LEWIS, II. 200.
 Theocritus, trans. by Calverley, III. 639; by A. Lang, III. 602.
 Theodoric the Goth, by T. Hodgkin, III. 661.
 Theodosius, by Nathaniel Lee, II. 88.
 Theodric, by Thomas Campbell, II. 766.
 Theological Essays, by F. D. Maurice, III. 441.
 There is a Green Hill far away, by Mrs Alexander, III. 584.
 There's nae Luck, by Mickle, II. 523, 524.
 Theron and Aspasio, by J. Hervey, II. 338.
 Thersites, Interlude, I. 153.
 Thief and the Cordelier, by Prior, II. 117.
 Things I have Seen, by G. A. H. Sala, III. 625.
 THIRLWALL, CONNOP, III. 204.
 Thirty Years in Australia, by Ada Cambridge, III. 732.
 Thirty Years' Musical Recollections, by Chorley, III. 273.
 Thirty Years' Peace, by Harriet Martineau, III. 388, 390.
 THOM, WILLIAM, III. 305.
 THOMAS, AUGUSTUS, III. 855.
 THOMAS, EDWARD, III. 847.
 THOMAS THE RHYMER, I. 43, 166.
 THOMPSON, FRANCIS, III. 710.
 THOMS, WILLIAM JOHN, III. 331.
 THOMSON, JAMES, II. 320; III. 5.
 THOMSON, JAMES ('B. V.'), III. 654.
 THOMSON, W. R., III. 733.
 THOREAU, HENRY DAVID, III. 795.
 Thorn, by John O'Keefe, II. 656.
 Thoughts at Fourscore, by T. Cooper, III. 376.
 Thoughts concerning Education, by Locke, II. 18, 20.
 Thoughts in Prison, by Dr W. Dodd, II. 456.
 Thoughts on Various Subjects, by Swift, II. 144; by Pope, II. 195.
 Thousand and One Nights, trans. by E. W. Lane, III. 327; by Burton III. 610.
 THRALE, MRS (Mrs Piozzi), II. 473.
 Thrawn Janet, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 698.
 Three English Statesmen, by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
 Three Generations of Englishwomen, by Janet Ross, III. 373.
 Three Midshipmen, by Kingston, III. 482.
 Three Miss Kings, by A. Cambridge, III. 732.
 Three Priests of Peblis, I. 209.
 Three Tabernacles, by Herbert Knowles, II. 787, 788.
 Three Warnings, by Mrs Piozzi, II. 473.
 Threnodia Augustalis, by Dryden, I. 706.
 Thrissill and the Rois, by Dunbar, I. 192.
 Thucydides, trans. by Hobbes, I. 554, 555; by Dr Thomas Arnold, III. 203.
 THURLOW, LORD, II. 634; the second, II. 792.
 Thyestes, by John Crowne, II. 89.
 Thyrsis, by M. Arnold, III. 592, 597.
 Thyrsa, To, by Lord Byron, III. 130.
 TICKELL, RICHARD, II. 670.
 TICKELL, THOMAS, II. 251.
 TICKNOR, GEORGE, III. 749.
 Tidings from the Seashore, by Dunbar, I. 198.
 Tiger, by William Blake, II. 720.
 TIGHE, MRS, II. 599.
 TILLOTSON, JOHN, II. 37.
 Timber, by Vaughan, I. 683.
 Time and Tide, by Ruskin, III. 571.
 Time works Wonders, by Jerrold, III. 330.
 Union of Athens, by Shakespeare, I. 371.
 Timothy Titcomb's Letters, by J. G. Holland, III. 778.
 TIMROD, HENRY, III. 853.
 TINDAL, MATTHEW, II. 162.
 Tinker, by J. Cocke, I. 443.
 Tintern Abbey, by Wordsworth, III. 13, 16, 17.
 Titles of Honour, by John Selden, I. 546.
 TITMARSH, MICHAEL ANGELO (Thackeray), III. 456.
 Titus Andronicus, by Shakespeare, I. 360.
 TOBIN, JOHN, II. 710.
 TODD, ALPHEUS, III. 726.
 TOLAND, JOHN, II. 161.
 Tom Bowling, by Charles Dibdin, II. 708.
 Tom Brown's Schooldays, by T. Hughes, III. 577.
 Tom Cringle's Log, by M. Scott, III. 254.
 Tom Jones, by Fielding, II. 7, 341, 345.
 Tommy and Grizel, by Barrie, III. 705.
 To-morrow, by John Collins, II. 708.
 Tom Sawyer, by Mark Twain, III. 826.
 Tom Thumb, by Fielding, II. 339.
 TONE, THEOBALD WOLFE, II. 759.
 Tony Lumpkin, by O'Keefe, II. 656.
 TOOKE, JOHN HORNE, II. 632.
 Too Strange not to be True, by Lady Fullerton, III. 520.
 TOPLADY, AUGUSTUS MONTAGUE, II. 456.
 To the Lighthouse, by Virginia Woolf, III. 705.
 Tottel's Miscellany, I. 159, 160, 257, 286.
 Tournament, by Dunbar, I. 197.
 TOURNEUR, CYRIL, I. 429.
 TOUT, THOMAS FREDERICK, III. 843.
 Towneley Plays, I. 108.
 TOWNLEY, JAMES, II. 410.
 Town of the Cascades, by Banim, III. 353.
 TOWNSEND LORD JOHN, II. 670.
 Toxophilus, by Roger Ascham, I. 144.
 TOYNBEE, ARNOLD, III. 719, 848.
 Toy Shop, by Dodsley, II. 301.
 Tractate on Education, by Milton, I. 688, 706.
 Tracts for the Times, III. 336, 337.
 Traditional Tales, by Allan Cunningham, III. 303.
 Traditions of Edinburgh, by Robert Chambers, III. 316.
 Tragic Comedians, by Meredith, III. 658.
 Tragic Mary, by Michael Field, III. 704.
 TRAHERNE, THOMAS, I. 776.
 TRAILL, HENRY DUFF, III. 841.
 TRAIN, JOSEPH, III. 201.
 Traitor, by James Shirley, I. 484, 485.
 Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry, by W. Carleton, III. 352.
 Tramp Abroad, by Mark Twain, III. 826.
 Transcaucasia and Ararat, by Bryce, III. 686.
 Transcendental 'Movement' in America, III. 757, 759, 760, 763.
 Transformation, by Hawthorne, III. 781.
 Translators and Translations, Early, I. 258.
 Traveller, by Goldsmith, II. 479, 481-484.
 Treasure Island, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 698.
 Treasure Trove, by Samuel Lover, III. 355.
 Tremaine, by R. P. Ward, II. 754.
 Trembling of the Veil, by W. B. Yeats, III. 709.
 TRENCH, HERBERT, III. 846.
 TRENCH, RICHARD CHENEVIX, III. 393.
 TREVELYAN, GEORGE MACAULAY, III. 715.
 TREVELYAN, SIR GEORGE OTTO, III. 687.
 TREVISA, JOHN OF, I. 83.
 Trial of the Witnesses, by Sherlock, II. 42.
 Trials of Margaret Lyndsay, by John Wilson, III. 246.
 Trimmer, Character of a, by the Marquis of Halifax, I. 756.
 Tristram, by Edwin A. Robinson, III. 835.
 Tristram of Lyonesse, by Swinburne, III. 673, 674, 677, 678.
 Tristram Shandy, by Sterne, II. 402, 404-409.
 Tristrem, Sir, I. 43.
 Triumph of Life, by Shelley, III. 112, 117.
 Triumphs of Temper, by Hayley, II. 614.
 Trivia, by Gay, II. 172, 175.
 Troilus and Cressida, by Chaucer, I. 62, 63, 68-70; by Shakespeare, I. 369.
 TROLLOPE, ANTHONY, III. 486.
 TROLLOPE, FRANCES, III. 276.
 TROLLOPE, FRANCES ELEANOR, III. 400.
 TROLLOPE, THOMAS ADOLPHUS, III. 400.
 True Intellectual System, by Cudworth, I. 670, 671.
 True King, by A. de Vere, III. 581.
 True Patriot, ed. by Fielding, II. 341.
 TRUMBULL, JOHN, III. 736.
 Trumpet and Drum, With, by Field, III. 831.
 Trumps, by G. W. Curtis, III. 784.
 Truth, by Cowper, II. 606.
 TUCKER, ABRAHAM, II. 338.
 TUCKER, MARIA CHARLOTTE, III. 850.
 TUCKERMAN, HENRY THEODORE, III. 853.
 Tufts of Heather, by E. Waugh, III. 492.
 TULLOCH, JOHN, III. 506.
 Tullochgorum, by John Skinner, II. 318.
 TUPPER, MARTIN FARQUHAR, III. 491.
 TURBERVILLE, GEORGE, J. 264.
 Turkes, Historie of the, by Knolles, I. 272.
 TURNER, CHARLES TENNYSON, III. 539.
 TURNER, CYRIL. See TOURNEUR.
 TURNER, ETHEL, III. 729.
 TURNER, SHARON, II. 639.
 TURNER, WALTER JOHN REDFERN, III. 849.
 Tuscan Cities, by W. D. Howells, III. 829.
 TUSSER, THOMAS, I. 248.
 TUTTIETT, M. G. (Maxwell Gray), III. 851.
 TWAIN, MARK (S. L. Clemens), III. 826.
 'Twas when the Seas were roaring, by Gay, II. 174, 177.
 Tweedside, by Robert Crawford, II. 317.
 TWEEDSMUIR, LORD (John Buchan), III. 847.
 Twelfth Night, by Shakespeare, I. 368.
 Twentieth Century Literature, III. 717-724.
 Twice Round the Clock, by G. A. H. Sala, III. 624.
 Twice-Told Tales, by Hawthorne, III. 779.
 Twilight of the Gods, by R. Garnett, III. 668.
 Two Chiefs of Dunboy, by Froude, III. 503.
 Two Gentlemen of Verona, by Shakespeare, I. 358.
 Two Noble Kinsmen, I. 334, 373, 469, 473.
 Two on a Tower, by T. Hardy, III. 679.
 Two Paths, by Ruskin, III. 570, 572, 57.
 Twopenny Post-Bag, by Moore, III. 347.
 Two Poets of Croisic, by R. Browning, III. 556, 566.
 Two Years Ago, by C. Kingsley, III. 513.
 Two Years before the Mast, by R. H. Dana, III. 752.
 TYLER, MOSES COIT, III. 854.
 TYLOR, SIR EDWARD BURNETT, III. 663.
 Tymes goe by Turnes, by Southwell, I. 338.
 TYNAN, KATHARINE, III. 851.
 TYNDALL, WILLIAM, I. 129.
 TYNDALL, JOHN, III. 548.
 Typee, by Herman Melville, III. 821.
 Typhoon, by Conrad, III. 711.
 Tyrannic Love, by Dryden, I. 797, 807, 808.
 Tyrannus, or the Mode, by Evelyn, I. 769.
 Tythes, History of, by J. Selden, I. 540, 549.
 TYTLER, PATRICK FRASER, III. 290.
 TYTLER, WILLIAM, II. 388.
 UDALL, NICOLAS, I. 155.
 Ulysses and the Syren, by Daniel, I. 341.
 Ulysses, by James Joyce, III. 848.
 Uncle Remus, by J. C. Harris, III. 831.
 Uncle Silas, by J. S. Le Fanu, III. 365.
 Uncle Tom's Cabin, by Harriet Beecher Stowe, III. 812, 813.
 UNDERHILL, EVELYN, III. 852.
 Underneath the Bough, by M. Field, III. 704.
 Under the Elm-tree, by W. Morris, III. 665.
 Under the Great Elm, by J. R. Lowell, III. 802.
 Under the Willows, by J. R. Lowell, III. 801, 802, 804.
 Under Two Flags, by Ouida, III. 690.
 Under Western Eyes, by Conrad, III. 711.
 Underwoods, by Ben Jonson, I. 408, 410; by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699, 703.
 Unfortunate Traveller, by Nash, I. 330.
 United Netherlands, by J. L. Motley, III. 815, 816.
 United Service Gazette founded, III. 323.
 United States, History of, by Bryant and Gay, III. 753; by G. Bancroft III. 755; by Goldwin Smith, III. 727.
 Universal Beauty, by H. Brooke, II. 396, 397.
 Universal History, II. 387, 388.
 Universal History, by Hawthorne, III. 779.
 Universal Visitor, II. 424.
 Universe, Intellectual System of the, by Cudworth, I. 670, 671.
 Unknown Eros, by Patmore, III. 602.
 Unseen Foundations, by the Duke of Argyll, III. 614.
 URMER, LOUIS, III. 856.
 Unto This Last, by Ruskin, III. 571, 572.
 Upholsterer, by Arthur Murphy, II. 455.
 Uplandis Mous and the Burges Mous, by Henryson, I. 190.

- Upon Nothing, by Rochester, I. 780.
 Upper Crust, by H. J. Byron, III. 637.
 URQUHART, SIR THOMAS, I. 824.
 USHER, JAMES. See USSHER.
 USK, THOMAS, I. 82.
 USSHER, JAMES, I. 440.
 Usury, Defence of, by Bentham, II. 701.
 Utilitarianism, by J. S. Mill, III. 443, 444.
 Utilitarians, English, by Stephen, III. 662.
 Utopia, by Sir Thomas More, I. 121.
- V
 Vale of Cashmere, by Moore, III. 349.
 Valenciennes, by Thomas Hardy, III. 680.
 Valentine Vox, by Henry Cockton, III. 490.
 Valerius, by J. G. Lockhart, III. 250, 253.
 VANBRUGH, SIR JOHN, II. 80.
 VAN DRUTEN, JOHN WILLIAM, III. 849.
 VAN DYKE, HENRY, III. 854.
 Vane's Story, by James Thomson, III. 655.
 Vanity Fair, by Thackeray, III. 457, 459.
 Vanity of Human Wishes, by Johnson, II. 458, 464.
 Variation of Plants and Animals, by Darwin, III. 417, 420.
 Variety, by William Whitehead, II. 357.
 Vassal Morton, by F. Parkman, III. 818.
 Vathek, by Beckford, II. 621, 622-624.
 VAUGHAN, HENRY, I. 682, 731.
 VAUGHAN, ROBERT, III. 271.
 VAUX, LORD, I. 278.
 VEDDER, DAVID, III. 305.
 VEITCH, JOHN, III. 632.
 Velazquez, by Stirling-Maxwell, III. 499.
 'Venerable Bede,' I. 18.
 Venice Preserved, by Otway, II. 72.
 Venus and Adonis, by Shakespeare, I. 361.
 Vercelli, Book, I. 14, 15, 169.
 VERE, AUBREY DE, III. 581.
 VERE, EDWARD DE, EARL OF OXFORD, I. 277.
 Verses and Translations, by Calverley, III. 638.
 Vertue, by George Herbert, I. 496.
 VERY, JONES, III. 853.
 Vestiges of Creation, by R. Chambers, III. 316.
 Vicar, by Praed, III. 380.
 Vicar of Wakefield, by Goldsmith, II. 479, 493.
 Vicar of Wrexhill, by F. Trollope, III. 276.
 Victoria, by W. W. Campbell, III. 725.
 Victorian Poets, by E. C. Stedman, III. 824.
 Vida's Art of Poetry, tr. by C. Pitt, II. 259.
 Videna, by Heraud, III. 268.
 Views Afoot, by Bayard Taylor, III. 821.
 Vignettes in Rhyme, by A. Dobson, III. 688.
 Village, by George Crabbe, II. 694, 695.
 Village Communities, by Sir H. J. S. Maine, III. 567.
 Village Minstrel, by John Clare, III. 234.
 Villette, by Charlotte Brontë, III. 523, 524.
 VILLIERS, GEORGE, I. 788.
 Vindication of Natural Society, by Burke, II. 543.
 Vindication of the Rights of Woman, by Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin, II. 706.
 Vindiciæ Gallicæ, by Mackintosh, II. 641, 642.
 Viol and Flute, by Sir Edmund Gosse, III. 696.
 Violenzia, by W. C. Roscoe, III. 625.
 Virgideclarum, by Joseph Hall, I. 417.
 Virgil, trans. by Gavin Douglas, I. 202; by Phaer, I. 265; by Stanyhurst, I. 332; by Dryden, I. 704; by Sotheby, II. 713; by Conington, III. 634; by Morris, III. 605.
 Virginian, by Owen Wister, III. 832.
 Virginians, by Thackeray, III. 459.
 Virginian Voyage, by Drayton, I. 344.
 Virginius Puerisque, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 698.
 Virginius, by S. Knowles, III. 225-227.
 Virgin Martyr, by Dekker and Massinger, I. 423, 464, 467.
 Vision, by Thomas Moore, III. 349.
 Vision of Judgment, by Lord Byron, III. 129.
 Vision of Sir Launfal, by J. R. Lowell, III. 801, 804.
 Visions in Verse, by N. Cotton, II. 532.
 Visions of England, by Palgrave, III. 609.
 Vittoria, by George Meredith, III. 658, 660.
 Vivian Grey, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 435.
 Voice from the Nile, by Thomson, III. 655.
 Voice of Spring, by Mrs Hemans, III. 170.
 Voices of the Night, by Longfellow, III. 769.
 Volpone, by Ben Jonson, I. 404, 409.
 Voltaire, monograph on, by Lord Morley, III. 686.
 Vortigern and Rowena, by W. H. Ireland, II. 711.
 Vox Clamantis, by Gower, I. 74.
- Voyage round the World, by Dampier, II. 103.
 Voyages, Collection of, by Hakluyt, I. 284; by Hawkesworth, II. 410.
 Voyage to St Kilda, by M. Martin, II. 303.
 Voyageur, by W. H. Drummond, III. 728.
- W
 WACE, I. 34, 35.
 Wacousta, by J. Richardson, III. 723, 839.
 WADDELL, HELEN, III. 852.
 WADDINGTON, WILLIAM, I. 34.
 WADE, THOMAS, III. 344.
 Wae's me for Prince Charlie, by William Glen, III. 309.
 Wages of Sin, by Lucas Malet, III. 704.
 WAKEFIELD, GILBERT, II. 647.
 Wakefield Plays, I. 108.
 Walden, by Thoreau, III. 796, 797.
 Waldhere, I. 4, 5.
 WALKER, PATRICK, II. 101.
 Walker, London, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Walk in the Light, by B. Barton, III. 231.
 WALKLEY, ARTHUR BINGHAM, III. 843.
 WALLACE, ALFRED RUSSEL, III. 614.
 WALLACE, LEWIS, III. 823.
 Wallace, Blind Harry's, I. 186; II. 309.
 Wallenstein, tr. by Coleridge, III. 58, 63.
 WALLER, EDMUND, I. 624, 731, 734.
 WALLER, JOHN FRANCIS, III. 364.
 WALFOLE, HORACE, II. 8, 411; Life of, by Austin Dobson, III. 688.
 WALFOLE, SIR HUGH, III. 730, 848.
 WALFOLE, SIR SPENCER, III. 841.
 Walpole, Sir Robert, by William Cox, II. 630.
 WALSH, WILLIAM, II. 111.
 WALTON, IZAAK, I. 613.
 Wanderer, by Richard Savage, II. 283.
 Wanderer, in Exeter Book, I. 8.
 Wanderer of Switzerland, by Montgomery, II. 742.
 Wanderings in South America, &c., by Charles Waterton, III. 173.
 War, Miseries of, by William Crowe, II. 617.
 WARBURTON, ELIOT, III. 274.
 WARBURTON, GEORGE, III. 274.
 WARBURTON, WILLIAM, II. 270.
 WARD, ARTEMUS (C. F. Browne), III. 820.
 WARD, JAMES, III. 841.
 WARD, MRS HUMPHRY, III. 704.
 WARD, ROBERT PLUMER, II. 754.
 WARD, SIR ADOLPHUS WILLIAM, III. 840.
 WARD, WILFRID, III. 843.
 WARD, WILLIAM GEORGE, III. 839.
 Warden, by Anthony Trollope, III. 487.
 WARDLAW, LADY, II. 312.
 Warfare of Science with Theology, by A. D. White, III. 825.
 WARNER, CHARLES DUDLEY, III. 853.
 WARNER, SUSAN, III. 795.
 WARNER, SYLVIA TOWNSEND, III. 852.
 WARNER, WILLIAM, I. 336.
 WARREN, SAMUEL, III. 344.
 WARTON, JOSEPH, II. 506.
 WARTON, THOMAS, II. 506.
 WASHINGTON, BOOKER, III. 855.
 WASHINGTON, GEORGE, III. 736, 742.
 Washington Square, by H. James, III. 830.
 Waste Land, by T. S. Eliot, III. 716, 723.
 Watchman, edited by Coleridge, III. 57.
 Water Babies, by C. Kingsley, III. 514, 517.
 'Water Poet' (John Taylor), I. 454.
 WATERLAND, DANIEL, II. 246.
 WATERTON, CHARLES, III. 173.
 WATSON, H. B. MARRIOTT, III. 730, 845.
 WATSON, JOHN, III. 842.
 WATSON, JOHN, of Kingston, III. 726.
 WATSON, RICHARD, II. 646.
 WATSON, ROBERT, II. 388.
 WATSON, SIR WILLIAM, III. 700.
 WATSON, THOMAS, I. 241, 273, 274, 277.
 WATTS, ALARIC ALEXANDER, III. 323.
 WATTS, ISAAC, II. 206.
 WATTS-DUNTON, THEODORE, III. 668.
 Watty and Meg, by Wilson, II. 812, 813.
 Wat Tyler, by Southey, III. 48.
 WAUGH, EDWIN, III. 402.
 Waverley, by Scott, III. 31.
 Waves, by Virginia Woolf, III. 705.
 WAY, ARTHUR S., III. 842.
 Way to Keep Him, by A. Murphy, II. 455.
 We met—'twas in a Crowd, by T. H. Bayly, III. 241.
 Wealth of Nations, by Adam Smith, II. 448, 450-452.
 Wearin' o' the Green, III. 570.
 WEBBE, WILLIAM, I. 266.
 WEBSTER, AUGUSTA, III. 690.
 WEBSTER, DANIEL, III. 744.
 WEBSTER, JOHN, I. 426.
 Wedding Journey, by Howells, III. 820.
- WEDMORE, FREDERICK, III. 841.
 Wee Davie, by Norman Macleod, III. 396.
 Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers, by Thoreau, III. 796.
 Weeper, by Crashaw, I. 678.
 Weir of Hermiston, by Stevenson, III. 699.
 Welcome from Greece, by J. Gay, II. 177.
 WELDON, SIR ANTHONY, I. 589.
 WELLESLEY, DOROTHY VIOLET, LADY GERALD, III. 852.
 WELLS, CHARLES JEREMIAH, III. 657.
 WELLS, HERBERT GEORGE, III. 712, 720.
 Welsh Contribution to English Literature, I. 831.
 Welsh Language, I. 2, 831.
 WELSTED, LEONARD, II. 199.
 WENTWORTH, LADY (Lady A. Blunt), III. 691.
 Were na my Heart Light I wad die, by Lady Grizel Baillie, II. 311.
 Were-Wolves, by S. Baring-Gould, III. 664.
 WESLEY, CHARLES, II. 337.
 WESLEY, JOHN, II. 333; Life of, by Southey, III. 50, 54.
 Wessex Tales, by Thomas Hardy, III. 679.
 WEST, GILBERT, II. 259.
 WEST, REBECCA, III. 852.
 WEST, RICHARD, II. 422.
 West Africa, by M. H. Kingsley, III. 517.
 WESTALL, WILLIAM, III. 840.
 WESTCOTT, EDWARD NOYES, III. 831.
 Western and Eastern Rambles, by Joseph Howe, III. 726.
 Western Islands of Scotland, by Martin Martin, II. 303.
 West Indian, by Cumberland, II. 562.
 West India Proprietor, by M. G. Lewis, II. 748, 750.
 West Indies, by Froude, III. 503.
 West Indies, by Montgomery, II. 742.
 Westminster Bridge, by Wordsworth, III. 27.
 Westward Ho! by Dekker and Webster, I. 423, 426; by C. Kingsley, III. 513, 514-516.
 West Wind, Ode to, by Shelley, III. 110, 114.
 Wet Sheet and a Flowing Sea, by Allan Cunningham, III. 304.
 WETHERALD, ETHELWYN, III. 726.
 WETHERELL, ELIZABETH, III. 795.
 WEYMAN, STANLEY JOHN, III. 843.
 WHARTON, EDITH, III. 834.
 WHARTON, THOMAS, II. 98.
 What d'ye Call It? by Gay, II. 172, 177.
 WHATLEY, RICHARD, III. 106.
 What is Life? by John Clare, III. 234.
 What Maisie Knew, by H. James, III. 830.
 What will he do with it? by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 What you will, by Marston, I. 462.
 When a Man's Single, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 When the Kye comes Hame, by James Hogg, III. 295.
 WHETSTONE, GEORGE, I. 238, 240, 333.
 WHEWELL, WILLIAM, III. 108.
 WHIBLEY, CHARLES, III. 844.
 WHICHOTE, BENJAMIN, I. 603.
 Whims and Oddities, by Hood, III. 137.
 WHIFFLE, EDWARD PERCY, III. 853.
 WHISTLECRAFT (J. Hookham Frere), II. 675.
 WHISTLER, JAMES McNEILL, III. 854.
 WHISTON, WILLIAM, II. 158.
 Whitbread's Brewery, by Wolcot, II. 664.
 WHITE, ANDREW DICKSON, III. 825.
 WHITE, GILBERT, II. 625.
 WHITE, HENRY KIRKE, II. 728.
 WHITE, JOSEPH BLANCO, II. 791.
 WHITE, RICHARD GRANT, III. 853.
 WHITE, WILLIAM HALE, III. 687.
 Whiteboy, by Mrs S. C. Hall, III. 280.
 White Company, by Conan Doyle, III. 707.
 White Devil, by John Webster, I. 427, 428.
 WHITEFIELD, GEORGE, II. 337.
 WHITEHEAD, ALFRED NORTH, III. 718, 845.
 WHITEHEAD, WILLIAM, II. 357.
 White Heather, by Wm. Black, III. 691.
 WHITEING, RICHARD, III. 841.
 White Jacket, by Herman Melville, III. 821.
 WHITELOCKE, BULSTRODE, I. 750.
 White Ship, by D. G. Rossetti, III. 643.
 White Wings, by William Black, III. 691.
 WHITMAN, WALTER, III. 806.
 WHITNEY, WILLIAM DWIGHT, III. 824.
 WHITTIER, JOHN GREENLEAF, III. 774.
 Who shall be Fairest? by C. Mackay, III. 481.
 WHYMPER, EDWARD, III. 841.
 WHYTE-MELVILLE, GEORGE JOHN, III. 585.
 Wide, Wide World, by S. Warner, III. 795.
 Widow Barnaby, by F. Trollope, III. 276.
 Widow Married, by F. Trollope, III. 276.
 Widowers' Houses, by G. B. Shaw, III. 705.

- Widsith, I. 4.
 Wieland's Oberon, trans. by William Sotheby, II. 713.
 Wife o' Usher's Well, I. 537.
 Wife's Complaint, in Exeter Book, I. 8.
 WIGGIN, KATE DOUGLAS, III. 833.
 WILBERFORCE, WILLIAM, II. 646.
 WILCOX, ELLA WHEELER, III. 855.
 WILDE, OSCAR O'FLAHERTY, III. 706.
 Wild Eelin, by William Black, III. 691.
 Wild Irish Girl, by Lady Morgan, II. 781.
 Wild Life in a Southern County, by Richard Jefferies, III. 640.
 Wild Wales, by Borrow, III. 432.
 WILDER, THORNTON, III. 856.
 Wilhelm Meister, trans. by Carlyle, III. 403.
 WILKES, JOHN, II. 495, 516.
 WILKIE, WILLIAM, II. 441.
 WILKINS, JOHN, I. 685.
 WILKINS, MARY ELEANOR, III. 834.
 WILKINSON, HENRY SPENSER, III. 843.
 WILKINSON, SIR JOHN GARDNER, III. 321.
 WILLIAM OF MALMESBURY, I. 33.
 WILLIAM OF NEWBURY, I. 33.
 William and Margaret, by Mallet, II. 328, 329.
 William of Palerme (Palermo), I. 51.
 William Rufus, by Freeman, III. 626; by Michael Field, III. 704.
 WILLIAMS, HELEN MARIA, II. 600.
 WILLIAMS, SIR CHARLES HANBURY, II. 348.
 William Wilson, by Poe, III. 787, 788.
 WILLIS, NATHANIEL PARKER, III. 749.
 WILLIS, SARA PAYSON, III. 749.
 Will o' the Mill, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 697.
 WILLS, JAMES, III. 350.
 WILLS, WILLIAM GORMAN, III. 584.
 Will Waterproof, by Tennyson, III. 541.
 WILMOT, JOHN (Earl of Rochester), I. 779.
 WILSON, ALEXANDER, II. 812.
 WILSON, ARTHUR, I. 588.
 WILSON, DAVID ALEC, III. 846.
 WILSON, JOHN, I. 787; II. 440; III. 245.
 WILSON, JOHN MACKAY, III. 578.
 WILSON, SIR DANIEL, III. 726.
 WILSON, SIR THOMAS, I. 143.
 WILSON, WOODROW, III. 855.
 Winchester Annals, I. 29.
 WINCHILSEA, COUNTESS OF, II. 253.
 Wind and Wave, by Patmore, III. 602.
 Window in Thrums, by Sir J. M. Barrie, III. 705.
 Windsor Forest, by Pope, II. 180, 182.
 WINGATE, DAVID, III. 608.
 WINTER, JOHN STRANGE, III. 851.
 Winterslow, by W. Hazlitt, III. 80, 84.
 Winter's Tale, by Shakespeare, I. 372.
 WINTHROP, THEODORE, III. 823.
 WINYET, NINIAN, I. 167, 230.
 WIREKER, NIGEL, I. 34.
 WISE, JOHN, III. 735.
 Wise Saws and Modern Instances, by Cooper, III. 376; by Haliburton, III. 726.
 Wish, by Cowley, I. 643, 644.
 Wishes to his supposed Mistress, by Crashaw, I. 680.
 WISTER, OWEN, III. 832.
 Wit and Humour, by Leigh Hunt, III. 148; by Sydney Smith, III. 157.
 Wit and Mirth, by D'Urfey, I. 782.
 Witch, by T. Middleton, I. 458, 461.
 Witch of Atlas, by Shelley, III. 110.
 Witch of Edmonton, by Dekker, Ford, Rowley, &c., I. 423, 478, 481.
 WITHER, GEORGE, I. 499, 731, 735.
 Witness, III. 285.
 Wits of Men, by Charleton, I. 744.
 Wit's Recreations, I. 560.
 Wit's Trenchmour, by N. Breton, I. 276.
 WODEHOUSE, PELHAM GRENVILLE, III. 848.
 WODROW, ROBERT, I. 830.
 WOLCOT, JOHN, II. 662.
 WOLFE, CHARLES, II. 788.
 Wolfe of Badenoch, by Dick Lauder, III. 305.
 WOLLSTONECRAFT, MARY, II. 706.
 WOLSELEY, LORD, III. 840.
 Wolsey, Life of, by Cavendish, I. 140; by Storer, I. 399.
 Woman, Essay on, by J. Wilkes, II. 516.
 Woman in White, by Wilkie Collins, III. 620.
 Woman killed with Kindness, by T. Heywood, I. 431.
 Woman of no Importance, by Wilde, III. 707.
 Woman who Did, by Grant Allen, III. 727.
 Women, by C. R. Maturin, II. 752.
 Women as they are, by Mrs Gore, III. 279.
 Women beware Women, by T. Middleton, I. 458, 459.
 Wonder, by Susannah Centlivre, II. 96.
 Wonder Book, by Hawthorne, III. 781.
 WOOD, ANTHONY, I. 749.
 WOOD, MRS HENRY, III. 520.
 WOODBERRY, GEORGE EDWARD, III. 855.
 Woodcraft, by W. G. Simms, III. 752.
 Woodlanders, by Thomas Hardy, III. 679.
 Wood Magic, by Richard Jefferies, III. 640.
 Woodman, by John Clare, III. 235.
 WOODS, MRS MARGARET L., III. 851.
 WOOD-SEYS, ROLAND ALEXANDER, III. 854.
 Wood Spirit, by Earnest Jones, III. 505.
 Wooing of Malkatoon, by Lewis Wallace, III. 823.
 WOOLF, VIRGINIA, III. 705, 720.
 WOOLMAN, JOHN, III. 736, 741.
 WOOLNER, THOMAS, III. 607.
 WOOLSEY, SARAH CHAUNCEY, III. 854.
 WOOLSTON, THOMAS, II. 164.
 Worcester Annals, I. 29.
 WORDSWORTH, DOROTHY, III. 29.
 WORDSWORTH, WILLIAM, III. 8, 11; Apostasy of, by W. Hale White, III. 687; book on, by Myers, III. 691.
 Wordsworth's Grave, by W. Watson, III. 708.
 World, by H. Vaughan, I. 684.
 World, ed. by Edward Moore, II. 400.
 World before the Flood, by Montgomery, II. 742.
 World, Discovery of a New, by J. Wilkins, I. 685.
 World, History of the, by Sir W. Raleigh, I. 305, 309; by Gillies, II. 637.
 World Mother, by W. W. Campbell, III. 728.
 World of William Clissold, by H. G. Wells, III. 713.
 Worldes Hydrographical Discription, by John Davis, I. 390.
 World's Desire, by Lang and Haggard, III. 703.
 Worlds, Plurality of, by Whewell, III. 108.
 WORSLEY, PHILIP STANLEY, III. 840.
 Worthies of England, by Fuller, I. 596, 600.
 WOTTON, SIR HENRY, I. 393.
 WRANGHAM, FRANCIS, II. 741.
 WRAXALL, SIR NATHANIEL WM., II. 738.
 Wrecker, by R. L. Stevenson, III. 699.
 Wreck of the Grosvenor, by Clark Russell, III. 691.
 WRIGHT, THOMAS, III. 411.
 WRONG, HAROLD V., III. 726.
 Wrong Paradise, by Andrew Lang, III. 692.
 Wuthering Heights, by Emily Bronte, III. 525, 526.
 WYATT, SIR THOMAS, I. 158.
 WYCHERLEY, WILLIAM, II. 65.
 WYCLIF, JOHN, I. 84; by Vaughan, III. 271.
 Wycliffe Bible, I. 86; Scots Wycliffe New Testament, I. 212.
 WYLIE, ELINOR HOYT, III. 856.
 WYSTOUN, ANDREW OF, I. 166, 171, 181.
 YALDEN, THOMAS, II. 200.
 Yarrow Visited, by Wordsworth, III. 13, 22; Revisited, by Wordsworth, III. 13, 16, 23; Unvisited, by Wordsworth, III. 13, 22.
 YATES, EDMUND, III. 635.
 Year, by Patmore, III. 603.
 Year-book, by William Hone, II. 760.
 Year of Shame, by Sir Wm. Watson, III. 706.
 Years, by Virginia Woolf, III. 705.
 Years After, by Landor, III. 142.
 Yeast, by Charles Kingsley, III. 513.
 YEATS, WILLIAM BUTLER, III. 709, 722.
 YELLOWFLUSH, C. J. (Thackeray), III. 455.
 Ye Mariners of England, by Campbell, II. 766, 768.
 Yemassee, by W. G. Simms, III. 752.
 Yeomen of the Guard, by W. S. Gilbert, III. 694.
 Yes and No, by Normanby, II. 783.
 YONGE, CHARLOTTE MARY, III. 535.
 York and Lancaster, by S. Daniel, I. 339, 340.
 York Plays, I. 110.
 Yorkshire Tragedy, I. 335.
 YOUNG, ARTHUR, II. 627.
 YOUNG, EDWARD, II. 260.
 YOUNG, EMILY HILDA, III. 852.
 Young and Old, by C. Kingsley, III. 517.
 Young Beichan, I. 524.
 Young Duke, by Lord Beaconsfield, III. 435.
 Young Fur Traders, by R. M. Ballantyne, III. 623.
 Young Ireland, by Sir C. G. Duffy, III. 583.
 Young Maxwell, by Allan Cunningham, III. 303.
 Young Tamlane, I. 528.
 Young Voyageurs, by Mayne Reid, III. 506.
 Youth and Age, by Coleridge, III. 62, 67.
 Zambesi, by Livingstone, III. 480.
 ZANGWILL, ISRAEL, III. 846.
 Zanoni, by Lord Lytton, III. 332.
 Zapolya, by Coleridge, III. 61, 63.
 Zeluco, by Dr John Moore, II. 618-620.
 Zincali, by Borrow, III. 431.
 Zion's Flowers, by Zachary Boyd, I. 514.
 Zohrab, the Hostage, by J. J. Morier, II. 783, 784.
 Zoonomai, by Erasmus Darwin, II. 573, 574.

DATE LOANED

Acc. No. _____

[illegible]

SRI PRATAP COLLEGE LIBRARY
SRINAGAR (Kashmir)

DATE LOANED

Class No. _____ Book No. _____

Acc. No. _____

This book may be kept for 14 days. An over - due charge will be levied at the rate of 10 Paise for each day the book is kept over - time.

[illegible]

SRI PRATAP COLLEGE LIBRARY
SRINAGAR (Kashmir)

DATE LOANED

Class No. _____ Book No. _____

Acc. No. _____

This book may be kept for 14 days. An over - due charge will be levied at the rate of 10 Paise for each day the book is kept over - time.

[illegible]

SRI PRATAP COLLEGE LIBRARY
SRINAGAR (Kashmir)

DATE LOANED

Class No. _____ Book No. _____

Acc. No. _____

This book may be kept for 14 days. An over - due charge will be levied at the rate of 10 Paise for each day the book is kept over - time.

[illegible]

SRI PRATAP COLLEGE LIBRARY
SRINAGAR (Kashmir)

DATE LOANED

Class No. _____ Book No. _____

Acc. No. _____

This book may be kept for 14 days. An over - due charge will be levied at the rate of 10 Paise for each day the book is kept over - time.

[illegible]

SRI PRATAP COLLEGE LIBRARY
SRINAGAR (Kashmir)

DATE LOANED

Class No. _____ Book No. _____

Acc. No. _____

This book may be kept for 14 days. An over - due charge will be levied at the rate of 10 Paise for each day the book is kept over - time.

[illegible]